YELLOW CAR STRIKE DEFEATED NOW, OFFICIALS SAY.

Wickersham Makes Strong Plea for Ratification.

CAN AMEND COVENANT.

Provision is Made for Ratification.

Former Attorney - General Draws a Parallel Between League and Federation.

Urges Senate to Avert Reproach of Depriving World of its Hope for Peace.

"Let the Senate ratify the peace treaty and thus avert from America the reproach of depriving the world of its great hope and radiant promise of a world allied for the preservation of peace."

This is the keynote of a statement issued today by George W. Wickersham, Republican, former Attorney-General of the United States. The statement is issued through the League to Enforce Peace, of which former President Taft is the president.

BY GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM,
Former United States Attorney-General.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union of the American States, adopted by Congress, November 15, 1777, and ratified by the thirteen States between that date and March, 1781, were designed to establish a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defense, the security of their liberties and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to, or attacks made upon them or any of them on account of religion, sovereignty, trade or any other pretense whatever."

The Confederation was designed to be perpetual and it was provided that no alteration should be made in any of the articles unless agreed to in a Congress of the United States and afterward confirmed by the legislatures of every State.

CONSTITUTION IS WISER.

The framers of the Constitution more wisely provided for its amendment by vote of two-thirds of each House of Congress, ratified by the legislatures or by conventions in three-fourths of the States. This provision secured the ratification of the Constitution itself by the number of States requisite to its adoption.

In answer to the criticism of the opponents of the Constitution and especially to that argument which they employed with greatest effect, namely, that the Constitution did not contain a bill of rights, protecting the liberties of the States and the people, the advocates of the measure pointed out the provision for amendment and urged that the instrument be first ratified and afterwards amended in accordance with the machinery which it provided.

AMENDMENTS ARE MADE.

The concurrence of some of the States, including Massachusetts and New York, was only secured through promises by friends of the measure

TROOPS QUELL IRISH RIOTS

Nationalists and Unionists Clash but No Casualties Are Reported.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

QUEENSTOWN, Aug. 16.—A party of men today fired rifles on Rocky Island, in the harbor behind Haulbowline Island. The military on Rocky Island replied with machine guns. The firing continued for some time. It is unknown whether there were any casualties.

soldiers used in suppressing riots between Nationalists and Unionists in Londonderry last night and early today were withdrawn at four o'clock this morning.

A number of rioters were injured during charges by the police and soldiers. A police inspector was knocked down and kicked severely during a baton charge.

Troops were called after rioting and looting occurred in this city. They charged on mobs but did not fire any shots. The soldiers, however, were met with a volley of stones when they attempted to break up a nationalist demonstration. The monetary loss from looting is estimated thousands of pounds by police authorities.

The trouble started when nationalists set fire to a number of tar barrels which had been collected beneath an arch over which was displayed a picture of Edward De Valera, president of the Irish republic, and sang the "Soldiers' Song." Unionists responded by singing the national anthem.

One force of troops kept the crowds apart while other detachments attempted to clear the streets, charging upon the throngs repeatedly.

Windows were smashed and shops were looted and the city was in darkness the entire night.

Although several revolver shots were heard during the rioting, no report of any one's having been wounded has been received. The troops declare that none of them fired any shots and that when they drove back the crowds, they advanced with their bayonets raised in the air.

TEN INJURED AT LISBURN.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BELFAST, Aug. 16.—Ten Nationalist excursionists were injured during a fight Friday with Orangemen at Lisburn, County Down. Serious rioting also occurred at Coal Island, County Tyrone.

The trouble at Lisburn took place after the nationalists had attended a "Lady day" celebration at Louth.

In the riot at Coal Island several policemen and military officers were injured severely.

PUBLIC DOMAIN MEET BEGINS IN SALT LAKE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 16.—Five State Governors, the first to arrive for the conference of Stat executives here, held an informal session late today to discuss the project of having the unreserved public domain in the several States ceded to them by the Federal government. Because of the small number of western Governors present further discussion of the project was postponed until Monday when a larger number of representatives of States interested will be present.

Those present today were Gov. Thomas E. Campbell of Arizona; Gov. O. A. Larrazolo of New Mexico; Gov. Robert D. Carey of Wyoming; Gov. J. A. Burnquist of Minnesota; Gov. J. B. A. Robertson of Oklahoma and Gov. Simon Bamberger of Utah.

SEIZE VAST FOOD HOARDS IN NATION-WIDE CRUSADE

Eggs Confiscated at San Diego Valued at $300,000; Detroit Warehouses Raided.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

Warning was given today by representatives of farmers' organizations testifying before the House and Senate agriculture committees that unless present disturbed conditions resulting from profiteering "in goods and wages" and strikes were settled soon, the country would face a far worse situation from the high cost of living next year than at present.

The House and Senate committees are considering amendments to the food control act designed to enable the Department of Justice to wage a more active campaign to prevent hoarding and profiteering. The committees hope to act finally on the amendments next week and rush the legislation through Congress

Seizure of foodstuffs held in cold storage was continued today by federal agents in several cities. Further seizures under libel warrants next week and special grand juries were summoned in several States to hear evidence in case of alleged hoarding and profiteering.

Goods taken over today by the government included 16,500,000 eggs at St. Louis; 7,500,000 eggs and 300,000 pounds of butter at Detroit and large quantities of food at San Diego, Cal.

Announcement was made by the Postoffice Department that the postage rate on surplus army food, sale of which through the parcel-post system will begin Monday, would be the same to persons living beyond the first zone from the supply centers as those living in the first zone.

Atty.-Gen. Palmer accepted an invitation to meet with the fair-price board of New York there Monday night.

DETROIT (Mich.) Aug. 16.—In the second raid today on food supplies stored in the Detroit Refrigerating Company's plant here, agents of the Department of Justice today seized 7,404,000 eggs and approximately 300,000 pounds of butter.

United States District Attorney John E. Kinnane yesterday seized 5,100,000 eggs in the Detroit Refrigerating Company's plant and announced that it was only the first of a series of seizures to be made here. The action was taken under the Lever food-control law, and Mr. Kinnane asked the Federal court here to have the stocks placed on the market August 25.

Whether any prosecution would be attempted on charges of hoarding, Federal officials would not say. The purpose of the government at this time, Mr. Kinnane said, was to force out of cold storage all foodstuffs held in unreasonable amounts.

Agents of the investigation branch here of the Department of Justice said that in one cold storage plant visited today, a frozen hog was found which they were told had been in storage twenty-five years.

The officials declared that while they believed that if the hog really had been held for that length of time, it was through an oversight, they intend to investigate further next week.

SEIZURE IN SAN DIEGO.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, Aug. 16.—Butter, eggs and cheese in immense quantities stored here in the San Diego Ice and Cold Storage Company's warehouses were seized today at noon by Federal authorities, who charge the owners of the stocks with hoarding of food.

The stocks total 120,428 pounds of butter, 99,067 pounds of cheese and 14,000 cases of eggs. They are owned as follows:

Swift & Co., 45,000 pounds of butter.

P. M. Dairy, 74,000 pounds of butter.

P. M. Dairy, 34,000 pounds of cheese.

Swift & Co., 43,000 pounds of cheese.

Armour & Co., 21,000 pounds of cheese.

Armour & Co., 7081 cases of eggs.

P. M. Dairy, 3900 cases of eggs.

Swift & Co., 725 cases of eggs.

Poultry Producers' Association of San Diego, 456 cases of eggs.

Scattered small owners, 2000 cases eggs.

The combined estimated cost of the goods seized is $300,000.

United States Attorney Robert O'Connor came here yesterday to investigate the matter, accompanied by Assistant Attorney T. F. Greene, of Los Angeles. Late yesterday afternoon Attorney O'Connor had Deputy United States Marshal W. C. Carse served detention papers on the storage house to prevent any of the goods from being removed. This morning warrants arrived from headquarters and were taken by Carse, who served the papers to make the seizure. Through a technical error the papers could not be served this morning until corrected and the seizure was not made until noon.

Attorney O'Connor returned to Los Angeles this afternoon, but said he would return Monday for an investigation and a meeting with the owners of the food.

At a hearing they will be allowed to offer evidence to show they are not hoarding food.

O'Connor stated he believed the food was being hoarded from the fact that in the matter of eggs there were about 3000 cases more than this time last year in storage. He believed there were moer stored than necessary for the consumption by the people here.

Charles O. Richards, president of the San Diego Cold Storage Company, state this afternoon there is absolutely no hoarding of food here in the storage house.

"There is no more food here than the ordinary business demands," he said. "This year San Diego producers furnished enough eggs for the supply, for the first time. Last year it was necessary to ship from the north eighteen cars of eggs for the demand. It is true we have 14,000 cases of eggs stored here, but 7000 belong to Armour & Co., of Los Angeles and are stored here to be shipped later to Imperial Valley and Arizona when the San Diego and Arizona railroad is finished.

"Furthermore, all butter, eggs and cheese stored here are contract goods, sold by contract to grocers, bakers and others for the supply. Besides supplies had to be placed for Camp Kearny which we expected to be continued."

Both the cheese and butter supplies are short, according to Richards and only the egg supply is sufficient. The egg supply must last until February 1, and cheese and butter until June, according to Richards.

If the goods seized today are held two weeks and the thing is done all over the country, Richards stated that there would be no eggs, butter or cheese for the housewife, with all supplies tied up.

All afternoon after the seizure had been made, dealers owning the supplies called up the storage company attempting to secure stock from the storage house to supply demands, he said.

SAYS ROOSEVELT ENSLAVED KOREA

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16. — Prof. Homer B. Hulbert, who went to Korea for the State Department in 1882 and who later acted as an envoy for the Korean government for a number of years, filed with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today an extensive recital charging Japanese brutalities in Korea as bearing on the treaty provision giving German rights in Shantung to Japan. He declared Japanese rule in Korea had become unbearable and that unless the Koreans were made free "the world must look on and see the rapid extinction of a nation of 18,000,000 people."

Prof. Hulbert said that in 1905 he delivered to the State Department after several attempts to get a hearing, a letter from the Emperor of Korea bitterly protesting against a Japanese protectorate in Korea, and that Elihu Root, then Secretary of State, later wrote that the Emperor's letter was laid before President Roosevelt. Although he was the accredited representative of the Emperor, he said, he was refused an opportunity to see the President.

"But on the day before I was admitted at the State Department," the statement continued, "the administration without a word to the Emperor or government of Korea or to the Korean Legation and knowing well the contents of the undelivered letter accepted Japan's unsupported statement that it was all satisfactory to the Korean government and people."

Prof. Hulbert said he also gave to the State Department a cablegram from the Emperor, declaring the protectorate had been "extorted at the point of the sword and therefore is null and void."

FIRED OUT OF MEXICO.

British Official is to be Deported.

Carranza Vents Spleen Against England for Failure to Secure Recognition.

Expulsion is Brought to Attention of Lansing; Explanation is Promised.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—More friction between Great Britain and Mexico appeared today to complicate the Mexican situation.

Britain's last remaining representative in the Mexican capital—William Cummings, in charge of the archives of the legation there—has been ordered from the country by mandate of Carranza.

The action amounts to the British representative's practical deportation.

Great Britain, never having recognized the Carranza regime, has had no Minister in Mexico City since Sir Lionel Carden. The charge d'affaires, Thomas Hohler, was withdrawn some time ago and Cummings was left as charge d'archives, in charge of the legation records and acting as a medium of communication for his government, although without official authority.

In a strict sense Cummings had no diplomatic standing, although he has delivered communications from the British government protesting against mistreatment of British subjects and interests.

WITHOUT REPRESENTATIVES.

Now, wholly without representatives in Mexico City, England probably will rely on France or the United States to represent her.

At the same time, dispatches telling of Carranza's decision to inform the Mexican Congress at its opening September 1, "fully as to the state of the relations with the governments of the United States and England," were received here and attracted considerable attention.

While not specifically stated, it was understood that Carranza's action resulted from the statement recently made in the House of Commons by the British Undersecretary of State that Great Britain had not recognized the Carranza government and would not do so until there was some guarantee that lives and property of British citizens in Mexico would be protected by the Mexican government.

Charge Lindsay of the British Embassy brought the matter to the attention of Secretary Lansing today. It is understood that there is nothing to be done except acquiesce in the decree of expulsion as Mr. Cummings has no official status in the diplomatic sense.

It is believed in official quarters, however, that the incident is certain to have a marked effect on the policy which the British government will follow toward Mexico.

Mr. Cummings had been for many years a resident of Mexico and numbered Carranza himself among his personal friends. Thus he was able in a personal way to intercede often with the Mexican President to secure protection for British citizens when they were endangered by the revolutionary movement.

TO EXPLAIN TO CONGRESS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

EL PASO (Tex.) Aug. 16.—An official news bulletin received at the Mexican general consulate here today from Mexico City stated President Carranza will present to the Mexican Congress his annual message on September 1 and would than "inform Congress fully as to the state of relations with the governments of the United States and England."

The bulletin also stated Gen. Fortunato Zuazua, commander of troops in the State of Tamaulipas, was sending "well trained troops" to all parts of the State where foreigners live "with a view of amply protecting them."

Tamaulipas contains many of the Tampico district oil wells.

The news bulletin added that the Mexican Senate had resolved to study and act promptly on Article XXVII of the constitution, which had caused protests from the foreign oil companies to be filed. "The Senate seems to be generally of the opinion that a correct and just interpretation of this article will greatly tend to produce a better understanding and good feeling towards Mexico," the bulletin stated.

The Supreme Court will hand down its decision on the writes sued out by the oil companies between now and September 5, according to the bulletin.

TRANSPORTATION CHIEFS SEE SPEEDY VICTORY.

Pacific Electric Service Half Normal and Los Angeles Railway Three-Fourths—Better Today.

With 1500 Pacific Electric and 700 Los Angeles Railway employees out on strike—a total well under 50 per cent. of the total number of men employed—officials of the two transportation companies last night declared that the public may feel assured of prompt restoration of full and adequate service on all lines.

The Los Angeles Railway (yellow cars) strike situation as given out last night by the company officials was as follows:

The strike is smashed.

Car service was stopped at 8:30 o'clock last night on all lines solely in the interest of public safety, because the loyal men who were running the cars were being molested, jeered at and interfered with by crowds of strikers and the company did not desire to take the responsibility for possibly dangerous demonstrations which might increase Saturday night.

Car service will be resumed on all lines at an early hour this morning and service will be normal throughout the day.

Officials of both the Pacific Electric and Los Angeles Railways announced last night that service will again be discontinued this evening for the remainder of the night, for the same reasons. The P. E. will stop as 8 o'clock and he yellow cars at 8:30. It is hoped that will not be necessary after this. In the meantime the public is urged to so arrange its movements as not to depend on the car service after 8:30 p.m. today. A big crowd last night found itself without means to get home and difficult situations arose, as related elsewhere in this issue.

Car service increased yesterday from 55 per cent. of normal at 9 o'clock, and 62 per cent. at 11 o'clock, to 75 per cent. during the evening rush hours from 4:30 o'clock to 5:30 o'clock.

Service was maintained on all but the West Eighth street, Cummings, Indiana and South Main street line, the passengers for which were taken care of on other lines.

The company had not finished its tabulation of the exact number of men who struck, but the officials believe that the number was between 600 and 800, and probably near the smaller figure.

Many members of the union refused to strike.

General Manager G. H. Kuhrts declared that he is thoroughly pleased with the showing of loyalty made by the majority of the employees of the company who refused to obey the orders of radical union leaders and strike.

The officials said that today the public will not know that there is a strike on, so far as the number of cars running, and that daily normal service should be established before the middle of next week.

ON THE PACIFIC ELECTRIC.

Beach and interurban car service on the Pacific Electric lines as good, if not better, than yesterday's service was promised for today by officials of the company last night. This statement was issued by the Pacific Electric officials following a careful survey of yesterday's traffic which they declared was 80 per cent. normal on all lines excepting the southern division, which was said to be normal.

No lines have been discontinued. Though the red cars stopped running at 8 o'clock last night, as a precautionary measure, they will resume their runs at an early hour this morning, permitting patrons to reach the beaches and outlying cities with ease. Long Beach cars, as usual, ran at twenty-minute intervals. Other cars on the southern division ran on schedule time. Venice Short Line cars ran at thirty-minute intervals throughout the day and Hollywood cars left the Hill Street Station every eight minutes.

About 1500 employees of the Pacific Electric are out on strike. This is half of the total number of men affected. Their places are being rapidly filled by new men who are being taken into the company as permanent employees.

Evidence is now being secured against the members of the Pacific Electric strike committee which will be used in causing their arrest for violation of the Federal injunction which hangs over their heads, according to a statement made last night by officials of the Pacific Electric Railway lines.

Attorney Frank Karr, general counsel for the railway company, declared that the strike committeemen are now in contempt of court in the way hey are conducting the strike.

"The methods being used," said Mr. Karr, "prove that the strike committeemen are unquestionably violating the Federal injunction and as soon as our evidence is concrete enough we will proceed to take action."

Included in the list of men who are accused of violating the Federal injunction is F. L. McDowell, general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of the Pacific District, who arrived in Los Angeles shortly before the strike was called and who is said to be engineering the strike.

"The strike is not a union matter at all," said Attorney Karr. "The demands presented to the company are entirely a question of wages and yet the high officers of the steam line brotherhoods of Federal brotherhoods are here helping direct this strike and directing the actions of the men.

"These brotherhood officers are going into the yards of the Federal railroads and telling them not to put cars on the Pacific Electric interchange and not to take cars from the Pacific Electric interchange. One of these officers went to San Pedro yesterday and indicated and stated that they would not handle vessel that would dock at the Pacific Coast Steamship dock at Fifth street in San Pedro and transferred to any Pacific Electric car. In other words, that boat cannot go to any other port and hand its cargo to any other road and then to the Pacific Electric Railway.

SYMPATHETIC STRIKE.

"As far as Southern California is concerned, a sympathetic strike on the behalf of trainmen is now in effect, although not called officially. If this plan of the railroad brotherhoods is carried out it means that the steam roads will not handle sugar from the refineries or oranges from the packing-houses or perishables in and out of the city that have heretofore been handled by the Pacific Electric. It means that thousands of cars of foodstuffs will perish."

The railway officials stated that McDowell had already instructed the

HALTS RUMANIA'S LOOTING

Peace Conference Declares Reparation by Hungary is Allies' Affair.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIS, Friday, August 15.—Rumania will not be permitted to strip Hungary, according to the draft of the supreme council reply to the last note from Bucharest, which was completed at today's meeting of the council. The Bucharest government is informed that the fixing of the amount of reparation to be made by Hungary, as well as its distribution, is a matter under control of the Allied and associated powers and that, until final decision is reached, all war, railway and agricultural material now in Hungary and subject to distribution will be under the common administration of the Allied Powers.

The text of the reply follows:

"The Peace Conference without reverting to a certain number of points which call for correction, on its part notes with satisfaction the Rumanian declaration that it intends to work in agreement with the policy which the conference adopts in Hungary. It interprets this declaration as an indication that Rumania, as a state participating in the Peace Conference, intends to conform to the decisions of the conference communicated through the military mission delegated to Budapest by the supreme council.

CURB INTERFERENCE.

"Directions sent three times by the conference to the mission of Allied generals and communicated to Bucharest have defined explicitly and in detail the present policies of the Allied powers toward Hungary, the disarmament of Hungarian troops, the maintenance of order with the smallest possible number of foreign troops, the revictualling of Hungary and the abstention from all interference in the internal politics of Hungary, preserving for that country a free expression of the national will.

"The Supreme Council insists on the fact that final recovery of war, railway or agricultural material or of cattle, etc., cannot occur at present. According to the principles of the Peace Conference accepted by all the Allies and applied in particular in the treaty of peace with Germany it is the right of the assembly of the Allied and associated powers alone to fix the reparation to be made by Hungary and determine upon its distribution among interested states. Neither the Rumanian army nor the Rumanian government has the right itself to fix Rumania's share, assets of all kinds belonging to Hungary being a pledge held by the Allied powers in common."

PLEA FOR PACT BY WICKERSHAM

Tells Senate Covenant may be Amended Later.

Opponents to Our Constitution Used Same Talk.

Framers in Paris Wisely Allow for Growth.

to take early steps to procure the adoption as amendments of provisions which should remove many of the most strongly urged objections to the Constitution.

These promises were redeemed in the First Congress, which adopted and submitted to the States for ratification twelve proposed amendments, ten of which were ratified by the States between November 20, 1789, and December 15, 1791, thus becoming the first ten amendments to the Constitution, and forming what may be termed its bill of rights.

The delegates to the Peace Conference in Paris followed the example of the framers of the Constitution of the United States by incorporating into the covenant of the League of Nations provision for its amendment by vote of the members of the league, whose representatives compose the council, now nine in number, and by a majority of the members whose representatives compose the Assembly.

Recognizing that, while the Constitution of the United States was adopted to form a more perfect and perpetual union of the States, and has resulted in the creation of a nation, the covenant of Paris proposed merely a league of sovereign nations, from which any member might withdraw at will. It also was provided that no amendment should bind any dissenting member, but one who should not accept an amendment duly adopted should cease to be a member of the league.

OPPOSITION OVERCOME.

The opposition to the Constitution of the United States finally crystallized into the objection that it failed to provide a bill of rights safeguarding the fundamental guarantees of life, liberty and property against abuse of powers by the new government.

"But the friends of the Constitution," as Justice Harlan once wrote, "believing that the failure to accept it would destroy all hope for permanent union among the people of the original States, and following the advice of Washington, who was the leader of the constitutional forces, met this objection by showing that, when the Constitution had been accepted by the requisite number of States and thereby become the supreme law of the land, such amendments could be adopted as would relieve the apprehensions of those who deemed it necessary by express provisions to guard against the infringement by the agencies of the general government of any of the essential rights of American freemen."

SIMILAR SITUATION.

The present situation of the peace treaty presents a similar danger and a like avenue of escape.

The failure to accept the peace covenant would destroy the most practical plan for the preservation of the world's peace ever submitted to the acceptance of the nations. It is a plan for the alliance of the powers for purposes which peculiarly involve the application of principles of American origin and growth; the peaceful settlement of international disputes by arbitration or friendly council; agreements for the limitation of armaments designed to end the hideous competition of nations in preparations which inevitably must end either in war or financial ruin; the government of imperfectly developed peoples in their own interest, under the jurisdiction of the Allied powers, instead of their exploitation for the selfish ends of controlling nations; the establishment of a permanent machinery for the exchange of opinions and the taking of council concerning matters of import to two or more nations.

These have been advocated by America from time of the Jay treaty to the second Hague conference.

AVOID ENCROACHMENTS.

Very carefully has the covenant of Paris avoided undue encroachment upon the sovereignty of any of the States, which may become members of the league. Obviously, those who framed its provisions recognized that it must be a great experiment. Therefore, they provided means of growth through amendment and means of retirement in the event of failure.

The objections made by members of the Senate—for objection almost exclusively has originated among and has been propaganted by Senators—aside from that character of opposition which is unalterably opposed to the entire project and will have none of it, however, framed finally has come down to about half a dozen points which it has been sought to express in reservations not amounting to a conditional ratification of the treaty which would require resubmission to Germany and the other powers which should have ratified it.

Has not the time come for action inspired by the wisdom and the example of the framers and those who promoted the Constitution of the United States? Let the Senate ratify the treaty, and thus avert from America the reproach of depriving the world of the great hope, the radiant promise of a world allied for the preservation of peace.

Then let those measures for the improvement of the instrument, for the better safeguarding of the national tradition and institutions of America be formulated by the Senate, or by both houses of Congress, and transmitted to the American representatives in the assembly and in the council of the League of Nations, with instructions to present and press them upon assembly and council for adoption as amendments to the covenant.

The prestige and power of America are so great that it scarcely can be doubted that any amendments thus recommended would fail of adoption, save for demonstrably convincing reasons. This course of action would end the period of doubt and uncertainty created by our continued inaction. It would be a great step forward in the readjustment of the nations of the earth to conditions of peace and would leave our national Legislature free to devote all of its time and thought and energy to the consideration of the many problems of domestic concern that so imperatively cry out for its attention.

Victim of Murder or Accidental Death?

[Copyright, 1919 by Keystone View Company of New Jersey.]

Miss Mabel Harris,

Whose fiance is held, accused of her slaying.

POMPTON LAKES (N. J.) Aug. 16.—(Exclusive Dispatch.) What will be the defense Lester Decker will offer when he goes on trial at the September term of the Supreme Court for the alleged murder of his fiancee, Miss Mabel Harris? This is the question that the prosecution is wondering about. Decker, at his preliminary hearing today, offered no inkling of his defense, simply falling back on his constitutional right of waiving any extended examination.

When Decker returned from a canoeing trip that fatal Sunday night and announced that his frail craft had shot over the dam and his sweetheart had drowned, his statement was not questioned and he received the town's sympathy. But later the girl's body was found and the condition of her throat and clothing aroused suspicion. Decker's arrest followed.

The clothing of Miss Harris was badly torn, as though in a struggle. An undergarment had been twisted about her head and throat. One stocking was in folds about the ankle, but the other was fastened securely by the garter. The authorities decided that if she drowned in that wild rush over the dam there was not time for a struggle which would cause such a condition of her clothing. There are alleged to be damaging proofs of a struggle in a boathouse a mile from the dam, and the theory of the prosecution is that Mabel Harris died in defending her honor from the man to whom she had plighted her troth. The finger of the law has been pointed to the man she was to have married as the alleged slayer. Decker has made no statement, except the first, which declared the drowning an accident. No water was found in the girl's lungs.

FIGHT IS ON TO GET TREATY OUT

Administration Effort is to Put it Before Senate.

Opponents to Unreserved Ratification Claim Gain.

New Set of Reservations by Lodge Gain in Favor.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—As a sequel to the White House conference yesterday between President Wilson and Senator Hitchcock, administration leader in the Senate treaty fight, it became apparent today the administration forces would center their present effort on bringing the treaty out of committee and defeating any textual amendments, leaving in the background any negotiations relative to final ratification with reservations.

Meantime, Republican Senators declared one result of the negotiations of the last few days, and of Senator Hitchcock's statements after he left the President, had been to stiffen resistance to any attempt at unreserved ratification and to increase the determination of those who want the treaty amended outright. They asserted yesterday's poll had shown opposition to the Shantung provision growing stronger in the face of the explanatory statements from Tokio and from the White House.

TREND OF FIGHT INDICATED.

The reported position of the President that any textual amendments would send the treaty back for renegotiation with Germany without any military force to compel acceptance of the American demands, was taken as largely forecasting the trend of the amendment fight. It was understood that feature would be emphasized by Senator Hitchcock in a speech he is expected to make next week in the Senate.

The fact that Senator Hitchcock did not quote the President as standing uncompromisingly against reservations for the same reason was pointed out as significant by some of the group of Republicans, who, under the lead of Senator McNary, Republican, Oregon, have agreed on a set of reservations. They declared all the elements of the situation bore out this claim of Wednesday that they had information insuring assent to their programme.

Among the group there was some favorable comment during the day on the new set of reservations shown to Republican Senators by Republican Leader Lodge. In the same quarter it was pointed out that should he definitely give his support to a reservation programme acceptable to a large number of Senators, the logical outcome might be a draft of reservations by him which would become the rallying point of the Republican reservation forces.

Republicans assert the only possible outcome, if reservations are to be adopted in place of textual amendments, will be agreement on the draft drawn by Mr. Lodge or some other Senator which must be accepted by the Democrats. The only open question, they declare, is how drastic the reservations are to be.

DEMOCRATS STAND PAT.

The Democratic leaders, however, maintained there had been no change in their stand for unreserved ratification and in some quarters the outcome of the conference between the President and Senator Hitchcock was interpreted to mean that Mr. Wilson would fight uncompromisingly against both amendments and reservations. It was inferred by some Senators in that connection that the President had refused to countenance the negotiations looking to reservation which have been conducted by some Democrats.

The McNary group of Republicans did not accept that view of the situation, however, pointing out that Senator Hitchcock had said after the conference that the administration would cross the reservation bridge when it came to it.

Considerable interest was aroused by a statement of Mr. Hitchcock that the President had laughingly suggested sending Senators Lodge and Knox to negotiate any future treaty with Germany should the present one fail through being amended. Republican members of the Foreign Relations Committee who are fighting for amendments said they welcomed the suggestion as a "challenge."

The amendment proposal which the leaders on both sides expect to develop the greatest strength in the Senate contemplates striking from the treaty the provisions giving Japan control in the Chinese province of Shantung. Not only did yesterday's poll show an increase in the number who oppose the provision, the Republicans asserted, but several Senators gave that as their only reason for not accepting the reservation programme which covers only provisions in the League of Nations covenant.

Advocates of the Shantung amendment declare Senator Lodge will line up with them on the proposal. They also assert he will support several other textual amendments in the committee, but the reservation group are inclined to think he will not.

Dives to Earth with Women Passengers' Clothes on Fire; Averts Fall.

With the clothing of his passengers in flames, the result of an engine back-fire, Aviator Howard Patterson late yesterday afternoon averted a possible fall and probably saved the lives of two women by volplaning from a height of 600 feet to a landing at the Ince Field, Venice.

The passengers—Mrs. Leo J. Trost and Mrs. E. H. Green, both of El Paso, Tex., summer beach visitors residing at Kensington Court, Santa Monica—were severely burned on the legs and body and were taken to St. Catherine's Hospital, Santa Monica, where their condition was reported serious but not critical.

It was their first airplane flight.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—A pair of shoes, size 10, were purchased today by John J. Sullivan, president of the Builders' and Traders' Exchange, for J. Ogden Armour, president of Armour & Co. Mr. Sullivan said that Mr. Armour also would get the suits of clothes, shirts, neckties and underwear he asked for in a letter to the exchange, made public last night. Footgear also was purchased for Roger C. Sullivan, H. H. Merrick and Julius Rosenwald, it was said.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—Touched by the "appeal" of J. Ogden Armour for wearing apparel, Bernard Gruenstein of this city tonight announced he had sent the millionaire packer a pair of socks.

[The offer of the pair of shoes, made when Armour said high prices had forced him to have his old ones resoled, was replied to by the packing king and he mentioned that this was the year for him to buy a new overcoat and that a complete wardrobe would not be spurned. Roger C. Sullivan recently visited Santa Barbara, wearing patched and half-soled shoes, and explained that he could not afford to buy new ones.]

STAGE HANDS GO TO ACTORS' AID.

With Musicians are Out on a Sympathetic Strike.

Peace Parleys Proceed with Hopeful Promises.

"Mabel's Room" Crowd Gums Game in Chicago.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The stage hands and musicians were called out following a conference of Joe Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians and Charles C. Shay, president of the International Alliance of Theater and Stage Employees.

Coming on Broadway's busiest night, when theater-goers, fearing the effect of the threatened subway and elevated strike, were determined to make the most of their last opportunity to visit the Rialto, the walkout of additional forces caused a flurry of excitement to spread through stageland. The news was received with cheers at Equity headquarters.

The first desertion occurred at the Knickerbocker and Century theaters. It was followed almost immediately by another at the Cohan and Harris playhouse.

Century roof garden stage hands and musicians were the next to join the ranks of the strikers, bringing the number of houses closed to fifteen, three more than last night.

R. B. Mahony and Benjamin Squires, said to have been named by Secretary of Labor Wilson to act as conciliators, arrived today and conferred with Paul Turner, attorney for the actors.

An attempt by government officials to end the actors' strike it is now understood, is to be made here. An unconfirmed report received from Washington says that Benjamin Squires and R. B. Mahany, commissioner appointed by William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, were on their way here to confer with both actors and managers.

Both sides deny that they have asked for government interference.

A possible settlement of the actors' strike which in the past ten days has all but paralyzed the theaters in New York, is believed to be in sight. The Producing Managers' Association following a conference with a committee of actors, headed by E. H. Sothern, Leo Ditrichstein and Mrs. Fiske announced, through Arthur Hopkins, that it was willing to issue a form of contract embodying everything for which the actors are now fighting except formal recognition of the A. E. A. It is planned to carry the proposals of the managers directly to the A. E. A.

PAY FOR EXTRA SHOWS.

Mr. Hopkins, discussing the form of contract which the managers were willing to issue, said that it would contain the eight performance clause, with provision for extra payment for all matinees. This is the demand for which the actors originally went to war. It would contain also, Mr. Hopkins said, a clause limiting rehearsals for musical shows to four weeks on which the Equity has been insisting on behalf of its chorus branch.

In regard to arbitration, which is certain to be the most difficult point to settle, Mr. Hopkins said that the managers proposed that a permanent arbitration committee be appointed, to consist of three managers, appointed by the managers, and three actors appointed by the actors, and a seventh neutral member. It was hoped, he said, to persuade a Supreme Court justice to act as the neutral. So far as he knew he said, the managers would have no objection to the actors on the committee being appointed by the A.E.A., but said that the association, as such, must not figure.

In response to the request of many of the actors against whom suit was brought by the Shuberts several days ago, Samuel Untermyer today wrote two letters to Paul D. Turner, counsel for the A.E.A. in which he undertook the defense of the actors and discussed at length the present situation between the actors and the managers.

COUNSEL GIVES SERVICES.

Mr. Untermyer, after giving it as his opinion that the actors were in the right, said that he would undertake to defend the suits only on the condition that he should receive no compensation. "I regard the principle involved as of the highest public importance," he wrote, "and am willing to deal with it only in the light of a public service."

Mr. Untermyer said he had reached his conclusion despite the fact that he "personally owns and represents a one-half interest in the Shubert and Booth Theater properties, and a one-third interest in the Forty-fourth-street Theater property."

Mr. Untermyer declared that the managers had abrogated the contracts in refusing to arbitrate and referred to the attitude of the managers as "arrogant and unjustified." A victory for the managers he declared, would "mark a long step backward in the struggle of organized labor."

Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., through Mortimer Fishel, his attorney, today served papers on four of the striking Follies players in suits for $250,000 each. Those served were Eddie Cantor, Johnny Pooley, Gus Van and Joe Schenck.

FACE CONTEMPT CHARGE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Another act in "to be or not to be" (embalmed strikers) the drama now engrossing the attention of impresarios of the Chicago's rialto, was recorded today in the court of Judge Charles M. Walter, the Bay of Victory being placed upon the brows of the impresarios.

As prologue it may be stated that the cast in "Up in Mabel's Room" had the night before issued a pronunciamento, declaring fealty to the banner of the new he-Joan of Arc, Edward Nockels, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Nockels, asked to assume leadership of the Thespian uprising, had on Friday night issued orders for an immediate strike. The cast of "Up in Mabel's Room" had started to obey instanter, then, under suasion of counsel for the managers, had hesitated, finally agreed to appear for one more performance, but had intimated there would be none today.

STAY IN "MABEL'S ROOM."

Wherefore, J. J. Rosenthal, director of the A. H. Woods Theater, where "Up in Mabel's Room" is playing, appeared before Judge Walker yesterday morning and petitioned for an injunction to restrain the actors from striking. He was represented by Attorney Levy Mayer.

Judge Walker immediately communicated with Master in Chancery Sigmund Zeisler and ordered him to proceed with the hearing on the injunction petitions. In addition he ordered the agreement entered into last Wednesday between attorneys for both factions, to hold the situation in status quo until a court ruling should be rendered, be made a part of the court record.

This action renders the actors who go out on strike subject to contempt proceedings. Ada Meade and Ann Warrington, "angel faces" at the Colonial, who walked out Friday night, will have to return to work or face the alternative of being summoned to answer charges of contempt.

In the hearing before Judge Walker, Attorney Levy H. Fuller, counsel for the striking actors, intimated the "situation had become embarrassing because of interference of Nockels."

"THE THIRD PARTY."

"It is clearly a case of a third party intruding," said Attorney Mayer.

J. J. Rosenthal, director of the A. H. Woods Theater, said:

"The cast of 'Up In Mabel's Room' is bound first by its contracts, and second, by the agreement made by Attorney Fuller to keep the show going. It would mean a deficit of $5000 to darken the house today, and I'm not going to stand for the deficit.

"Mr. Fuller made an agreement for the actors that they would play pending a decision in the injunction proceedings. They must abide by that agreement. As for Nockels, why I don't recognize him at all. He simply hasn't any business in the case."

Throughout the loop theater owners continued selling tickets for shows yesterday, but admitted the acors could seriously obstruct the even tenor of the way in the box office by refusing to appear.

Food advances were of third importance. Figures for the period, December, 1917, to June, 1919, show general average increases of about 20 per cent.

ARMY FOODS BY MAIL.

Zone postal rates in so far as they would apply to shipments of surplus army foods, sale of which begins Monday, were in effect suspended today by the Postoffice Department.

Official announcement was made that circular letters had been sent all postmasters directing that they collect only postage for the first zone, no matter what the distance the foodstuffs would have to be shipped.

The difference will be made up by the War Department, which on shipments to third and fourth zones will deduct from the price charged for orders a sum sufficient to make up the postage.

Postmasters were requested by the Postoffice Department to accept newspaper dispatches as authorization for suspension of the zone rates in regard to the army food, adding that official authorization would follow.

The order came after complaints had been received from all parts of the country that postage from distribution centers into third and fourth zones would in many instances result in an actual price to many consumers in excess to that charged in stores.

ALLIANCE FIGHTS PRICE CONTROL.

Cotton Planters Leagued with Farmers in Opposing Teeth in Amendments to Lever Act to Bring Down High Cost of Living.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—King Cotton made an alliance with the western farmers today and declared open war on President Wilson's legislative programme to bring down the cost of living. The coalition presented such a formidable front as to make it extremely doubtful whether any of the President's recommendations can be enacted into law.

Senators from the cotton-raising States have taken a strong position against the extension of the Food Control Act. They are particularly opposed to adding wearing apparel to the list of controlled commodities. Remembering their narrow escape in 1917, they fear that if they support the administration in making wearing apparel a controlled product Senators from Northern and Western States will promptly unite on a proposal to fix the price of cotton.

The strong southern influence in Congress succeeded in blocking every move by the administration to fix cotton prices during the war. The southern Senators and Congressmen do not propose to be maneuvered into a loss of this advantage now after maintaining it all through the war. Prediction has been made by Representative Tom Heflin of Alabama that cotton will go to 40 cents a pound shortly. Three years ago the South started a nation-wide "buy a bale of cotton" campaign to keep the price at 10 cents a pound.

ASK RESTRICTION REPEAL.

The farmers are demanding not only the rejection of the administration bill to put teeth in the Lever act but the repeal of all legislative restrictions on the market for farmers' products. They presented their views through their representatives today to the Senate and House Agriculture committees in joint session.

Here is their programme, as presented by A. M. Loomis, of the National Grange Board:

Ending of wheat price regulation and all price fixing on primary food or clothing material at the end of the present crop season.

Removal of all restrictions and regulations based on war powers of Congress, including the food administration activities.

Clear definition of the constitutional power of Congress to deal with hoarding, conspiracies, and combinations to enhance prices and with waste or destruction of food or similar products under peace conditions.

TARIFF PROTECTION.

Immediate termination of the powers of the War Trade Board.

Removal of all internal revenue taxes on food products.

Revision of tariff schedules to afford protection for farm products equal to protection for manufactured products.

Immediate revision of discount and grading rules especially on wheat and adequate representation to actual producing farmers in the formation of grades and discounts to be adopted in the future.

Liberal appropriations for increased work and legislative authority if necesary, to extend activities of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Federal Trade Commission, Tariff Commission and the Department of Justice on the basis of prewar laws.

Recognition of organizations for producer farmers in making up the personnel of committees, boards or commissions to direct enforcement of existing or proposed laws.

Immediate restoration of government to pre-war conditions by hastening demobilization of fighting forces and superfluous government employees.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING.

Abandonment of unnecessary government functions.

Enactment of laws to define legality of collective bargaining among agricultural people.

Enactment of laws to safeguard purchasers of foodstuffs, commercial fertilizers and farm seeds.

Appointment of a special committee to prepare and issue official statements to inform the public of critical conditions affecting agricultural production for the coming year.

The Senate Agriculture Committee is scheduled to vote Tuesday on the administration bill amending the Lever act.

According to a poll taken today, only five members of the committee favor the bill, but the administration had hopes of making a few changes over the week-end.

The National Board of Farm Organizations has issued an appeal to farmers of the country to protest by petition ballot "or other lawful or orderly" means against the "unfair and un-American methods being used against farm organizations engaged in the collective sale of their farm products." The immediate cause for this appeal was the arrest on August 9 of seven farmers in Ohio who were acting as representatives of the Ohio Farmers' Co-operative Milk Company in the sale of their farmers' milk to the dealers in Cleveland.

PROTEST ARREST.

"These men were arrested in their farm homes in the night and thrown into an overcrowded, vermin-infested room of the City Jail," the board asserts in its appeal.

"The National Board of Farm Organizations, standing at all times for law and order and asking no immunity for violators of the same, nevertheless records its vigorous protest against the use of our criminal laws for the personal advancement of ambitious city politicians, and for the benefit of profiteering combinations operating between the farmer and the consumer.

"The National Board of Farm Organizations calls attention to the fact that if farmers shall be denied the right to do collective bargaining in the sale of their products, if they are to be branded as criminals for doing openly what all business is permitted to do unmolested, that such class distinction will not always be borne with patience by the farmers of the country."

STOP LOOTING BY RUMANIANS.

in which the Bucharest government claimed that the Rumanians in confiscating property in Hungary were "merely getting back their own property" and insisted that the armistice of November, 1918, "no longer exists" was delayed, according to a statement by the Rumanian delegation today because of its length and difficulty experienced in decoding it. The Rumanian delegates declared they wished it to be understood that no amendments to the note were added following its arrival here.

JOSEPH HAS NEW CABINET.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BUDAPEST, via Berne, Aug. 16.—Archduke Joseph, the head of the Hungarian state, has appointed a new government with Stephan Friedrich as Premier. Martin Lovassy, who was Premier of the last Cabinet, is Foreign Minister in the new government and Baron Sigismund Perenyi is Minister of the Interior.

The remainder of the Cabinet is made up as follows:

Minister of Finance, Dr. Johann Gruenn.

Minister of War, Gen. Schnitzer.

Minister of Justice, Georges Baloghy.

Minister of Agriculture, Stefan Szabo.

Minister of Religion and Education, Karl Huszar.

Minister of Health, Dr. C. Sillery.

Minister of National Minorities, Prof. Bleyer.

Ministers without portfolio, Stefan Haller, Johann Mayer and Count Paul Potucki.

The Cabinet took the oath to Archduke Joseph on Friday.

BUDAPEST (via Vienna) Aug. 16.—Paul Garami the Socialist leader and other Socialists announced today that they would refuse to enter the new government of Stephan Freiedrich, unless Archduke Joseph abandoned the regency.

The Socialists became conciliated and agreed to join the new Cabinet when Archduke Joseph, Governor of State, today reiterated his intention to retire from politics when the Cabinet was definitely formed.

FINANCIAL PROBLEM.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BERLIN, Aug. 15.—One of the first things taken up for discussion by the new Hungarian Cabinet was the question of what had been done concerning the money issued while the communists were in power. The soviet money, dispatches from Budapest say, will either be declared false or will be given a temporary value, so that the Hungarians, who were forced to accept it from the Bela Kun regime, will not lose everything.

The Budapest correspondent of the Tageblatt calls the new Hungarian Cabinet "a victory for reaction." It says that moderate and conservative circles have taken coldly to the announcement of the new government.

ZITA THROUGH WITH HELL.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Dignitaries of the former Austrian regime have reiterated their requests that former Emperor Charles assume an active part in Austrian affairs, according to a dispatch from Zurich. It is said that the former monarch was sounded on the subject before Archduke Joseph seized control at Budapest.

The last discussion is reported to have been quite long. After the conference had lasted for three hours, former Empress Zita, who was present, finally said:

"I have had enough talking, gentlemen. Hofburg was hell for us. We have done our duty to the end and we have suffered enough. To return is an impossibility."

Archduke Joseph, replying to a statement by the Socialist leader Garami, outlining conditions under which the Social Democrats would join the government, is reported by the Temps to have said that he would retire from political life as soon as a Cabinet was definitely constituted, if necessary; and in any case he would not expect for himself the rights which might give rise to the belief he wished to restore the monarchy.

The Temps says that Martin Louassy, Foreign Minister in the new Cabinet, is known to his compatriots as "a friend of the Entente."

LOS ANGELES HEROINE BACK FROM WAR ZONE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—The Steamship Canopi arrived here today from Italy, bringing a large number of Red Cross and Y.M.C.A. workers. Included in the list was Miss E. C. Whittaker, of Los Angeles, Red Cross nurse with the French army who was decorated by the French government for bravery under shell and machine gun fire.

Among others were a quartette of soloists from the Sistine Choir of the Vatican, said to be the first singers from the Pope's private chapel ever to visit this country.

SWIFTS QUIT LEATHER BY GOING IN DEEPER.

ORGANIZE A NEW COMPANY OFFERING SHARES TO PACKING STOCK OWNER.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Louis F. Swift, president of Swift & Co., today announced that it has been decided to dispose of all of Swift & Co's. interest in tanning and leather. For the purpose the National Leather Company has been incorporated under the laws of Maine with headquarters in Boston, Mass., with a capital stock of $30,000,000 divided into 3,000,000 shares at the par value of $10 each. The segregation will be accomplished by offering these shares to the shareholders of Swift & Co., each Swift & Co. shareholder having the right to buy for cash two shares of National Leather Company at $10 per share for each share of Swift & Co. stock he owns of record September 10, 1919.

In addition to absorbing several eastern tanneries, the National Leather Company will also own certain contracts, under which hides are tanned and leather sold by several tanning companies in which the National Leather Company has no ownership.

Mr. Swift said that the officers and directors of Swift & Co. will purchase the stock of the National Leather Company to which they are entitled under this arrangement and are advising the other shareholders of Swift & Co. to do the same.

FRIEND OF CONVICTS IS SLAIN BY THIEF.

W.C.T.U. LEADER'S SKULL IS CRUSHED BY GAS PIPE AND PURSE IS MISSING.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Aug. 15.—Mrs. Eunice W. Freeman, 58, press representative for the W.C.T.U. of Oregon, was found slain this afternoon, her skull crushed by blows from a gas pipe. The body was found by her son, lying on the kitchen floor of the Freeman home. The murder apparently was committed this morning. Motive for the crime was robbery, according to the police. Mrs. Freeman's purse was found lying empty on the bureau in her bedroom. It was known to have contained $40, her watch and a stickpin, all of which were missing.

Mrs. Freeman was prominent in prison rescue work and had aided many convicts after their release from prison. The police advanced the theory that the crime may have been committed by one of these ex-convicts.

Besides a son, Cecil, living here, the murdered woman is survived by a son, Roy K. Freeman of Oakland, Cal., and a daughter, Mrs. A. A. Griffin of Olympia, Wash. A divorced husband resides at Richland, Wash.

BREAD CARD ISSUE TO STOP IN SWITZERLAND.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BERNE (Switzerland) Friday, Aug. 15.—Owing to the improved supply of foodstuffs, the bread card will be abolished in Switzerland on September 1. The card for the distribution of fats disappeared two months ago, but cheese and milk are still being sold under that system.

AMERICAN STYLE SLAVERY ENDS

Paris Decree for Short Skirts is Ignored Despite Acknowledged Charm of Perfect Ankles in These United States.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIS, Friday, Aug. 15.—Paris' first real display of styles since the war began is being attended by about 300 American buyers, who, however, are showing themselves to be more independent of the dictates of French dressmakers than ever before.

Brown, according to the new models, is again in marked favor. Soft materials are used generally and flounces, panniers and the design of the new models tend toward the strictly feminine appearance. There is not the slightest suggestion of the masculine, a tailor-made effect of the past.

Paris is clinging to the skirts hanging seven to eight inches from the ground. American buyers, the dressmakers say, are ridiculing the shortness of the gowns although admitting American skirts have been too long. It is said to be likely American women will be offered a compromise in lengths. One of the prominent American buyers said today that "no well formed woman looks well in a really long skirt and it cannot be graceful," but he laughed at a dressmaker's suggestion that Americans want long skirts because American women do not have pretty ankles.

AMERICA'S ANKLES O.K.

"American women have the prettiest ankles and feet in the world," the buyer replied, "and they also are the best shod, but they realize that the extremely short skirts are ridiculed and they believe in moderation.

Although the Americans designed their own styles to a great extent during the war, they apparently are finding much that is worth while in the Paris display-room.

Brown, the buyers say, is shown in scores of various shades, brick, terra cotta and burnt biscuit. There also are shown soft shades of gray, raven blue, tete-de-negre and modes. Scores of beautiful models who are displaying gowns in the drawing-rooms of the celebrated dressmakers do not wear corsets and make every effort to preserve the soft contour of their figures.

OUTLINES PRESERVED.

The styles generally show a slight fullness on the hips in the form of soft panniers, with pleats and accordion pleats. Flounces are applied in such a way as to preserve the outline of the figure and the straight hem of the skirt.

Collars are high in many cases and if cut open are adjusted so they may be buttoned close to the throat.

Wool embroideries, flat paillettes and metallic ribbons of a leather-like texture form the trimmings for afternoon frocks, the majority of which are made with coats to match. The coats are trimmed with such furs as moufion, mole, monkey, kolinsky, muskrat and skunk.

All materials are soft and where flounces are introduced they are set on linings of chiffon to insure supple lines. Velveteen, soft serge, velour de laine, chiffon and plush are used with great effectiveness in gowns and costumes.

SKIRTS ARE NARROWER.

Coats with afternoon costumes come just below the hips and follow Dick Turpine lines, by means of a girdle or gauging. Skirts are narrower at the feet, giving a peg top suggestion. Fur collars reach to the eyes.

American buyers say they are having almost a battle with Parisian dressmakers over the backless evening gowns offered, which the Americans are insisting on having filled in with lace, to the amazement of the French designers, who protest that women should be allowed to display their well-formed backs.

Soft net, tulle and lace are used extensively over charmeuse and chiffon for evening gowns and trimmings of gold threads, paillettes, jet, silver tissue, chenille and plush are much used.

The plush in these trimmings is worked up to represent soft fur. Black and gold, raven blue, mole and cinnamon are the prevailing tones for evening gowns, but delicate pompadour blues and pinks, with silk panniers, are shown often for young girls. Many gowns of gold tissue are displayed.

Hats for fall and winter are both large and small, but in all cases will frame the face. Velvet is the most popular fabric for hats, and trimmings will be of ostrich feathers, ospreys and monkey furs.

FIRST DIVISION NOW IS ON ITS WAY HOME.

ONLY EIGHT INFANTRY REGIMENT WILL REMAIN ON THE BANKS OF RHINE.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

COBLENZ, Thursday, Aug. 14.—The American First Division, the first division to land in France and the captors of Cantigny, will begin leaving the Rhine for home tomorrow. The taking of Cantigny, in the Montdidier sector, was made in the first attack by an American division on the western front.

The Coblenz bridgehead, which has been held by the First Division, will be taken care of by French troops and the Eighth Infantry regiment of the American Army, which will remain on the Rhine probably for several years.

The Americans will retain control of Coblenz, of the fortress of Ehrenbreitstein, and the castle of Molsberge, the outermost post of the bridgehead.

WITH THE AMERICAN FORCES IN GERMANY, Aug. 2.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.) According to information in the hands of American army officers, a new high command for the eastern front has been established to take the place of the general headquarters. An order of the national war ministry dated July 17 says that in place of the dissolved general headquarters there has been created the "Kommandoselle Kolberg," or Kolberg command post which shall have the duty of directing border protection in the east with particular reference to the terms of the peace treaty, the evacuation of the Baltic provinces and the supply of troops along the eastern front.

WOULD PROVIDE EACH PERSON IN EMPIRE WITH $2.25 EACH WEEK.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The latest thing in the labor programme of social reform is provision for a minimum income for every man, woman and child.

Under the scheme, which is fathered by Arthur Henderson, secretary of the Labor party, and G. D. H. Cole, attached to the research department, 20 per cent. of all incomes would be nationalized at the source and paid in a pool which would be devoted solely to provide a permanent weekly income of $2.25 a week to everybody.

PARIS, Friday, Aug. 15.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who attended the labor congress at Amsterdam, will sail from Brest Sunday for America. He is going home in response to urgent cable messages.

Mr. Gompers said he regretted the necessity of breaking a number of engagements and the impossibility of continuing his study of the European situation, adding:

"But matters at home are more urgent and I want to get back as soon as possible to help all I can in the solution of problems which are uppermost there."

stated that this step to insure the company's from any violence which during the night, as labor agitators usually select the first night of a strike to commit any disturbances.

"We believe, from the rumors and information that have been carried to us, that it is a wise measure not to attempt to run trains at night at this time."

Car service on the Pacific Electric lines, said O. A. Smith, the general passenger agent, would be resumed as usual this morning at the same time that cars start out upon their early morning runs. This will enable passengers to reach the beach cities and surrounding towns with little trouble.

SERVICE TODAY.

As evidenced by the successful car operations yesterday, the Pacific Electric promises equally as good service today, if not better. During the day yesterday, the southern division, consisting of the San Pedro, Long Beach, Santa Ana and other southern electric lines, was absolutely normal, with the exception of the Whittier line, which was about 50 per cent. normal. As this line handles less traffic than the other southern lines, it was decided to concentrate the efforts upon the more busy lines.

Cars to Long Beach were run at twenty-minute intervals. All other divisions were reported as 50 per cent. normal. Cars to Venice ran every thirty minutes, instead of every twenty minutes according to the original schedule. Hollywood cars were run on a schedule of every eight minutes instead of every five minutes. And the northern division, including the Pasadena Short Line, was reported as being 50 per cent. normal.

According to General Passenger Agent Smith, about half of the railway men affected, or 1500, walked out during the day, leaving 50 per cent. of the actual working force to operate the cars. The greatest difficulty arose when the sub-station operators walked out with the strikers. Their places were rapidly filled with new men and the sub-stations are now pronounced as normal.

Though no acts of violence were reported during the day, Mr. Smith declared that the conduct of several groups of strikers was an absolute violation of the Federal injunction. At Sixth and Main streets, about seventy-five striking platform men were congregated during the day and as a red car passed this crossing they hooted and jeered and even a few of the strikers were seen to jump upon the running boards of the cars to hurl slurring remarks at the loyal trainment operating the cars. This procedure also occurred at Sixth and Wall streets and at Seventh and San Pedro streets.

Referring to the number of the employees that are remaining loyal to the company, Vice-President Titcomb stated that the number of men who remained on their cars was very gratifying.

"We reiterate that the men who did not show up for service today have lost all their seniority rights with this company and stand as discharged men from the service. If the strike is settled soon and they express their wish to return to our service each individual case will be decided on its merits, the man's qualifications, his record; and he will be taken back only as a new man, such as we might take coming to us as recommeded from some other road."

ON YELLOW LINES.

Officials of the Los Angeles Railway Company were jubilant over the service maintained yesterday in the face of the threats of the radical union leaders that they would tie up every yellow street car in the city of Los Angeles.

General Manager G. J. Kuhrts was especially pleased at the loyalty of the 60 per cent. of the platform men of the road who refused to strike. A number of them are members of the union, and many ran their cars yesterday wearing their union buttons.

The loyal men were jeered at by groups of the strikers who had filled up on 2.75 per cent. beer and who gathered at the corners of Seventh street and Central avenue, Sixth and Eleventh streets on Main street, and at division car barns and shouted insults at the loyal men. Fearing increasing trouble as night came on the officials decided that in the interest of the public safety it would be dangerous to run the cars after dark, so service on all lines was stopped at 8:30 o'clock, to be resumed at an early hour today.

During the rush hours last evening 75 per cent. service was maintained, and throughout the day the service ranged from 55 to 62 per cent. of normal.

No inexperienced motormen or conductors were used on the yellow car lines yesterday, the officials stating that every one of the newer employees had passed through the full length of instruction in the company schools, where the company has at all times a large number of men under instruction. This answered the charge of the union leaders that inexperienced strike breakers had been imported to run the cars. The company's statement was verified by the fact that all men running cars yesterday knew their business, wore complete, well-worn uniforms and ran their cars like experienced men.

George Baker Anderson, in charge of the public relations department of the company, said last night that the strike of the yellow car men had failed because of the 2151 platform men in service on July 1, 1166 men had been in the company's service three years or more and were thus receiving the maximum pay of 47 cents an hour.

"These men have homes and families and money in the bank and they know that they are doing well," said Mr. Anderson. "They were loyal to their families, to the company and to the public, and their loyalty as good citizens killed the strike."

Of this total of 2151 platform men, composed of 1100 conductors and 1051 motormen, 52 per cent., or 1117 men, had been working for the company over five years. One man has been in service continuously 32 years, eight men for thirty years, ten for 28 years, four for 27 years, three for 26 years, and one for 25 years, making a total of 27 men who have been in the company's service for more than a quarter of a century. The average length of service of all platform men was 6.24 years.

Robert B. Hill, chief dispatcher of the road, was on the job all day and evening, and he declared that the service was even better than anticipated on the first day of the strike.

FLEET CROWD SUFFERING.

Strike Disappoints Many While Seaside Cities Entertain Visitors Royally.

Adding to the unpopularity of the car strike, many people who had planned to journey to the beaches and visit ships of the Pacific Fleet yesterday were disappointed. Today, unless service is completely restored, the number of disappointed ones will reach far into the thousands, it is estimated. And if the interurban lines are not operated at full speed tomorrow, the enormous crowd expected to bid farewell to the armada will be sadly reduced.

With service impaired, few persons besides those who can afford to motor to the Palisades, Santa Monica, can hope to view the magnificent spectacle Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock when the vessels of Admiral Rodman's command will assemble off the northern extremity of the county's coastline and, as a unit, say good-by to this section of the State for many a day. The actual sailing will occur at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning.

The warships now in these waters are today scattered at various ports, where they are open to visits by the public. Groups are at Long Beach, Newport Beach, Venice, Santa Monica and Los Angeles Harbor, and one destroyer is paying its respects to Catalina. From 8 to 10 o'clock Tuesday morning all these groups will get under way to assemble off the Palisades. At 11 a.m. the fleet will be once more in formation on its way to Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz and San Francisco, where the armada is to be reviewed by the President early next month.

SANTA MONICA ENTERTAINS.

Yesterday the center of entertainment for the fleet was at Santa Monica Bay, where gay events enlivened the warships' stay at both Venice and Santa Monica. The Texas, with the supply ship Prairie and the destroyers Wicks, Woolsey, Anthony and Sproston, anchored off the municipal pier at Santa Monica during the morning, and Capt. F. H. Schofield, commanding the Texas, was formally welcomed by a committee headed by Mayor and Mrs. Berkley. Throughout the day the dreadnaughts Wyoming and Arkansas and the destroyers Ludlow, Buchanan Elliott and Rathburne remained at Venice. These two groups of ships will be visited by the public today, as will the destroyers Yarnell and Trubell at Newport Beach and the battleship Georgia and a group of destroyers at Long Beach.

Officers and men of the ships at Santa Monica were the guests of the concessionaires on the municipal and Ocean Park piers yesterday afternoon, while many officers were entertained with automobile rides in the picturesque canyons and along the shore adjacent to the beach city. The Elks' baseball team locked horns with a sailors' nine from the ships, at 2:30 p.m. at Southern Pacific Park.

The evening saw a brilliant reception, dinner and ball for the officers at the Windemere Hotel, with Mayor and Mrs. Berkley and other city officials and their wives as hosts. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Beak had charge of dancing arranged under the auspices of the Red Cross.

PLAZAS ARE GAY.

While the officers were being entertained on an elaborate scale the men of the visiting ships were no less pleasurably diverted by street dancing in the plazas at Ocean Park and at the municipal pier. From 7:30 p.m. until 10 p.m., when interest centered on a bright, snappy carnival in the Ocean Park pavilion, more than 1000 sailors danced on the squares with girls and young women of the oceanside communities and a host of visiting celebrants.

Elks of the fleet responded eagerly to an open invitation to a stag affair last evening at the Santa Monica Elks' Club House.

Band concerts in the afternoon at the municipal and Ocean Park piers and a programme of sports will be offered for entertainment of the navy people at Santa Monica today. The sports will include golf for the officers at the Brentwood Country Club, a cricket game at the high school grounds at 2 p.m., and free use of the municipal tennis courts all day. All concessions will be free to men in uniform and visitors will be received aboard the ships from 1 to 5 p.m.

The "gobs" had free run of Venice yesterday, by order of the Mayor, turning the city over to

UNION CHIEFS HOPEFUL.

Say the Men will Win Both Strikes and May Demand Still More.

Officials in charge of the strike of union street-car men declared themselves optimistic yesterday regarding the final outcome of the strike. They said the attempts of the Pacific Electric and the Los Angeles Railway to operate cars have all been failures and that the men will win. The victory, they say, will be that the companies will accede to every demand of the strikers.

They alleged that the cars that are being operated on the yellow lines are manned by old men in most instances and that few of the regular employees have remained. While exact figures were not quoted the strikers declared that two-thirds of all the platform men walked out at the call of the unions.

None of the strikers or the officials at the Pacific Electric union headquarters would comment on the report that they will be cited for contempt of the injunction issued by Judge Bledsoe in July, 1918.

Still greater demands may be made of the two car companies according to some of the strikers. Employees of the Pacific Electric may ask for 75 cents an hour, with a seven-hour day, a pass for each employee's wife and family, two weeks vacation with pay and recognition of the carmen's union.

Union leaders say that the Pacific Electric will not be able to resume service even by Monday. The trains being operated, the strikers say, are running with short crews.

F. L. McDowell, general chairman for the Pacific district of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, who is here as the managing head of the strike of the platform men, would not see newspaper men at the Baltimore Hotel, yesterday. Continued inquiry at the hotel brought forth the information that he was not in.

No one at the Labor Temple would talk about Mr. McDowell, nor tell where he could be found.

A meeting of the Pacific Electric maintenance-of-way men has been called for 10 o'clock this morning. None at the headquarters of the strikers knew what would be discussed at this meeting.

STRIKE VIOLENCE SLIGHT.

Several small flurries were occasioned by the railway strike yesterday and a number of calls came to the riot squad of the police department. Mostly these turned out to be attempts on the part of strikers and their families to interfere with traffic by gathering on the tracks and jeering at the loyal platform men as they went about their work. A number of such interruptions came at Seventh street and Central avenue, Seventh and San Pedro streets, Sixth and Main streets, Eleventh and Georgia streets and downtown corners where the yellow cars are frequent.

Early in the morning there was a small riot in front of the Labor Temple, when a special deputy sheriff, employed by the railway company as a guard, attempted to scatter a crowd of strikers that had gathered on the street-car tracks in front of the temple. When the guard ordered the crowd from the car tracks a general fight started and the deputy drew a revolver. Some of the crowd attempted to pull the car crew from the street-car platforms while others backed the guard into a corner and the mob started a "lynch-him" cry.

Motorcycle Officer Wave Box, who answered the call which was sent to the police station by a passing pedestrian, arrived at the scene of the trouble just as Police Sergeant Cahill rushed the guard through the Labor Temple and away from the vicinity. Officer Box mounted to the top of an automobile and addressed the angry crowd while the police sergeant removed the guard. Box requested the crowd to disperse and to attempt no violence. The strikers cheered the officer's speech and no more trouble was reported to the police station.

No disturbances were reported to the Sheriff.

Upon the request of members of the Board of Supervisors, Sheriff Cline yesterday appointed thirty special deputies to act as watchmen for the Pacific Electric during the strike. The men, who were sworn in yesterday at the Sheriff's office, will be paid by the company, which named them, but they will act under the directions of regular deputy sheriffs, who will see that they treat strikers and others alike. The special deputies will act as watchmen for the Pacific Electric in out-of-town places at terminals and stations and will ride the cars to assure passengers and loyal carmen of protection.

"It will be a case of fifty-fifty," said the Sheriff. "These men will act under regular deputies and will protect strikers as well as carmen who are working and passengers. They are simply to keep the peace and are not in any sense strikebreakers."

BEANS PURCHASE CAUSES SCANDAL

Investigation Causes Ousting of Two Employees.

California Growers Suffer Big Loss During War.

Agricultural Committees Hear Farmer Witnesses.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Evidence at a secret investigation of the purchase of beans for the Food Administration during the war so incensed Julius H. Barnes, of New York, president of the United States Grain Corporation, that he forced two employees of the administration to resign, the Senate and House agricultural committees were told today by G. A. Turner, president of the California Bean Growers' Association.

Asked if it was not true that the two men "had been profiteering a little in beans," Mr. Turner said that in view of the fact that the investigation was secret he preferred not to say what the findings were.

The names of the men were not disclosed. Mr. Turner said, however, that he believed the evidence taken during the investigation was in the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Turner told the committee that California growers had suffered heavy losses through the government's failure to purchase beans from them during the war. As a consequence he forecasted production in California this year will be about half normal.

He said more than $1,000,000 worth of oriental beans were purchased and that oriental peas also were bought by the Food Administration.

The witness denied that there was a scarcity of beans in this country at this time and said there was no reason for prevailing high prices.

FARMERS ALARMED.

A. M. Loomis, a representative of the National Grange, told the committee that farmers of the country were alarmed over the trend of the proposed Federal legislation, adding that in view of the President's attitude toward agriculture as indicated in his veto message on the bill repealing the Daylight Saving Act, the farmers felt "something must be done to balance the situation."

Mr. Loomis made a number of suggestions as to "proposed legislation to counteract the influence of the present agitation and thereby increased production." They included:

Abandonment of wheat-price regulation and all price fixing on any primary food or clothing materials at end of present crop season.

Immediate termination of all restrictions and regulations based on war powers of Congress.

Removal of all internal revenue taxes on food products.

Revision of tariff schedules to afford protection for farm products equal to protection of manufactured products.

The defining of the constitutional power of Congress to deal with hoarding conspiracies and combinations to advance prices of necessaries.

BLAMES CLASSES.

Unless "capitalistic monopoly" and organized labor "cease profiteering in goods and wages" the next cycle of the season will effect a condition of living now undreamed of, the committees were told by J. R. Howard, president of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.

Mr. Howard appeared as spokesman for the committee recently appointed at a conference of farmers from Iowa, Nebraska, Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. Mr. Howard denied that the farmers were responsible for present conditions and said the high cost of living was due to 'extravagant profits of middlemen," failure of the American people to "practice even ordinary economy in public and private life," and industrial strikes. Exportation of food and clothing, he said, was no more a contributing cause than the heavy exports of manufactured goods and machinery, of which the farmer is a heavy purchaser.

"An embargo on foodstuffs to bring down the high cost of living" he said, "will be as demoralizing to American agriculture as the embargo placed on foodstuffs was to French agriculture in the time of Louis XIV."

CARS TO PASADENA.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PASADENA, Aug. 16.—No street cars were operated on the Pacific Electric's Pasadena local lines today and on the Short Line and Oak Knoll lines only irregular service was maintained. There was no service to Los Angeles early this morning but before noon the company was getting cars over the road. The company was attempting late today to start a Short Line to Los Angeles every half hour and a car to Los Angeles over the Oak Knoll line every 45 minutes.

Company officials here said the service will improve, until regular service to Los Angeles is developed. No attempt will be made to resume service on the Pasadena local lines.

Jitney busses were doing a big business here. The city commission late today was investigating reports that some of the jitney men were charging 15 cents for local rides which is in violation of their municipal permits. Many motorists bound for Los Angeles picked up people also bound for the city and carried them to their destination. The Santa Fe train leaving here at 8:05 this morning carried more than one hundred passengers to Los Angeles. There were no disorders. Cars and trainmen operating the occasional cars for Los Angeles were not molested. The Pacific Electric announced late this afternoon that it would make no attempt to run cars to Los Angeles after 8 o'clock this evening, but would attempt to resume the service tomorrow.

SERVICE AT RIVERSIDE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

RIVERSIDE, Aug. 16.—The Pacific Electric was able to operate cars as far as Corona out of this point this afternoon as early as 12:30 and started service to Colton at 2 o'clock. With the exception of the Seventh-street line, all local service was resumed at noon and will be continued until 7 o'clock tonight.

More than half of the thirty-eight employees struck. Seven crews were on hand this morning but the walkout of the substation men tied up every line. Trainmaster M. C. Pherson states that little difficulty will be experienced in filling the places of the strikers here.

Officials regard with great satisfaction the loyalty of V. M. Johnson, mechanic, heretofore a strong union man, who showed his lack of sympathy with the walkout by walking twelve miles to San Bernardino, reporting at the shops on time.

TIE-UP AT SAN BERNARDINO.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Aug. 16.—Strike of Pacific Electric employees completely paralyzed street-car traffic in this section today. Not a car moved over any of the tracks and the company made no effort to establish service on any of its lines.

Striking employees thronged the streets all day, but no demonstrations were made. Several hundred people returning from the Los Angeles playground tomorrow will have to be transported home by trucks instead of taking the Pacific Electric. Hundreds of passengers stayed at the station here today for hours in the hope that service would be resumed, having return tickets via the electric line.

Steam trains between San Bernardino and Los Angeles were crowded today. Steam service to nearby points was discontinued several years ago because of the complete electric service and now automobile bus service is the only resort. Four Los Angeles residents, bound for the playground at Seely flats in the local mountains, will make the trip from Los Angeles by trucks according to the statement of an official today.

VETERAN ON THE JOB.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA ANA, Aug. 16.—A 50 per cent. interruption of passenger service, delay of mails and express packages and a complete temporary tie up on freight business on the Pacific Electric lines into Santa Ana was the net result of the train mens' strike today.

One car was operating on the local line between here and Orange with Neal Drock, Pacific Electric veteran, opposed to strikes, as both motorman and conductor. Every effort was being made to continue a two-hour service to Los Angeles and cars left here for the metropolis at 6:29, 7:29, 10:29, and 12:29 and there were four arrivals during the period ending early this afternoon.

A freight train was abandoned on a side track at Stanton, but was expected to be moved this afternoon. Sugar beets are being supplied the factories at Huntington Beach and Los Alamitos over the Southern Pacific and there is no indication that their operation will be affected to any great extent by the strike.

Stage business was booming and extra busses were put on to accomodate the Santa Ana, Los Angeles passenger traffic. The Santa Fe was doing practically all the express business today.

CITY CARS AT REDLANDS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

REDLANDS, Aug. 16.—The automobile business of Redlands is doing a land office business today because of the strike on the Pacific Electric.

Each big yellow bus that comes in and goes out of the city is loaded to capacity with passengers. No Pacific Electric cars have run today on the line between Redlands and Los Angeles. This city was without its morning mail which is brought in on the early Pacific Electric car. The mail came at noon on the Santa Fe train. The Times was the only morning newspaper to reach Redlands in due season, the other morning papers coming in about noon. The Times came in automobiles trucks and was delivered to homes at the regular hour.

No express came into the city until the Santa Fe train at noon, no express or mail was dispatched until that time. Three of the five combination motormen-conductors of the Pacific Electric were at work today and local lines were not affected by the strike.

MAYOR'S PLAN FOR MEDIATION.

To Form Committee of Seven Arbitrators if Strike End is Delayed.

If the street-car strike is not settled early this week Mayor Snyder will appoint a committee of mediation. The Mayor would not say yesterday what men he has picked for this commission. However, he stated it probably will be composed of three prominent business men of the city, whom he will select; two appointed by the striking carmen and two by the companies.

This commission probably will be named tomorrow.

The Mayor intimated that he had decided whom he will appoint, but stated he will not make their names public until the commission is assured and the other members are chosen.

STRIKE HURTS FLEET CROWDS.

them. This afternoon Admiral Rodman will unfurl at the Thomas H. Ince Aviation Field the pennant of the trans-Pacific airplane race for the $50,000 Ince prize. There will be a ceremony at the field when the admiral and members of his staff are received at 3 p.m.

Newport Beach people gave a banquet at the Palisades Tavern last evening for officers of the visiting destroyers Yarnell and Trubell and will entertain them at a luncheon at the Country Club House today. Unless the hour for departure is too early tomorrow morning, a bull's head breakfast will be added to the gustatory events. The sailors are to be taken for automobile trips through Orange county today.

Today will be a big day for Balboa, Newport and their neighboring beaches. The entire population will turn out to welcome the destroyers, the first units of the Pacific Fleet to enter Newport Harbor, and a regatta will be staged on the bay and a dance in the pavilion for the entertainment of the visitors.

An impromptu ball and cabaret entertainment was given last night at the Alexandria Hotel for officers of the fleet and their friends who might have been detained in Los Angeles because of the car strike. The affair was arranged by several women members of the city's Fleet Committee.

APPEAL FOR AID.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LOS ANGELES HARBOR, Aug. 16.—The army transport Sheridan, on the way from Honolulu to San Francisco, with a propellor missing and a coal supply dangerously low, today appealed for aid to Admiral Hugh Rodman of the Pacific Fleet, lying in this and adjacent harbors.

Admiral Rodman immediately ordered the destroyer repair ship Vestal to leave as soon as possible—8 o'clock tonight—to meet the transport. It was stated the Vestal would reach the Sheridan sometime Monday. Until the meeting, the vessels will keep in communication by wireless.

If necessary the Vestal will tow the Sheridan into San Francisco. If not, she will merely convoy the transport into port.

At last accounts, the Sheridan was 1140 miles out from San Francisco. She had a coal supply of 450 tons and was burning sixty tons a day. Her speed was seven knots an hour.

The Sheridan's appeal for help was based upon her decreasing coal supply and the possibility of decreased speed. She was in no immediate danger.

MUST BE LICENSED.

Jitneys Used During Strike Must Also Carry Insurance.

In connection with automobile transportation service during the strike of car men, the Board of Public Utilities this morning issued a warning to the public to require operators of vehicles to produce their permit and license from the Board of Public Utilities to operate as a common carrier, otherwise the public will be unprotected in case of accident, it being pointed out that all vehicles operating as stages or jitney busses come under this class and as such are required to carry $11,000 indemnity insurance to protect the public against injury and damage to property.

So far as interurban automobile transportation is concerned, if additional service is required over that now being given, the stage companies now in business will be authorized to expand their present equipment to take care of the traffic between Los Angeles and outlying points, but so far as local jitney service is concerned no operation can be legal, under present ordinances and laws, without securing proper permit, license and indemnity insurance.

GAS CAR PULLS EXILES' TRAIN.

Angelenos in Five Coaches Get Out of Hills in Spite of Strike.

Three hundred and fifty Los Angeles people, who for a time seemed to be marooned at the Seeley Flat playground in the San Bernardino Mountains by yesterday's car strike, were transported to the city last night over the Pacific Electric line in a five-car train pulled by a gasoline motor.

The train arrived at San Bernardino early in the evening, after the motor's gasoline supply had run out at the city limits.

BIG CROWD IS STRANDED ON DOWNTOWN STREETS

Theater Throng Dismayed by No Way to Get Home—Telephones and Motor Busses Swamped.

The first street-carless night played havoc with the Saturday-night crowds who sought to reach their homes from downtown after 8 o'clock last night. Telephone lines were busy throughout the evening sending S.O.S. calls home explaining the fact that Friend Husband was marooned in the big city. Throngs poured out of the theaters at 11 o'clock, and it was long after midnight before those who could not beg, borrow or steal a ride in a lucky friend's automobile had departed homeward. Not a few walked, some of them long distances.

Downtown Los Angeles enjoyed its most curious Saturday night since Capt. Banning's steam cars startled the natives here years and years ago. Never did more automobiles visit the business district of the city than last night. Taxis did a land-office business.

Here and there on the street corners from 9 o'clock until nearly 12 o'clock men and women stood and gazed inquiringly at passing automobiles, to be finally picked up and carried toward home. Many Ford owners drifted along the streets picking up fares, doing their main business at the Pacific Electric stations where surprised persons arrived to find no cars waiting to take them home.

No one slept in Pershing Square last night, however, and few suburbanites registered at the downtown hotels. Saturday is now practically a half-holiday and nearly all the far-distant commuters had reached home in the afternoon.

Among the city's night workers—telephone girls, newspaper employees, etc., the shutting down of cars worked a harship, and many telephone girls were unable to reach the exchanges in time to handle the heaviest Saturday night business in years.

The announcement that the street cars would discontinue service at 8:30 began to show effects at the matinee performances and in the first and second evening shows in downtown theaters yesterday. This was particularly true in the more popular picture houses and the 10-cent houses east and west of Broadway.

An exception to this were the Orpheum and Morosco, where the houses were sold out long before the performances were due to begin. Donald Bowles, manager at the Morosco, stated last night that the cancellation on the advance seats was negligible, while not a seat was to be had at the Orpheum for the night show. At the Majestic the crowds were almost up to capacity, though a number of cancellations were telephoned in during the afternoon, Manager Michael Corper said.

At Grauman's, the Superba, Clune's Broadway, Pantages, Symphony, Garrick, Rialto, Victory and Tally's there was a noticeable falling off in the late afternoon and last night shows. In place of the usual long lines of persons waiting to get in, there was plenty of elbow room in the lobbies, though the houses were well filled. Long strings of automobiles, however, lined the adjacent curbs.

N. B.—The cars will be off again tonight.

SEEKING CARMEN UP STATE FOR JOBS HERE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Advertisements for motormen, substation operators, conductors and repair men for "good jobs in Southern California" appeared in afternoon newspapers here today, following the strike of platform men of the Pacific Electric Company in Los Angeles. Permanent employment at salaries ranging from $135 to $160 a month and annual vacations of twelve days were offered.

FLEET ENTERS PUGET SOUND.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SEATTLE, Aug. 16.—The cruiser Montana, the first of the ships of the new Pacific Fleet to reach the Puget Sound, passed Cape Flattery early today, according to reports received here and will reach the Puget Sound navy yard at Bremerton, Wash., late today.

Capt. Wettingill of the Montana will take command of the old battleship Oregon, now being put into shape at the Bremerton yard, according to word received in Seattle.

ANGELS FAIL IN SEVENTH.

Lack Punch After Crawford Scores Two. Pitchers Heave Well.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

Failure to strike hard enough in the pinches cost Los Angeles the game with Salt Lake yesterday, 3 to 2.

At the end of the ninth inning there was a large commotion. The noise at first was thought due to the Angels dropping out of first place. However, while they did fall out of the lead with a big thud, the main commotion was found to be caused by the cranking of many flivvers.

Seldom have so many automobiles been concentrated around the ball park. They were thicker than sugar beets around Oxnard. Washington street, Grand avenue and Hill street and adjoining vacant spots were veritable fields of flivvers with the sheen of varnish shimmering in the sun. People attended the ball game in all sorts of vehicles, ranging from the homemade auto with a coffee mill for a motor up to lazy but reliable trucks.

ON TRACTOR.

One guy rode in from Rivera on a tractor. Mike Farley, one of the scribes, came out on a pair of roller skates. Another rode a broom stick. As a kid he once thought it great sport to gallop around with a broom stick between his legs and, being seized with the spirit of youth, came down Hill street at full speed in this manner.

T. Cuttlebone Cartwright made his way through the traffic on a velocipede, but found the going rather hard for a man of his heft, and is plannin gto hire himself brought out in a wheelbarrow this afternoon.

ROOM FOR ALL.

Six thousand five hundred fans saw the game, and things were very crowded outside. However, room will be found for all the cars today. It has been suggested that all automobiles be stood on end and in that way make more parking space. Or each of the larger cars could hold a Ford in its lap during the game, and in that way make two cars stand where but one had stood before.

The roar of healthy cars getting up steam, punctuated by the hacking coughs of the feebler ones in the last stages of bronchial trouble, made a racket that completely drowned the noise of the falling Angels.

Young Mr. Gould of Salt Lake had our athletes on his staff in every round except the seventh, when Sam Crawford temporarily flushed up the game with a double, driving in two.

LACK PUNCH.

Solemn Bill Pertica was in Gould's class himself. A fozzle in the first, which seemed comparatively harmless, beat him. Like Gould, he yielded only two earned runs, and they likewise came in the seventh. Almost any kind of a punch in the seventh would have tied the score, while a real wallop would have wrecked Salt Lake, for we had two in, runners on first and third and nobody out. But the vital punch was not there, and all we can contemplate is what might have been. Baseball history is all littered up with what might have happened.

Pertica started off really worse than he proved to be. He passed Maggert, which didn't give an inkling to what he was to do later in the way of good pitching. He then trapped Mag off first, and the runner seemed doomed until Fournier dropped Bates's throw. Had Ray put more on the ball and plunked it down to Bunny with more force this might not have happened. Maggert went to third on this and scored on Sheeley's fly to Crawford after Fabrique had retired Rumler with a brilliant catch in short left. Johnson popped to Bates.

ERNIE SINGLES.

The teams then battled without further advantage until the seventh. The second hit registered off Pertica was a single by Johnson, and Bill nullified this by nipping Ernie off first. Rumler had been retired in the seventh, when the Bees began giving Pertica his only bad inning. Sheeley shot to center for one base, and there was the crash of a double to right by Johnson. This time Ernie hit the ball far enough to get to second base so that Pertica couldn't pick him off first.

He feels safer when behind Bill's back where he can't be ambushed. Sheeley went to third on the smash, and a pass to Smith filled the corners. Mulvey bounced a tall single in front of the plate. Sheely swept past Bassler as he was snatching the ball out of the air. Expecting a throw to first Johnson came tearing down the line, and arrived just in time to be tagged by Bassler. Smith, who had taken second, scored on Spencer's single to right. An attempted double steal was broken up, Mulvery being trapped on the line between third and home after the ball had been skillfully passed from hand to hand several times.

BUNNY THERE.

In the last of the seventh, Fabrique opened for the home guard with a safety to right. Gould walked bates. Crawford then hit where it was least expected. The ball carried almost to the left field fence. Both men counted, but rapid fielding by Mulvey held Sam at second. Bassler singled to right, and Crawford moved up a base. Thus we had runners on first and third with nobody out, and were in this way able to confront Gould with a first class crisis.

Hope was mainly snuffed out in a double play. Kenworthy drove to Johnson who snapped to Krug. The latter hustled the pill to first getting Kenworthy for the second out. This was done with such consummated speed that Crawford was held at third. Ellis ended the round with a lofty fly to Johnson.

When in the ninth Maggert turned his back to the pill and bagged a fly by Crawford near the center field fence which bore all the earmarks of a triple or better the bugs gave it up. Only one game today, and that in the afternoon. The score:

LOOKS LIKE GOTCH WILL GET MATCH.

Young Gotch has been doing a lot of yodeling recently to the effect that he is Walter Miller's superior on the mat. It is exceedingly likely that the verbose Greek will have a chance to prove his somewhat wild assertions before long.

The Los Angeles Athletic Club is going to insist that the short little Walter takes on Gotch and that before he makes another try with Ted Thye. Miller, it seems, is still as wild as ever to take a bout away from the man who scalped him of his title.

The L.A.A.C. will not stand behind Miller until he takes on Gotch. The reason for this lies in the fact that a perfectly good bout was already on the books when Miller went to Portland to have a try with Thye.

The winner of the Young Gotch-Walter Miller bout will have a crack at Ted Thye. Then after that it will probably come to pass that the victor of the second bout will take on the best of the eastern talent for the national middleweight championship. Then everybody will be happy. They will know who is the real champ, and also will have something to figure on, in future matches. The mat game is a tough one, for you never know who is the man of the hour.

MORNING GAME AT VERNON OFF.

Because of the street-car strike it was announced last night that there will be no ball game at Vernon this morning.

However, there will be the usual afternoon game at Washington Park, starting at 2:45 o'clock.

The morning game, which has been called off, will be played Monday afternoon.

Jack Cook, secretary of the Salt Lake club, has arranged for the Bees to remain over.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PORTLAND, Aug. 16.—Portland and Oakland broke even today, the Beavers winning the first game, 11 to 8, and dropping the second, 11 to 1. McCredie's men clinched the first game in the seventh inning, when they knocked Gearin from the box, scoring eight runs on six hits.

The second game was a slaughter. Oakland pounded Daly for fifteen hits and eleven runs, while Holling was invincible, Portland's lone tally coming as a result of "Biff" Schaller's home run. The scores:

COWAN STATION (Cal.) Aug. 16.—Word comes from Jim Cowan today that twenty-four bucks were killed at his camp.

FAVORITES HAVE A GOOD DAY AT GOLF.

FEW OF THEM FAID TO SHOW THEIR CLASS; LOUIS JACOBY IS BEST.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) Aug. 16.—Few favorites failed to score well enough today in the preliminary qualifying round of the national amateur golf championship at the Oakmont Country Club to be included in the list of those who will continue play Monday in the regular thirty-six-hole medal play test for the thirty-two places in the first match play round.

Louis Jacoby of Charlotte, N. C., returned the best card of the 136 starters, going out in 39 and in 37 for a 76. He was pressed by Francis Ouimet of Woodland, who scored a 77. Ouimet was 36 to the turn and 41 in. J. Wood Platt of North Hills tied with Ouimet at 77.

Rain and hail fell in a torrent and a terrific wind blew for a few minutes late in the afternoon, drenching the galleries, blowing down tents and making it difficult for players who had not yet completed their round.

Charles "Chick" Evans, the champion, was one of those caught in the storm. He required 42 coming in, but was out in 38 for an 80.

There was but one real upset. Perry Adair of Atlanta picked up his ball at the seventeenth, when it would have been impossible for him to have scored under 90. He was 49 out with a ten at the fourth, where he was repeatedly trapped.

Players with 89 or better qualified, as the officials ruled that all tied for sixty-fourth place would continue in the play. There were sixty-two players with 88 or better and this allowed the thirteen players who scored 89 to get in. E. M. Byers, a former champion, was one of the eighty-nine men, the "lucky thirteenth," he told his frends. Other former champions, Ouimet, Jerome Travers, W. C. Fownes, Jr., and Robert Gardner, all qualified.

BIG CROWD PRESENT AT BOXING SHOW.

FANS REGALED BY GOOD CARD AT LONG BEACH SILVER SPRAY ARENA.

The regular weekly boxing show at the Long Beach arena was well attended last Friday night, and from the looks of things Promoter A. B. Montgomery will have to enlarge his gallery. The gallery was packed to the limit and many fans had to stand.

Matchmaker Hunefeld made a wise selection when he matched the Kramer boys. The boys fought fast and there was action galore throughout the entire bout. On two occasions the boring-in sailor was forced to give ground and Danny surprised the fans by his aggressive work. It was called a draw.

George Moss discovered a tough bird in Gunner Kelly and he had to train all his guns on the Navy Boy in order to gain a draw decision. Moss was taxed to his utmost speed and fought like he did years ago. Referee Holborrow called it a draw to the satisfaction of many gobs in the gallery.

Jimmy Brenton had no trouble in gaining the decision over Kid Rubidoux. Ruby was a willing boy but Jimmy knew too much for him and won each and every round. Sotello and McManus went to a draw in the opener while Oliver hung the K. O. on Kaspar. The Long Beach shipyards triumphed over the Southwestern when Keene put Young Kelly on the mat for the count of 10.

AMERICAN SWIMMERS DEFEAT AUSTRALIANS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Fannie Durack, women's swimming champion of Australia, suffered the first defeat of her career at Manhattan Beach this afternoon, finishing third in the 440-yard American Athletic Union championship contest. The race was won by Ethel Bleibtrey, Women's Swimming Association of New York, in 6m. 30⅖s., a new American record.

Miss Wilhelmina Wylie, who was touring the country with Miss Durack, also succumbed to the American swimmers in the 100-yard handicap, finishing fourth. The race was won by Leslie Bunyan, Women's Swimming Association of New York, who was given a handicap of eleven seconds. The time was 1m. 19⅗s.

Both Miss Durack and Miss Bleibtrey had expected to enter the 100-yard handicap, but were so exhausted by the first race they withdrew.

BOLDEN WINS SWIM.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

ROVERTON (N. J.) Aug. 16.—Eugene T. Bolden, a sailor of the Great Lakes naval training station, won the ten-mile national swimming championship in the Delaware River late today, setting a new record for the event. His time was 1h. 59m. 18s. He defeated twenty-eight men, among them some of the best swimmers in America.

CLINE ACCEPTS.

Manager Cline has an offer from Pocatello, Idaho, for a fifteen-round bout between Danny Kramer and Earl Purryer. Cline has accepted the offer on behalf of Kramer and has wired for transportation.

JAMES IS AFTER MILLER.

Peter James, the famous middleweight wrestler of the Southern States, is hot on the trail of Walter Miller, Young Gotch or Ted Thye. James prefers Miller and is sure that he can defeat the Los Angeles favorite. James has just arrived here from his home in Alabama and is in the very pink of condition. He says he will make any weight for Miller and will post any forfeit necessary for a try at the L.A.A.C. matman.

James has met the best middleweight canvasmen in America and has had a wrestling experience covering over sixteen years. His weight is about 150 pounds, but he can make less if required to do so. He is willing to agree to any terms that Miller asks. The newcomer is confident that he can put Walter's shoulders to the mat and will remain in Los Angeles until he gets on the canvas with him.

ANZACS BEAT AMERICANS

Californians Fall Before Brookes-Patterson in Straight Sets.

BY FRED HAWTHORNE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Norman E. Brookes and Gerald L. Patterson of Australia defeated William M. Johnston and Clarence J. Griffin of California by a score of 10-8, 9-7, 7-5, this afternoon, in the final round of the national doubles lawn-tennis championship tournament on the turf courts of the Longwood Cricket Club, at Chestnut Hill. Monday afternoon at 3:45 o'clock they will meet William T. Tilden II of Philadelphia and Vincent Richards of New York in the challenge round for the championship.

By winning this afternoon Brookes and Patterson are believed to have accomplished the hardest part of their task in the great attempt to take the American doubles championship back with them to Australia. Johnston and Griffin were generally regarded as the very best team this country can produce at the present time, and, with their defeat in straight sets, it does not seem that America's chances are very bright for retaining the title.

BROOKES THERE.

Should the Australians win Monday, it will be the first time that our doubles title has been won by a foreign pair since 1903, when the famous Doherty brothers—Reginald F. and Hugh Lawrence—having already won the honors in 1901, successfully defended them at Newport. The match today did not bring forth the highest flights of lawn tennis with a possible exception in the case of the veteran Brookes. Had it not been for his masterly work all through the grueling struggle, Johnston and Griffin would almost certainly have won. Brookes was tiring fast in the last set, and, could the Californians have won that, their chances for stopping the foreign invasion would have increased enormously.

Johnston and Griffin led in the first set at eight games to seven, with Griffin serving in the next game, but, after many furious rallies in a long deuce game, the Australians pulled the game out, squaring the match.

FOUGHT HARD.

Again, in the second set, the little Californians, fighting hard, ran into a lead of 5-4 on games, with Johnston having the service in the tenth. Brookes and Patterson took the first two points when Brookes scored on a dazzling full volley across fore court and Johnston made a costly double fault on the next. Patterson was caught with the ball at his feet when Griffin volleyed sharply on the next point and netted his return, making the score 15-30.

The pudgy Griffin electrified the crowd at this stage by scoring two wonderful placement aces in succession for the next two points, first sticking the ball down Patterson's alley and on the next catching the young Australian out of position by shooting the turn to Patterson's feet as the latter came charging down the court. This made the score 40-30 on points, and the crowd of 3000 persons gathered about the courts could not hold itself in restraint any longer.

GREAT APPLAUSE.

A tremendous wave of applause swept down from the serried rows of coats and on to the courts. Everybody felt confident that could the Californians take that next point and with it the set, the match would go to the younger pair. But it was not to be. Brookes, who had saved the situation for Australia a score of times before, stepped into the breach again.

A lighting fast rally midcourt took place, to be finished when Brookes slipped in close to the net and angling his shot wonderfully sent the ball shooting almost parallel to the net and so far to the side of the court that

BEACH VISITOR LOSES TROUSERS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

POMONA, Aug. 16.—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Andrews and their two children of 635 West Center street have returned from an intended vacation of several days at the beach. They spent only one day there, and thereby hangs a tale. Arriving at the beach city, the family secured quarters at a rooming-house. Because of the crowd they were unable to all be together in an apartment, and so Mr. Andrews took a bed in a room on the ground floor, while the other members of the family were on a floor above. During the night a thief entered Andrews's room, drew his trousers from under his pillow without disturbing him and extracted $10, a watch and some other articles from the pockets, leaving the trousers in the hall. The landlady found the trousers and thought this was strange. It was with difficulty that Andrews was awakened, although he is usually a light sleeper. The landlady said that she smelled a strange odor in the room and this, with the fact that it was so hard to awaken Andrews, led to the belief that he had been drugged.

BOYS STEAL FRUIT.

Ontario Growers Apply to Police For Protection.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ONTARIO, Aug. 16. — With peaches bringing the highest prices in the history of the industry in this section, the Ontario police, working in conjunction with deciduous fruit ranchers, today launched a campaign to put a stop to the promiscuous theft of the fruit from wagons on which it is being hauled to the various canneries and drying yards.

George Torres, age 16, was the first victim of the campaign. When the lad was caught in the act of stealing peaches from a wagon driven by M. L. Rushen and warned to leave the fruit alone, he became impertinent and pelted the driver with stones. Judge George R. Holbrook gave the boy a severe grilling and placed him on probation pending good behavior.

Officers declare that many other arrests will follow unless the practice ceases. Ranchers assert that frequently two and three boxes of fruit are literally emptied by small boy thieves while the fruit is en route to market.

BUMPER CROP.

Government Estimates Show Abnormal Yield of Peaches.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

DINUBA Aug. 16.—Although July was marked by a period of unusually high temperatures and a lack of irrigation water, a bumper crop of deciduous fruits of all kinds will be produced throughout the San Joaquin Valley, according to the report of E. E. Kaufman, of the bureau of crop estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Citrus fruits for the lower San Joaquin Valley suffered again this year with the June drop and as a result the navel crop is estimated at 55 per cent. and the Valencias 75 per cent. or normal.

Peaches are estimated at 15 per cent., apricots 122 per cent., prunes 267 per cent. and raisins 120 per cent. The greatest increase was in the production of peaches, the total for the State being placed at 435,000 tons as compared with 290,000 tons for last season.

FIRST BIG GAME.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, Aug. 16.—Frank Loge and A. S. Parr, two of the popular hunters of the city, returned last night with the first deer brought to Redlands since the opening of the season. They got them in Cedar Canyon on the Banning side of the San Jacinto range. "We had them staked out and knew where they were if they were only there when we got there, and they were," said Loge. "We decided the best way was to get on the trail and let other hunters scare them up and that is exactly what they did." The two bucks were fat and of fair size.

SELLS LAND HE DID NOT OWN.

Case Involving Forged Deed Decided on Appeal.

Purchaser of City Lots Loses Purchase Price.

Notary Who Acknowledged Sale Held Innocent.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

MONROVIA, Aug. 16.—One of the strangest cases in law, in which one man sold property belonging to another, and the third man, who bought the property, tried to get his money back from a fourth, has just been concluded in the District Court of Appeals and Elmer E. Rives, Monrovia notary public, freed from all libality.

As the direct outcome of the initial transaction George W. Brown of Los Angeles will lose $4750 that he paid for three lots on Van Ness avenue, in that city which at the time belonged and still do belong, to Martin L. Kelsey and wife.

Leonard C. Canfield, alias Helmer E. Rabild, is named as the man who plotted the swindle. He spent the money before the fraud was detected.

Early in May, 1914, Canfield came to Monrovia and as Helmer E. Rabild opened a banking account, rented a postoffice box and generally established himself under that name. Later it developed that he, forged a deed and acknowledgment of its execution, using the names of Mr. and Mrs. Kelsey, real owners of the Van Ness avenue property, and that of W. B. Julian, a notary. He recorded the forged deed in the Los Angeles County Recorder's office.

A few days later Canfield, alias Rabild, telephoned to George W. Brown of Los Angeles and offered the three lots, actually worth $2500 each, for $4750. Mr. Brown accepted the offer. Thereupon Canfield executed a new deed with himself as Rabild grantor, and Brown as grantee. This new deed Canfield brought to a Monrovia bank where he had an account, and persuaded one of the officers to accompany him to the office of E. E. Rives, a notory. The banker did so and introduced Canfield to Rives as Rabild.

The notary took the forger's acknowledgment of the paper. Not until after Canfield had spent the money did the defrauded Brown discover the deception. Brown thereupon, sought recourse from Rives, through whose action he claimed he had lost $4750. But Judge Pat R. Parker in the Superior Court held that where the forger actually appeared before the notary and admitted being the man who signed the deed the notary's certificate spoke the truth and was not false. Upon the appeal Judge J. Thomas affirmed the judgment of the lower court, Judges P. J. Finlayson and J. Slone concurring.

UPLAND, Aug. 16.—The Junction Grocery Store, conducted by M. C. Mendell at the junction of the Euclid-avenue and San Bernardino lines of the Pacific Electric, was burglarized early today, the thieves entering by means of a pass key, it is thought.

Large quantities of cigarettes, cigars and candy were taken together with two sides of bacon, and a quantity of ham and cheese. They also made away with 200 copper cents from the cash register. Before departing the burglars enjoyed a hearty meal in the store.

RAISE WATER RATES.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

EL CENTRO, Aug. 16.—The increase in water rates for Imperial Valley and Lower California, announced by the irrigation district board of directors a month ago, becomes effective this week under resolution of the boards. The lands below the line will pay 36 cents per acre foot, instead of 49.6, while in the valley the rate will be 85 cents, an increase of 35 cents.

Several years were required to secure permission from the Mexican government to increase the water rentals in Lower California, and the district announced long ago that there would be no increase in California until the rates below the line could be raised.

The new rates will serve to decrease the annual tax rate of the district.

DODSON NAMED CENSUS CHIEF.

Attorney, War Veteran, will Count County's People.

His Appointment a Surprise in Political Circles.

Way of Choosing Assistants not Yet Determined.

Philip F. Dodson, an attorney in the legal department of the Automobile Club of Southern California, yesterday officially assumed the office of supervisor in charge of taking the census in this county, that composes the eighth census district of California. He signed and mailed to the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington his oath of office and will start organizing for the work of counting the county's people as soon as he has received definite instructions from the national capital.

Announcement of the appointment came as a surprise in political circles here. The job is one of the best political plums the Democrats have to give in this community and it was considered late last June that the place was certain to be given to Herman C. Lichtenberger, in charge of the probate department of the County Clerk's office, who was a special Federal representative here in the taking of the 1910 census and had the indorsement of the City Council and Chamber of Commerce for the present job.

The census-taking period as fixed by law began last July 1, but actual enumeration, according to announced plans, will start next January 1 and must be completed in a month.

JOBS FOR MANY.

Meantime, a force of 600 to 1000 employees must be mobilized, organized and trained in this county and all the machinery for the collection of a vast volume of information must be perfected.

Mr. Dodson stated yesterday that, until instructions come from Washington, he cannot say just when he will start work nor what will be the exact procedure followed in selection of workers.

He was appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor on the recommendation of Senator Phelan, made soon after Mr. Dodson returned, six months ago, from France, where he was a first lieutenant in the Fifty-second Regiment of Coast Artillery. Before the war he practiced law in this city about five years. He is well known in club circles as, besides his official connection with the Automobile Club, he is a member of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, the Ad Club and the Lion's Club.

ELIGIBLE LIST.

"I would say," stated Mr. Dodson yesterday, "that the work will call for the employment of some 600 or more persons, but that is only a rough estimate. The job of interviewing hundreds of thousands of people within a month is no small task.

"I have not yet established headquarters and will not do so till I receive full instructions from Washington. It has been proposed to handle the census-taking work at offices in Pasadena, but I do not think that will be practicable.

"While I am not prepared to state definitely what method will be used in selecting the people to make the count, I understand an eligible list will probably be created by conducting an examination here and forwarding the papers to Washington for grading."

The census blanks for next year's count, as now outlined, are said to carry twenty-nine questions that each person interviewed will be asked to answer. The count in 1910 showed this county had a population of 504,131, but an enormously greater number of people will be included in the coming enumeration.

LOCAL MAN HEAD OF COAST'S CLOTHIERS.

RETAILERS' NEW PRESIDENT TO HELP FIX CAUSES OF VAULTING PRICES.

W. H. Frank, president of Harris and Frank, returned yesterday from San Francisco, where by unanimous vote he was elected president of the newly organized Retail Dry Goods Association of the Pacific Coast.

The objects of the association, stated Mr. Frank, are to promote and strengthen friendship among the retail clothiers of the Pacific Coast, to promote progressive, scientific and honest methods in the retail clothing trade, and to encourage the practice of charity and benevolence among its members.

The Pacific Coast association will also work in co-operation with the national association to determine the reason for the present high prices of clothing, and it will carry on a vigorous campaign on the Pacific Coast to enforce honest and legitimate advertising.

In regard to prices for clothing during the fall and coming spring, Mr. Frank could make no definite statement. He said the large eastern woolen houses have, owing to labor difficulties, greatly reduced their output. The American Woolen Company, one of the largest in the United States, will, it is said, produce only 10 per cent. of its normal output this coming spring, owing to strikes and labor troubles.

The merchant, therefore, must buy and agree to pay at the market rate upon delivery.

BOMB EVIDENCE TO GRAND JURY.

Lawler Case Action Hinges on the Outcome.

Mrs. Kafitz and Detectives to be Questioned.

Woman's Testimony Puzzling to Investigators.

The county grand jury will take up the investigation of the bombing of the home of Oscar Lawler tomorrow morning, when Mrs. Maud Kafitz, central figure in the inquiry conducted by the District Attorney and Chief of Police since the leap to death by Charles H. McGwire, will be questioned by District Attorney Woolwine and Chief Deputy Doran, Chief of Police Home, Detectives Wood and Murphy and other investigators will tell the grand jury of their discoveries and William Mulholland will be asked to testify as an expert witness on explosives.

On the result of this grand jury session will largely depend whether or not arrests will be made and on what lines further search for possible accomplices of McGwire will be conducted.

Since the outrage committed at the Lawler home and the suicide of McGwire, an act taken as conclusive proof of his guilt, investigators have found circumstances surrounding the bombing crime and the firing of the Pico Heights Congregational Church fraught with love and hate, intrigue and revenge. More puzzling to them than all else are the statements of Mrs. Kafitz.

Mrs. Kafitz admits that she was with McGwire at the Serrano avenue "bomb cottage" and on many other occasions but she has made no admissions to establish that she had absolute knowledge of McGwire's intentions. Much of the evidence assembled by detectives serves only to substantiate her story and does not incriminate anyone so far mentioned in the investigation.

Mrs. Kafitz appears to have no fear as to the outcome of the investigation in spite of the relations known to have existed between her and McGwire while he was plotting the destruction of the Lawler home and of the church. Her story has been fairly consistent from the beginning, although elicited piecemeal. One stray sentence, however, is said to conflict with other assertions by her. Although she said she was forced to go with McGwire and that, fearing for her life, she tried to leave him when he was experimenting with bombs in Beverly Hills, she is alleged to have stated at another time that she "could scarcely fear him."

In addition to being questioned closely regarding her residence at the "bomb cottage" in Serrano avenue, where McGwire made the two bombs, it was said Mrs. Kafitz will be asked regarding her occupancy in December, 1918, of a house at 667 Corondelet street, where she is said to have met McGwire many times. Police investigation showed that he called there every morning before going to his desk in the City Hall, and that he was extremely solicitous regarding her welfare. This was before the trial of the will contest in the estate of the late William Kafitz, whom she was said to have tried to shoot.

MOUNTAIN RIDGE SLIP SENDS MAN TO DEATH.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

TACOMA, Aug. 16.—Jack Meredith, 25, of Portland, Or., was killed Thursday night when he plunged from a ridge of Little Tahoma Peak on Mt. Rainier, and fell about sixty feet.

Meredith was a member of the Mazama Club of Portland, a mountain-climbing organization, which was encamped on the ridge. In company with Lee Benedict, also of Portland, Meredith set out to climb the peak early in the evening. While standing on a ridge the rock gave way beneath them and Meredith plunged from sight. A searching party several hours later found the body in a ravine.

Abraham Jacoby.

PIONEER MERCHANT'S BODY BROUGHT HERE.

FUNERAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR ABRAHAM JACOBY WILL BE ANNOUNCED TODAY.

Arrangements for the funeral of Abraham Jacoby, pioneer merchant of Los Angeles, who died Friday night at Del Mar, will be announced today.

The body is at the mortuary of J. D. Faris.

Mr. Jacoby was one of the pioneer merchants of this city. He came here fifty years ago and with others launched the now great Jacoby Brothers' store. He was actively engaged in the affairs of the firm until he retired twenty-five years ago. At this time he entered the fruit growing and shipping business, where his influence was felt in putting the marketing on its present basis.

Later he relinquished his active managership in this line and devoted himself to his real estate operations. He had large holdings in Kern county and in Bakersfield, and, while a resident of this city, assisted in the upbuilding of the northern county.

At one time Mr. Jacoby was president of the then Board of Trade.

Death was caused by heart failure while he was at Del Mar on a vacation. He was apparently in good health Friday night when the family arrived at Stratford Inn.

Mr. Jacoby, who was 67 years of age, leaves a widow, Mrs. Louise Lazard Jacoby and two daughters, Carolyn and Rosalie. The family residence is at 665 Westlake avenue.

DIES WHILE ON PLEASURE TRIP.

PIONEER RESIDENT VICTIM OF PNEUMONIA IN WASHINGTON.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

INGLEWOOD, Aug. 16.—Word has just been received here of the death, in Washington, D. C., of Joseph H. Dinsmore. Mr. Dinsmore and wife had gone East on an extensive business and pleasure trip, and while in Washington he was stricken with pneumonia. His two daughters left Monday for his bedside, but were met in Chicago with a message advising them of his demise, and waited in that city the arrival of the mother with the remains, and will accompany her home, arriving here Tuesday. Mr. Dinsmore is a well-known rancher, having lived on his present ranch, west of Inglewood, for more than twenty-three years, previous to that he lived in Ventura and Orange counties. He was 58 years old and was a son of the late Walter Dinsmore, an early settler of Los Angeles. The trip West was made overland when Mr. Dinsmore was but 3 years old. He has been prominently identified with every move in Inglewood's advancement and was a man of many friends. He was a Thirty-second Degree Mason, a member of Golden State Lodge and also a Shriner. He is survived by the widow and two daughters, Mrs. Earl Gard of Los Angeles, and Mrs. W. C. Boeck, who has been living on the home place. Three brothers also survive.

BRITAIN FORWARDING HER DETAINED MAIL.

ALL PIECES CONTAINING VALUABLES ARE TO BE PLACED IN PRIZE COURT.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, Friday, Aug. 15.—The forwarding of mail detained during the war by the postal censor will be completed August 30, the War Office announced. The mail was held because its transmission would have assisted the German military and naval plans, increased the commercial and financial resources of the enemy or aided the far-reaching German political and commercial propaganda campaign.

The handing over of this delayed matter began June 23. It is estimated that 630,000,000 pieces of mail were examined during the war and that 1,300,000 were detained, of which 592,500 have been released recently.

In regard to mails routed over the United Kingdom, to and from foreign countries and mails landed from neutral ships, which entered British territorial waters, it has been decided that pieces containing goods, currency, securities and other valuable financial papers will be put into prize courts. Commercial and private correspondence containing valuable documents will be released. Other private correspondence will be destroyed because of the great cost of re-examination.

FOR UPBUILDING OF OUR MARINE.

Four Points are Proposed by National Association.

Suggest Department with Head a Member of Cabinet.

Wish Conference to Agree Upon Shipping Legislation.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The Executive Committee of the National Merchant Marine Association has asked the fifty-five members of the council of the association to approve four points for the upbuilding of an American merchant marine, according to William Allen, secretary of the association. Mr. Allen announces that the recommendations which the council would be asked to approve are as follows:

(1.) Calling of a conference of representatives of all organizations directly interested in shipping, shipbuilding, manufacturing and exporting to agree upon fundamental principles of shipping legislation.

(2.) Creation of a department of the marine to take over all the duties of the Shipping Board, except rate regulation, and to which the various marine bureaus of existing government departments shall be transferred.

(3.) Support of the American bureau of shipping.

(4.) Establishment of load lines for American vessels.

APPROVAL NEEDED TO ACT.

Under the rules of the National Merchant Marine Association, an organization headed by Senator Joseph F. Ransdell of Louisiana and which includes in its membership shipbuilders, ship operators, manufacturers, exporters, editors and labor leaders, approval of the council is necessary before action can be taken by the Executive Committee. It is to obtain the views of this council that the Executive Committee has sent out its questionnaire.

Prompt replies have been requested and the Executive Committee expects to announce the findings of the council within a few weeks.

The members of the Executive Committee are Senator Ransdell, Capt. C. A. McAllister, formerly of the United States Coast Guard; Emile P. Albrecht, president of the Philadelphia Bourse; Hendon Chubb, underwriter, New York; George W. Norris of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, and L. L. Richards, former director of transportation of the War Trade Board.

TO GET BEST OPINION.

By calling a conference of Representatives of organizations well informed on shipping questions, the Executive Committee feels that the association will be instrumental in bringing about a crystalization of the best opinion. The idea of the committee is to have the Representatives of the various organizations participating in the conference agree on whatever recommendations as are necessary in its opinion and to have each organization individually go before Congress and urge the incorporation of those principles into legislation.

The necessity for an adequate American merchant marine is felt by shipping men and shippers alike but so far there has been a lack of concerted action on the question. The House Committee on merchant marine and fisheries and the Senate Committee on commerce, the two committees whose task it is to shape shipping legislation, have, thus far, given their attention principally to hearing officers of the Shipping Board. In a few weeks they will begin hearing various independent organizations and individuals representing the public. It is the desire of the officers of the National Merchant Marine Association to urge these individuals and organizations to prepare themselves as soon as they can for those hearings and if possible to agree upon something in the nature of a definite programme for the two congresional committees to consider.

BOARD IS TOO UNWIELDLY.

The feeling of the Executive Committee regarding the establishment of a department of marine is based on the belief that the Shipping Board, composed as it is of five members, is too unwieldly an organization to handle as rapidly as is necessary the innumerable questions that arise in the merchant marine, questions many of which require prompt attention. It feels that the Shipping Board has done invaluable work in building ships for America but that the needs of the merchant marine from this time forward can best be looked after by an Executive Department whose head would be a member of the Cabinet.

The regulatory powers now vested in the Shipping Board, the Executive Committee thinks, ought to be transferred either to the Interstate Commerce Commission or a similar body to be created for that purpose.

WANTS OWN CLASSIFICATION.

The desire to have a purely American classification agency is responsible for the committee's approval of the American Bureau of Shipping. At present many American vessels are classified by Lloyds. American shipping men generally are eager that America build up her own classification bureau, so as to be independent of foreign shipping domination as far as possible.

The approval of legislation requiring American vessels to carry marks on their sides to indicate the depth to which they may be safely loaded, is in the interest of safety. All nations have come to recognize the necessity for such legislation.

MEXICAN COURTS MAY SETTLE OIL PROBLEM.

QUESTION WILL THEN BE UP TO CONGRESS FOR FURTHER LEGISLATION.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 16.—It was announced authoritatively today that the Supreme Court on Friday decided to meet to consider five "amparos" brought by foreign oil interests against the national executives petroleum decrees of July and August, 1918. The "amparos," which were rejected by the lower courts, are said to have been made matters of grave and urgent importance and placed at the head of the Supreme Court calendar for immediate consideration.

Should the Supreme Court reverse the decisions of the lower courts it is believed the petroleum question would be settled satisfactorily for all concerned until Congress enacts pending legislation.

An "amparo" for which there is no English equivalent, is a sort of habeas corpus extended to property rights. If the "amparos" in these cases are granted, execution of the oil decrees objected to would be held up.

PIONEERS TO ENJOY REUNION AND PICNIC.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

RICHMOND, Aug. 16.—Old-time residents of Calaveras county from all parts of central California will gather at East Shore Park, near here, tomorrow, for a picnic and reunion.

In the morning there will be a baseball game between the Calaveras clubs of the San Joaquin Valley and those of the San Francisco bay region, and after the mid-day luncheon there will be dancing.

The society of former Calaveras county residents, most of them descendants of pioneers, was formed nine years ago and a reunion is held annually.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, and after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablet."—[Advertisement.

It's Easy to Peel Off Your Tan or Freckles

This is what you should do to shed a spoiled complexion: Spread evenly over the face, covering every inch of skin, a thin layer of ordinary mercolized wax. Let this stay on over night; wash it off next morning. Repeat daily until your complexion is as clear, soft and beautiful as a young girl's. This result is inevitable, no matter how soiled or discolored the complexion. The wax literally peels off the filmy surface skin, exposing the lovely skin beneath. The process is entirely harmless, so little of the old skin coming off at a time.

Mercolized wax is obtainable at any drug store; one ounce usually suffices. It's a veritable wonder-worker for rough, tanned, reddened, blotchy, pimpled or freckled skin.

Anyone Now Can Have Pretty Curls and Waves

Here's a hair curling secret that is decidedly "worth while." At bedtime apply a little liquid silmerine with a clean tooth brush, drawing this down the hair from root to tip. In the morning when you look in your mirror you will be astonished and delighted to find your hair has dried in as beautiful curls as you've ever worn. The waviness will look so natural no one will guess it was artificially acquired.

You can obtain liquid silmerine at any drug store and a few ounces will last a long time. It is neither sticky nor greasy and is pleasant to use. It is doubly useful because of also serving as a beneficial dressing, keeping the hair soft, silky and lustrous. After one trial you will never go back to the barbarous curling iron.

RATIFYING VITAL.

of the world must intimate relation to our own. The Allies owe us $10,000,000,000. Their demand for our products and their ability to pay are crucial in their bearing upon our permanent prosperity. The removal of the treaty from politics and the forum of the Senate will give much more opportunity to consider problems in national reconstruction like that of the railroads, retrenchment of governmental expenses, a budget system and the peace establishment of our army and navy. This is not to say that the treaty is not to be fully scrutinized and discussed. It is a most important issue in the history of our country and ranks with the adoption of the Constitution and the war amendments. But it has now been under discussion since the armistice in November. The first draft of the covenant came to us in February and the amended and revised draft some two or three months later. It has been debated at length in the Senate, in the press and on the stump.

FULLY PRESENTED.

Of course, time must be given for careful scrutiny by the Foreign Relations Committee and for majority and minority reports. No treaty in our history, however, has had so full a presentation to the people as this. The final reports, discussion and action should be hastened in view of the profound effect that the formal and actual consummation of a permanent plan for permanent peace must have on stabilizing business, social and political conditions not only in this country, but the world around.

Those who flout the assertion of the President that the present chaotic condition of high prices and uncertainty and unrest will be aided by the ratification of the treaty and the league covenant will see their error if they permit themselves to drag out discussion and delay action on the treaty. It will be the poorest kind of politics for Republicans. Popular impatience will manifest itself. It will help the President to rehabilitate himself politically by sledge-hammer blows in favor of the League of Nations, which is growing in favor with the people every day.

The increase of wages, which is necessary and fair, gives an excuse for raising prices far more than the cause justified and calls for another increase of wages with similar results. What is needed in such a condition of affairs is to startle the people into sanity, self-restraint and an indignant inquiry into every excessive price which they are called on to pay. The focusing of local public attention upon the conduct of local dealers will awaken their consciences or their fears. The threat of prosecution by those in authority with some notable instances of striking at a shining mark will greatly help.

CALL TO SELF-DEFENSE.

Rousing the activities of the people in their self-defense is what the President's mesage is admirably drawn to effect. He occupies a pulpit from which what he says reaches every person, victim or profiteer, and sets the course of public thought and action.

He does not emphasize as much as a nice analysis might require the inevitable character of present conditions, but it was not necessary to his purpose that he should. He was seeking to stir the people to adopt in their own lives a method of immediate, though only partial amelioration of conditions.

Many of Mr. Wilson's messages have been lacking in really practical suggestions and have been full of ideals, beautifully phrased, without attempting to point out the constructive method of reaching them. This one is not subject to such a criticism. It contains more informing facts, more conclusions sustained by argument, a more judicial poise toward all social groups, and more practical aspects than most of his state papers.

WAR TAX OVERLOOKED.

It is fair to inquire, however, if the President should not have found the present income and excess profits tax one important factor in the increased cost of commodities. We are attempting to raise five and one-half billion dollars annually to apply on the war debt, in addition to the customary taxes for city, State and Federal activities. Almost all successful concerns appear to be paying their usual dividends after having set apart a sufficient sum to meet the income and excess profits tax. In practice therefore, this extraordinary demand on industry is being passed along in most instances to the "ultimate consumer." An intelligent plan to amortize our expenditure in the world war so that the burden would be distributed over the next quarter of a century would tend automatically to reduce the present high cost of living to the extent of some billions of dollars, in the next twelve-month and annually thereafter. A war, resulting in unexampled exhaustion, should not be paid for in a very brief span of years, or even by one generation. The load should be distributed and equalized over a term of years. So long as special taxes exact $50 per capita per annum from our people, we must expect that amount plus the cost of the vast machinery required to effect its collections, to be added to the cost of living.

The President's words directed to union labor and its present disposition to strike were well timed and much needed. By reason of his previous attitude on many union labor issues, which were too yielding, his temperate words of warning to them against their feverish disposition to strike and use their organized power without real reason or hope of improving their condition should have great weight.

"No remedy," says he, "is possible while men are in a temper and there can be no settlement which does not have as its motive and standard the general interest. Threats and undue insistence on the interests of a single class make settlement impossible."

This is a solemn truth which both hot-headed wage earners and those of their leaders who are extreme may well study and inwardly digest.

The President's reference to the need for a speedy ratification of the peace treaty and the covenant of the League of Nations as an important aid in bringing about stability in business and a reasonable adjustment of prices has been attacked as an unworthy effort to array behind the League of Nations the strong popular demand for relief from the high cost of living. With reference to such critics the President's argument is a fair and convincing one. Certainly when the treaty of peace and the covenant are ratified by the great powers and it is known that the united strength of those nations and of all the others is to be directed toward stabilizing chaotic conditions now existing all over Europe, especially in its central and eastern parts, business men of the world will have a basis upon which to demand a permanent policy.

Harry Penrod's First Sale of Fine Tailoring

One of our customers, a retired Montana sheep man, explains it this way: "During 1917-18 we produced less wool than in any similar period for twenty-five years. In 1917 we sent to the mills nearly 100,000,000 pounds less than in 1909—and 1918 was but slightly better. You can't dodge the law of supply and demand and since we face several more years of curtailed production with an abnormal world-wide demand I can't see anything but higher clothing prices for a long time."

Incidentally, this man backed his judgment by purchasing four suits and an overcoat in this remarkable sale.

Whether it be good business or not, Harry Penrod is determined to dispose of the surplus stock of woolens taken over when this firm succeeded Eisner & Co. In the face of the greatest woolen shortage in twenty-five years he will adhere to his policy of carrying no fabrics from one season to another. In all probability, price reductions such as these will never be heard of again.

He is a man of many friends, who realize the integrity of his promises and his ability to serve them well.

Harry Penrod gives you his personal word that the reductions are exactly as indicated and that the fabrics offered are of the same quality which have created for this house a State-wide reputation for carrying none but the best. NEW HUN TREATY BIG JOB, SAYS HITCHCOCK.

SAYS THAT IS WHAT IT WOULD AMOUNT TO IF TEXTUAL CHANGES ARE MADE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SWAMPSCOTT (Mass.) Aug. 16.—"It will be a pretty tough job for this country to negotiate a new treaty with Germany, but that is just what it will mean if the treaty now before the Senate is textually changed," Senator Hitchcock, the administration leader in the Senate declared today at his summer home here, in discussing Republican efforts to amend the document.

"Instead of a treaty imposed by military force," said the Senator, "we shall have to make such a treaty as Germany is willing to sign and we shall lose the advantages of the imposed treaty."

In discussing the situation with the President yesterday, Senator Hitchcock said, his point was brought up and the President laughingly remarked that he might send Senators Lodge and Knox, chief opponents of ratification, to Germany to negotiate a new treaty.

"He said this," the Senator said, "by way of illustrating what a tough job it would be."

GOVERNOR HITS AT DEMAGOGUE.

Missourians Hear Executive Trounce Trouble Makers.

Politicians and Reds Alike Blamed for Public Ills.

State Society Reunion Big Success Despite Strike.

Severely censuring both the partisan politicians at Washington and "those agitators who are taking advantage of conditions to exploit their poisonous doctrines," Gov. Frederick D. Gardner of Missouri addressed 1500 members of the Missouri State Society of Southern California, gathered in Sycamore Grove yesterday afternoon.

The Missourians' reunion was the biggest in the history of the association, in spite of the carmen's strike, although most of the people came in automobiles, machines being parked along the boulevard for more than half a mile on both sides of the street. Many people, unable to find conveyances, had walked to the grove, "just to hear the Governor."

The afternoon programme was opened by A. H. Kallmeyer, president of the society, who mentioned some of the great men Missouri has produced, including Gen. Grant, Mark Twain, "Black Jack" Pershing, Gen. Crowder and Champ Clark. Last of all, "but not least, fellow-countrymen," Mr. Kallmeyer mentioned Gov. Gardner, whom he introduced.

Speaking of Missouri's splendid financial conditions, her child-labor laws, her unexcelled school system, her abolition of the convict contract system and the splendid part that State played in the great war, Gov. Gardner held the interest of his audience more than an hour. In part, he said:

CRISIS SERIOUS.

"The present industrial crisis is the most perilous problem this nation has ever been called upon to face. Unless calm and deliberate judgment prevails, this condition can easily develop into an upheaval. Among the reasons for unrest perhaps the chief cause is the long delay in the conclusion of peace. Why should the peace treaty, the railroad situation, the labor question, the food question and other big problems now centering in Washington be considered from a partisan standpoint? Washington is certainly bedridden with politics.

"As to profiteering, that has not been a monopoly of any one class and it should be ended at once, from all classes and all sources. Production and supplies must be increased and extravagance must be abandoned.

"The antagonistic attitude of capital and labor toward each other has done much to cause unrest. This must be remedied. A great national conference should be called, to be participated in by both employers and employees.

"The agitators are taking advantage of conditions to try to overthrow the fundamental principles of our government. Most of the would-be destructionists came from foreign shores to escape the oppression of their native lands. During the war they remained quiet, but now they are trying to Prussianize this nation. The class that thinks America is ready to forsake its safe, sane and time-honored principles, little understands the temper of our people, nor does it understand what the Stars and Stripes stand for. When they get out in the open, they will find us ready for them."

The Governor also praised the splendid roads of Southern California.

NO "YELLOW PERIL."

Speaking of the arrival of the Pacific Fleet, he declared, "the coming of the fleet means that there can never be a yellow peril to this nation. The fleet's speedy voyage from the Atlantic through the Panama Canal has demonstrated the practical use of the canal and the ability of America to quickly mobilize her navy on either coast."

On the platform were the officers of the Missouri Society, the Parker Entertainers, John T. Short, superintendent of the New Missouri State Capitol Building, and J. W. Kearney, a personal friend of Gov. Gardner.

The Governor, who has a home at Long Beach, where his family has been all summer and where he has been for the last ten days, will leave Los Angeles this morning for Salt Lake City, to attend the conference of Governors, which convenes tomorrow.

At the election of officers by the Missouri Society yesterday the following were chosen for the coming year: President, Mrs. Harry G. Henley; vice-presidents, J. T. Short and A. H. Kallmeyer; secretary, Miss Mary Boswell; treasurer, H. Parker Wood. In the essay prize contest the winner was Mrs. James E. Kerfoot, with an essay on "Missouri." The best poem on Missouri was written by Mrs. C. Lee Boswell.

Other organizations holding picnics in Sycamore Grove yesterday were the Virginia Society of Los Angeles, the Palestine Society and the New Jersey Society of Los Angeles.

ENGINEERS AVERT LOSS OF LIFE IN COLLISION.

TRAINS CRASH HEAD-ON, BUT SPEED IS CHECKED AND DANGER MINIMIZED.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Passengers on Southern Pacific trains No. 502, Oakland to Santa Cruz, and No. 507, Santa Cruz to Oakland, were shaken up today when the two trains collided at Elmhurst, at the outskirts of Oakland. No injuries nor serious damage resulted, it was announced at Southern Pacific headquarters here.

OAKLAND, Aug. 16.—Two Southern Pacific locomotives were slightly damaged at 10 o'clock this morning when train No. 507 bound to Oakland from San Jose bumped head-on into train No. 502 bound to Santa Cruz from Oakland.

Through a mistake the trains were switched on the same track. The engineers saw each other in time to put on the brakes so that the trains were virtually stopped when they met.

No one was injured. Both trains proceeded to their destinations.

POLE SOCIALISTS ARE THANKFUL TO AMERICA

DELEGATION CALLS ON HOOVER AND PRESENTS HIM WITH MEMORIAL.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WARSAW, Thursday, Aug. 14.—Men and women representing the Socialist party in Poland, accompanied by the Ministers of Labor, called on Herbert Hoover, chairman of the Allied relief organization, today and presented a memorial.

"Please present to the American peole," the memorial said, "our feeling of gratitude. But for America we would have not been able to pull through the last six months.

"We pledge ourselves to devote our strength to the orderly upbuilding of a stable government.

"We are not Bolsheviki, but are patriotic, thinking people, who know that our ideals of democracy are best served by preparing the minds of the masses for the responsibilities of a Socialist government and that such progress only is sound when achieved by the votes of an intelligent majority.

"We know the difficulties and deprivations through which the Polish republic must pass during the next year and will endeavor to live up to your slogan of full production on farms and in coal mines and factories. We must beg our American brothers in democracy to have patience with us and not to remove their support until we can get on our feet. Give us just one more year of credits and other active sympathy and we will emerge a strong, self-respecting nation prepared to face the world alone."

Mr. Hoover concluded his investigation here tonight and left for Lemberg and Cracow, where he will receive degrees from the universities in those Galician cities.

Before his departure, Mr. Hoover, Gen. Pilsudsky and Premier Paderewski reviewed a procession of 5000 little children representing more than a million Polish children who were fed by the American relief administration through its children's feeding department.

Tone-Color

The soul of musical expression is Tone-Coloring. The ear distinguishes Tone-Color naturally, just as the eye judges perspective. It is the vital element in music through which the artist expresses personality, and it is this "charm" of music produced in piano playing by the varying degrees and kinds of touch of the fingers on the keys that builders of player pianos have been struggling to accomplish—the control of Tone-Coloring.

THE SOLO*ELLE*

does this—it actually does perform a seeming miracle and with marvelous brilliancy makes it possible for you to play as the artists played—or you can give the composition your own interpretation, your own individuality.

But Tone-Coloring is only one achievement of the SOLOELLE. It also positively and individually controls the Melody apart from the Accompaniment—another accomplishment that is exclusive with the SOLOELLE.

Thus, the wonderful SOLOELLE is the only player piano in the whole world that supplies you with the two basic fundamentals of musical expression and actually does what no other player piano can do—

FIRST—The Soloelle is the ONLY player piano which gives you complete and unrestricted individual control of Melody and Accompaniment.

SECOND—The Soloelle is the ONLY player piano in which you can and DO control Tone-Color—the charm and essence of musical expression.

HEAR THE SOLOELLE—Come in and play it yourself and you will at once realize that comparison with any other player piano is impossible.

AMATEURS IN NEW YORK.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Wholesale hoarding of foodstuffs in easily improvised storage houses by amateur speculators has been discovered here by agents of the Department of Justice, according to an announcement made today by George Mayo, special government prosecutor assigned to the local Federal campaign against food hoarders and profiteers. The results of the investigation will be presented to the Federal grand jury Monday.

Mr. Mayo declared that the hoarders are a number of bankers' and brokers' clerks who have accumulated large food stocks for speculative purposes.

Most of the warehouses operated by the amateur merchants, Mr. Mayo said, had come into existence within the last year or eighteen months.

No solution of the high cost of living can be reached until the people of the United States shake off their present spending "intoxication," according to William Mather Lewis, director of the savings division of the Treasury Department, in a statement here today appealing to 6,000,000 Thrift and War Stamp savers to check waste "through precept and example and wise buying."

Mr. Lewis said that to lower the cost of living in New York "everyone must begin at once to curtail expenditures for luxuries" now selling at exorbitant prices. He declared the people themselves were to blame if prices of necessities rose, because merchants observed the absolute carelessness with which people parted with their money.

"Millions of persons are not spending from their earnings, but from their savings of the past two years," said Mr. Lewis.

GET FLOUR IN BOSTON.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—United States Deputy Marshal Bancroft accompanied by two agents of the Department of Justice, seized 16,588 bags of wheat flour from the storehouse of the Market Warehouse Company in South Boston late today.

TAKE EGGS IN ST. LOUIS.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—Seizure of 42,026 cases of eggs, 16,569,360 eggs in all, held for seven owners by the Mound City Ice and Cold Storage Company here, was made today in a libel warrant issued by the United States District Attorney. The names of the holders of the eggs were not announced.

But there is no agreement among the framers of these reservations, and some of them obviously amount to amendments, while others present serious questions concerning their effect.

RLEASE BEANS IN KANSAS CITY.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 16.—The seizure of 75,000 pounds of beans, said by Federal authorities to have been stored here throughout the war, was ordered today by Dist.-Atty. Francis M. Wilson.

The lot of beans included 448 bags of Manchurian pinto beans, said to have been imported from Japan, and 697 cases of canned green beans, stored in a warehouse controlled by grocery brokers and said to be owned by nonresident companies.

This is the first confiscation to be made by the Federal authorities here.

LIMIT ON UNLOADING.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

COLUMBUS (O.) Aug. 16.—Informed by State inspectors that carloads of perishable foodstuffs in some Ohio cities are being held as long as ten days before unloading, often resulting in waste through decay, Gov. Cox today asked Railroad Director Hines to fix a time limit of twenty-four hours "or other proper and reasonable time" within which such cars must be unloaded.

"The evil practice of making use of railroad cars for storage purposes," the Governor said in a telegram to Mr. Hines, "deprives traffic of transportation means not only, but also holds back from the market the supply to meet the demand which makes for quick turnover at moderate profit under reasonable and open competition."

According to inspectors of the State Public Utilities Commission, numerous carloads of potatoes, melons, tomatoes, peaches and other perishable food were found in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Toledo, Dayton and other large cities which had stood on the railroad tracks for ten days and in most instances the food was spoiled. In some of the cities, it was said, merchants were using the cars as storehouses, withdrawing what they needed for the day and returning any surplus at night.

GRAND JURY TO ACT.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Vigorous investigation of conditions affecting the sale and distribution of food in this district was urged by Judge William C. Van Fleet in empaneling a Federal grand jury in the United States District Court here today.

Provisions of the Food Control Act and the Sherman Act penalizing profiteering, food hoarding and the formation of combinations in restraint of trade were read to the grand jurymen by the court.

FRESNO, Aug. 16.—Mayor W. F. Toomey announced this morning he would order today several carloads of army food to be resold to the people of Fresno at cost.

BACON FALLS IN DENVER.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DENVER, Aug. 16.—On the eve of the entry of the city of Denver into the retail bacon business, dealers today announced sweeping reductions in that commodity. Where stores previously have been getting from 55 to 70 cents a pound, today it was announced bacon could be purchased at 35, 36 and 39½ cents a pound, depending on the grade. Customers were advised to "load up."

The city on Monday morning, next, will sell 30,000 pounds of bacon purchased from the War Department in an effort to curb high prices.

J. J. Vickory, commissioner of supplies today declined an offer of the Denver Retail Merchants' Association to sell the bacon for the city at cost.

ANGELENOS' RETURN IS ODDLY DISCLOSED.

LOCAL HEROES, ONE WITH BRIDE, HELD AS THEFT WITNESSES.

A suprise homecoming of two Los Angeles heroes, one of whom was planning to return with a Richmond girl as his bride, was brought to a temporary halt in Richmond, Va., yesterday when Carl L. Abbott, who gave his address as 2557 Wilshire boulevard, and Allyn Cornell, of 2975 Leeward avenue, were held there under bond to assure their appearance as witnesses against a colored maid charged with stealing $350 from Abbott.

Abbott, who served with the Eleventh Regiment of Marines, and won a medal for excellent marksmanship as a scout sniper, was the man who is engaged to the Richmond girl, and was at her house when the money was stolen from his room, according to the Richmond dispatch to The Times yesterday. The $350 was what remained from the money Abbott received when he was discharged from the service a few days after arrival from overseas. It was left under the pillow in a wallet in the room occupied by Abbott and Cornell.

The Richmond police arrested Sarah Foster, a maid employed at the hotel, and held her for the grand jury. Reconciled to the loss of his money, and still anxious to complete the trip with his bride and roommate, Abbott was about to start for Los Angeles, the dispatch said, when he and Cornell were placed under bonds to assure their appearance at the October term of the court, as witnesses in the case. Abbott and Cornell served in the same company.

Allyn Cornell is the brother of Fay D. Cornell, Los Angeles real estate man, of 2975 Leeward avenue. The information received by The Times from Richmond yesterday, and transmitted to the Cornell residence over the phone, was the first intimation the family had that the young man arrived in this country. He has been in the service for nearly two years, it was said at the house.

The name of Carl L. Abbott does not appear in the city directory, and the young man's relatives could not be reached last night. The Richmond dispatch did not state the amount of bond required of the two Los Angeles men.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIS, Aug. 15.—Prince Felix of Bourbon-Parma, brother of former Empress Zita of Austria, is seeking authorization by the Allies to go to Luxemburg to visit his fiancee, the Grand Duchess Charlotte, according to a Geneva dispatch to the Temps, which says that he affirms his loyalty to the Allies.

Prince Felix fought with the Austrian armies.

MAN ARRESTED FACES A CHARGE OF MURDER.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

MODESTO, Aug. 16.—H. J. Miller, 25, was arrested here tonight by deputy sheriffs, who say he is wanted in San Jose on a murder charge.

The officers here do not know the name of the man Miller is said to have killed.

Loans at Lowest Rates.

When money brokers voluntarily reduce their charges on loans, it is a sign that they have plenty of money to lend. On the other hand, diamonds are growing in price. One can borrow more on a good stone now than ever before. If one chooses to sell, he can get more.

Marxwell & Company, over the Citizens' National Bank are leading diamond merchants and money brokers. They lend at 1 per cent. a month, and have abolished all other charges. This makes theirs the lowest rate charged by any loan brokers. They also buy diamonds and jewelry, paying the highest market price.—[Advertisement.

LEFT WING SOCIALISTS WILL BE COMMUNISTS.

CALL FOR CONVENTION WHICH SEEKS ALLIANCE WITH BOLSHEVIKI.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—"Left wing" socialists have issued a call to radicals throughout the country to attend a convention in Chicago on September 1 to organize "The Communist party of America," it was learned here today when a copy of the call was made public by a joint legislative committee which is investigating seditious and anarchistic activities in this State. The left wingers declare their intention of severing all connection with socialism on the ground that the word has come to signify "merely welfare and uplift."

The proposed party platform which will be submitted to the convention demands "dictatorship of the proletariat, both industrial and agricultural and nationalization of great business enterprises and financial trusts." International alliance with the Bolsheviki of Russia and the Spartacans of Germany also is advocated and the creation of workmen's councils "to act in suppression of fraudulent bourgeois, democracy, the finance oligarchy and capitalist bureaucracy."

PROPRIETOR GIVES FACTS

Was So Run-Down He Was Hardly Able to Work.

Gains Ten Pounds After Taking Tanlac.

"I'll Never Be Without It," L. D. Schuler Says.

"Tanlac has done me so much good that I'll never be without it," said L. D. Schuler, who lives at Compton, just outside of Los Angeles, Calif., to a Tanlac representative, recently. Mr. Schuler is the proprietor of a place of business in Compton and is well known there.

"Last spring I suffered from an attack of the grippe," continued Mr. Schuler, "which left me in a badly run-down condition and for about four months I was in bad shape. I didn't have any appetite to speak of and my stomach went back on me entirely and I finally got to where I could hardly eat anything and began to lose in weight. I got awfully nervous, too, and couldn't sleep well at night and was in such a bad fix after while that for two weeks I was scarcely able to do my work. I just felt perfectly miserable on account of this nervousness and stomach trouble and, although I took several different kinds of medicine, nothing helped me a bit.

"I had read about Tanlac and what other people claimed it had done for them and I just wondered if it was really as good as they said it was or if it was like the other medicines I had taken, but I bought a bottle anyway, because I finally decided to give it a trial, and I got so much benefit from that first bottle that I kept right on taking the treatment and now I can truthfully say Tanlac has been the best medicine I have ever taken. I can get my regular sleep every night now and I don't have any trouble eating, either, and am not bothered a bit with my stomach any more and have already gained ten pounds in weight in this short time. I consider it remarkable how quickly this Tanlac and the laxative tablets straightened me out and I am going to keep both of them on hand from now on. I have recommended Tanlac to a neighbor of mine and he has gotten as good results as I did from it. This is the first time in my life I ever gave a recommendation for any medicine, so that will give you an idea of how much I think of it."

Tanlac is sold in Los Angeles, Pasadena and San Diego by the Owl Drug Co.—[Advertisement.

NEW YORK FIREMEN TO GO ON A FOOD SEARCH.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—Inspection of all cold storage and other warehouses by firemen for the purpose of discovering hoarded food supplies was ordered today by Mayor Hylan.

The order, ostensibly for a "fire inspection" of the buildings, which is to be started immediately, carries with it a suggestion by the Mayor that the firemen ascertain at the same time the quantities of "butter, eggs, meat, sugar and other foodstuffs stored, and obtain any other information in regard to the hoarding of necessaries of life, to the end that the State or Federal authorities may be aided in prosecuting offenders."

WANTED: WESTERN MEN TO MAN THE WESTERN FLEET!

Admiral Hugh Rodman, Commanding Magnificent Armada Now Here, and Secretary Daniels, Head of the Navy Department, Urge Youth of the Pacific Seaboard to Join Service on its Defenders—Great Warships are Floating Universities.

AND FOR WEST.

It is a part now, and nothing more to instill the spirit of into the Pacific Fleet than with western youths. Even of the Navy Josephus who has been the guest of for two weeks, urged upon for Honolulu that enlist for service in the

These things and many more have urged them to enlist.

"WORK" IS MOTTO.

The naval recruiting service has cast into the waste basket all its ancient propaganda which in past years has pictured a life of play in the navy. The first word in all the up-to-date naval recruiting propaganda starts with the word "Work."

"Work" is the pulse of the navy. But the work aboard ship is entrancing. It has a lure and attraction. The crew of the New Mexico, one of the most powerful battleships afloat, was found in their dungarees—their working clothes—last Wednesday. They were dressing up the ship. Up above, details of bronzed youths in their bare feet, were holy-stoning the decks. Holy-stoning the deck is one of the solemn rituals aboard a fighting ship. It is the process of shining up the decks with a stick and a piece of holy-stone and a generous application of sand and water. Gun crews were polishing up the big naval guns in the turrets. Mess attendants were scrubbing mess tables with sand and water. The engine room divisions were scouring the big turbines. Hammocks and tarpaulins were being scrubbed. Everybody was busy. It was their field day, but field day only occurs once a week.

MEN ARE NEEDED.

More men are wanted for the Pacific Fleet. The gaps left open by men retiring from the service are numerous. Western men must fill them.

Between the ages of 18 and 25 years the youth of the nation passes through a period in which he is undecided as to how he will map out his future life. If he has not a university education youth finds the upward grade a rocky one, and when he has passed through this period he has arrived nowhere. A few years of this period spent in the navy will reap a greater benefit for him than a college of technical education, for the navy is a mighty floating university itself.

An enlistment period in the navy has many advantages. A fighting seaman is always sure of his job. He will never lose it through strikes or hard times. If he is sick or injured he is cared for and his pay goes on just the same and he has no doctor's bills to pay. Nor does he worry over the source of his next meal. Of course, he works. He washes his own clothes and scrubs his own hammock, but the navy promises him work.

FLOATING UNIVERSITY.

To repeat, the Pacific Fleet is a floating university. It maintains schools for the instruction and education of recruits. Among its trades schools are the following: the electrical school, for the instruction of electricians, both general and radio; the artificer school, for shipwrights, shipfitters, carpenters, blacksmiths, painters, etc.; the yeoman school, for stenographers, typewriters and book-keepers; the commissary school, for cooks, bakers and commissary stewards; the hospital corps training school, for the instruction of men in nursing, first aid, drugs, etc.; the coppersmiths' school; the machinists' school; the aeronautical school; the musicians' school; the school for diving; the torpedo school and the class for instruction in gasoline engines.

In the electrical school, the length of the course is eight months. To enlist for the electrical branch a recruit must have a knowledge of either general electricity or be an operator of the Morse code or have sufficient foundation in radio telegraphy to be competent to keep up with the class. General electrical students must know the names of the various parts of the dynamo and dynamo engine and must be familiar with the ordinary types of switchboards and methods of wiring.

Men who graduate from the radio school, after the expiration of an enlistment, can readily obtain employment in the following fields: electrical wiring, electrical repair man, power station engineer, storage battery plant, automobile lighting, ignition and starting, gas engine man, telegraph operator, radio operator, radio telephony, wire telephony, radio inspector.

A course in the artificer school fits a man for a job as shipwright, shipfitter, plumber, blacksmith and painter.

YEOMANRY.

The yeoman branch performs all the clerical work of the navy. The yeoman is employed in the supply officer department, where he is instructed in preparing requisitions, surveys, public bills, official returns, methods of book-keeping, inventories, mess statements and balance sheets; in the executive office department, where the student learns the duties required in keeping men's records and the use of the forms employed in keeping track of the arrival and departure of men, ratings and disratings, appointments, charges, desertions and deaths; in the pay office depart-

The American Navy opens a splendid career to the ambitious boy of the West, as it does his brother-American of the East. I strongly urge Western boys to enlist for service with the Pacific Fleet. It is right and proper that our western coast be guarded by the spirit of the West and that the youth of the West serve as its defenders!

Opportunity for promotion is open to young men of character and vision and ambition

LAST CHANCE TO JOIN THE FLEET.

Quick Applicants may Pick Any Ship Now Lying Off Our Local Coast.

Lieutenant-Commander C. A. Harris, in charge of local navy recruiting station, 318 Union Oil Building, states that over sixty men were enlisted last week at that station, and sent direct to the different ships in the fleet for their training, choosing whatever ship they desired.

This opportunity for service on ships of the fleet, immediately upon enlistment, will only be open for one more week. After the fleet leaves Santa Barbara, all men who enlist will have to go through the regular training stations.

THE CONFESSIONS OF AN EX-GOB.

Should a Young Man Join the Navy? Read This Description of What the Life Really is by a Man Who Lived It and Then Judge for Yourself.

BY H. V. WILKINS,
Formerly of the United States Navy.

"Men wanted for the United States Navy."

There is a sign like that at the corner of First street and Broadway, there are signs like that scattered all over the business section of Los Angeles, placed there by the United States Bureau of Navigation particularly to catch the eye of the generation which did not register for the drafts and to arouse interest in what the navy holds for the young man just out of his teens. In smaller print one reads of the many trades he can learn there, the alluring statement that foreign ports are to be visited and ends with the wonderful opportunity the navy affords the thrifty to save money. This last statement is mildly humorous. H.C.L. in the navy stands for "High Cost of Liberty." You can't go ashore in any port, domestic or foreign on liberty, without spending a good part of your month's pay.

If this street sign, however, arouses enough curiosity and the young man goes to the recruiting depot for further information he is a goner. It's a ten to one shot that he is headed straight for a pair of bell-bottomed trousers and a wide-collared blouse, for here he finds men specially picked for the business of inducing young men to join the navy. These men are salesmen for Uncle Sam. When a potential gob slips through their hands on the first visit they start a follow-up campaign of letters and personal visits. These salesmen can make anyone believe that the navy means just one good time after another; that a white collar and a pinchback suit are only for mollycoddles; that a battleship is one big club, with its baseball teams, foot-ball games, race boat crews, glee clubs and minstrel shows. They end by casually remarking what an attraction the uniform has for the fairer sex, and, believe me, that last remark has more weight than anything else in convincing the embryo gob of 19 or thereabouts.

The young man is also handed a prospectus, written by a clever publicist in Washington, which sets forth the attractions of navy life in terms which make the young man's neck itch for the wide-open collar and his legs for the bell-bottomed pants.

By the above statement I do not mean that the navy obtains its recruits under something savoring of false pretenses, but I do know that hundreds of boys sign up for a four-year hitch without fully realizing what they are going up against.

On the other hand, there are hundreds of disgruntled ex-gobs who take pleasure in knocking the navy at every opportunity. Usually they are men who, on entering the navy, got off on the wrong foot, did just enough work to get by, were continually before the mast for some infraction of the rules and ended by being discharged with a short ticket or not recommended for re-enlistment. These knockers do a world of harm and keep many a young man who would make a fine record in Uncle Sam's uniform from joining.

WHAT IT IS.

The navy isn't a big club with just one good time after another; neither is it a workhouse. The navy affords lots of hard work and lots of hard play. It teaches a young man just out from the shelter of his home and parents to stand on his own feet, to learn to take care of himself. It teaches orderliness, cleanliness and last of all dicipline. And it is on this last that so many young men hit the rocks, particularly during the first year of their enlistment. The only advise a boy needs on joining the navy is, "Do exactly as you are told." If he does this he'll get by and come out with a record he'll be proud of the rest of his life.

If the young man decides to sign up, let his decision be absolutely final, for once you have passed the physical test and taken the oath of allegiance, Uncle Sam won't let you back out. Make up your mind that you are going to get as much fun, experience and knowledge out of the next four years as you can, that you are going to take everything philosophically, that you are not going to expect too much nor allow yourself to get sore at the navy, your officers, your shipmates or yourself.

THE WORST TIME.

The first month in the navy is without a doubt the worst period in the entire four years. Everything you see, eat and hear will be different from anything you have ever experienced before. From the time you are admitted to the training station or "Gardo" and your head is clipped and you are given a disinfectant bath along with a dozen others, your whole order of things will be given one grand upheaval.

Immediately the realization that there is no privacy in the navy hits you between the eyes. You eat, sleep, bath and live with others always at your elbow. Its a funny sensation getting used to having someone next ot you all the time, yet this mode of living has a wonderful effect on your self-respect.

The first month in the navy you are placed in quarantine. After the regulation haircut, the formaldhyde bath and you have said good by to your civilian clothes you are given an old suit of navy whites and right here you get your first jolt. All the gobs you have seen walking on Broadway or dancing on Olive street have been immaculately neat, their clothes had a jaunty set, from the dinky hat set at the always precarious angle to the small neat knot in the neckerchief. The first suit you get is in all probability several sizes too large for you. When you ask how you are going to keep the pants from falling around your ankles, the gob who has been attending to your welcome takes a slant at you, picks up a piece of rope and tells you to

SAVES ORPHANS OF EAST.

Los Angeles Woman Feeds, Clothes Family of Five Thousand in Red Armenia.

A curly-headed little girl with dark, sparkling eyes and perfect features; an upright, manly little chap who tries to be brave and some day is going to be a real man; these, multiplied by the hundred and thousand ragged, homeless, almost starved, and alone in the world, where fate's cruel decree has left them amid a blaze of color and the grandeur of the wild, romantic Caucasus.

Such are the daily surroundings of Miss Mabel Farrington, formerly well-known Los Angeles college girl, later teacher at the Citrus Union High School at Azusa, and now in charge of the orphanage work for the American Commission for the Relief of the Near East at Erivan, Russian Armenia, at the foot of Mt. Ararat.

A graphic letter from Miss Farrington, giving the touching details of the immensity of the sorrow and tragedy the little band of American men and women is helping to heal, and of the daily tasks that are connected with feeding and caring for more than 20,000 orphans, has just reached Los Angeles. It was dated May 8 and was brought to this country by Mr. Maynard, one of the workers with Miss Farrington, who has returned to take a rest of a few months following an attack of typhus.

FAMILY OF THOUSANDS.

Last April Miss Farrington was made supervisor of the orphanages run by the American commission, and a month later took over twenty-eight other orphanages previously conducted by the Armenian government.

"I have a family of more than 5000 orphans," writes Miss Farrington. "Am feeding or estimating rations for 20,000—15,000 in the region of Erivan and 5000 in Georgia. Have a shelter house of 1221 poor little kiddies without clothes, beds or much of anything. As fast as we can get clothes for them we send them out of the shelter houses to the other orphanages. A good many of these children are waifs that we pick up on the streets. This particular shelter house is a soup kitchen, also, and feeds about 2000 refugees."

The little orphans are gathered in and slowly fitted out with clothing. Food is coming in from various sources, Miss Farrington writes, and the children, as well as the refugees, are being fed and helped in every way. Then, as occasions permit, the children are being sent to mountain regions and outside points, but it is slow work, the Los Angeles girl says, and the trains that are promised today are only promises. "We are beginning to appreciate Kipling's remark about the man who tries to hurry the East," she writes.

"A British General Milne," the letter continues, "presented us with seven Ford trucks and drivers last week. Sent them down from Tiflis on his return from inspection of our work here. I have the use of four daily from 8 to 12 to carry the foodstuffs from the station to the warehouses. At present I am rather hard pressed for flour. Bread is the staff of life here; if they haven't bread they haven't enough to eat. I'm giving one foont—about a pound—to each child per day, plus rice, beans, fish, meat or whatever the management happens to cook or have. Fortunately we have three carloads of wheat that came in from Persia, which I'm getting made into flour. Two nurses who arrived today said 400,000 tons had been sent by the United States Food Commission, and I hope some of it arrives soon."

HOUSES OVERCROWDED.

The work of the American relief workers is not all feeding. There are nearly 50,000 refugees in Erivan, and less buildings to care for them than there were in the days when the normal population was only 33,000 instead of 75,000, as it is now. Many of the buildings were destroyed by the Turks during their occupation, and others were demolished by the Armenians, in retaliation. The relief commission took over a public bathhouse, and is supplying the necessity of an occasional bath at the rate of 400 to 450 per day.

Many heart-tearing sights fall to the lot of the Americans every day, the young woman writes. "Received twenty-two orphans this morning and had to put them all in one place," Miss Farrington says in her letter. "They are all in a shelter house, and are all that are left of one district—Sassoon, Turkish Armenia. They are very brave—all gone but for this remnant of twenty-two orphans. The government asked us to 'please keep them together.'"

And all this misery en masse—these groups of orphans, remnants of districts, these hungry, homeless mites of humanity, the stunned and stolid refugees, and all the sights that go with a ravished, blood-seared country, are placed, as for the purpose of deep contrast, into a setting of beauty and loftiness, the letter says.

FLOWERS ABOUND.

"I never saw such brilliantly colored fields as are to be found near Garmalvo," Miss Farrington writes. "Wonderful wild bachelor buttons of enormous size, wild iris and gorgeous purple larkspurs. Then there were brilliant red poppy fields and fields of yellow flowers and mustard. The poppy fields were much like our California poppy fields, only red instead of yellow."

Miss Farrington is the daughter of Mrs. S. A. Farrington of Claremont. She is a graduate of the University of California, studied at the University of Southern California, and is a member of the Alpha Chi Omega Sorority. She began her relief work as a reconstruction aide of the medical department, United States Army, before sailing on the Leviathan last February as a member of the American Commission for Relief of the Near East. She formerly was a Times correspondent at El Monte.

SOLDIERS NEED MORE JOBS.

City Bureau has Placed Over Nine Thousand—Still Men Come.

Though the armistice was signed nine months ago and more than 3,000,000 United States soldiers have been demobilized, returned service men continue to apply for employment at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Replacement Bureau in the north annex at the City Hall in large numbers. Up to and including closing time last Saturday evening 9079 men had been placed in jobs by the bureau, but Chairman E. H. Bagby asks employers to remember that more men are arriving from overseas every day looking for work. Sixty-nine new men registered on one day last week, as many as on most days soon as after the large California units had returned. The Federal government is highly pleased with the work of the local replacement bureau, which is in the first ranks of similar bureaus throughout the country.

MANY GOOD JOBS ARE GOING BEGGING HERE.

SEVEN HUNDRED PLACES FOR MEN AND TWO HUNDRED FOR WOMEN OPEN.

Emil J. Bernatche, in charge of the local office, of the United States Department of Labor, says that there are more than 200 jobs for women going abegging in his office today and that the number of positions opened to men is nearly 700. This latter figure does not include the 110 free jobs opened to service men listed with the Soldiers' and Sailors' Replacement Bureau at 226 South Broadway. Among the jobs listed in the commercial (men and women) division and women's industrial divisions at 307 South Broadway, are several opportunities for male stenographers at $100 per month and up; one Elliott Fisher biller, $100; one comptometer operator, $120; one photographer at $100; a dictaphone operator, $100; railroad clerks, $100-125 per month; clerk-accountant, $85-100 per month; tea-coffee clerks, $50-60 per month; several stock clerks at good salaries, and several chainmen-title abstract men, salaries to be arranged; restaurant cooks, $50-75 per month; domestics, $40-60; elevator operators, $15 per week; pressers, $15-20 per week; seamstresses, $10-15 week; janitresses, $45-50 per month, and all kinds of hotel and restaurant help.

In the men's division at corner of Spring and Court streets, the boards will show opportunities for millwrights, cabinetmakers, furniture polishers, window washers (high work, printers, upholsterers, metal platers, metal polishers, autobody builders, mattress makers, carpenters, machinists, tank riveters and solders, asphalt rakers, blacksmiths, and scores of other trades at good wages.

Had the merchants and manufacturers and others registered the above opportunities with private employment bureaus, to secure said positions the jobless men and women of Los Angeles would of necessity been required to pay at least $2450, but as it is, absolutely no fee is charged directly or indirectly to either employer or employee for the services rendered in connecting the person with the job.

Many persons are under the impression that they must fill out a lengthy questionnaire before being directed to a position from the public employment bureaus. This is not true. With a few simple questions the examiner can tell whether the applicants for a job is a skilled workman at any trade or bluffing. Within five minutes a workman may be regarded for a job, or sent on his way as an imposter. Judging from the number of positions filed with this office, the examiner says, employers realize that the best way to make contented citizens is to give the worker the full amount of his earnings and to protect him from exploitation by those who seek profit by charging applicants an enormous fee for the privilege of obtaining employment; and he urges all persons seeking employment to have patience and to trust and patronize the agencies established by the State of California to provide work for them.

ECLECTRIC COLLEGE GROWING

At the monthly social and dance of the Eclectric College of Chiropractics, 321 South Hill street night before last, Dr. Walter J. Mitchell, register of the college, stated in the course of his address that the college had grown in four years from three rooms to 300 rooms and has as much equipment as any other three institutions of the kind on the Pacific Coast. About 200 students of the college attended the social.

FOR HURTS IN COLLISION.

A verdict of $8119 damages was awarded to Francis M. Shupe, former motorcycle racer, in Judge Monroe's court yesterday against F. C. Rodolph and his wife, for injuries he received in an automobile collision at American avenue and State street, Long Beach. The defendants contended that at the time of the accident, Mr. Shupe was speeding.

Tobacco Hardens the Arteries, Overtaxes the Heart and Shortens Life

Says Dr. Connor, Who Suggests a Simple Test to Find If It Is Hurting You. Can You Stand It?

New York.—Dr. Connor, formerly of Johns Hopkins hospital, says: Hundreds of thousands of men who smoke and chew and who believe themselves healthy are suffering from progressive organic ailments. They would never have been afflicted had it not been for the use of tobacco and most of them would soon get well if they would only stop the use of tobacco.

The best known habit-forming principal of tobacco is nicotine, but the most deadly and demoralizing is furfural. Both are deadly poison, which, when absorbed by the system slowly, but surely, affect the nerves, membranes, tissues, vital organs and vitality of the body.

The harmful effect of tobacco varies and depends on circumstances and the individual. In some it causes general debility, others catarrh of the throat, indigestion, constipation extreme nervousnesses, sleeplessness, loss of memory, lack of will power, cowardice and fear, mental confusion, etc.; in others it causes heart disease, bronchial troubles, hardening of the arteries, palpitation of the heart, tuberculosis, blindness, cancer and the common affliction known as tobacco heart.

If you use tobacco in any form you easily detect its harmful effects by making the following simple tests: Read aloud a page from a book. If your voice becomes muffled, hoarse and indistinct and you must frequently clear your throat, the chances are that your throat is affected by catarrh and it may be the beginning of very serious catarrhal trouble. Next, in the morning, before taking your usual smoke, walk up three flights of stairs at a regular pace, then stop. If you find that you are out of breath, if your heart beat is forced, trembling or irregular, you may be the victim of a functional or organic heart trouble. If you feel that you must smoke or chew to quiet your nerves, you are a slave to the tobacco habit and are slowly poisoning yourself with the insidious deadly drugs, nicotine and furfural. In either case, you have just two alternatives—keep on with your self-poisoning process regardless of the dangers, and suffer the consequences, or rid yourself of the habit and escape the dangers.

You can overcome the craving and stop the tobacco habit in a very short time by using the following inexpensive formula: Go to any drug store and ask for Nicotol. Take one tablet after each meal and in a comparatively short time you will have no desire for tobacco. The craving will have left you. With the nicotine poisoning out of your system your general health will quickly improve.

Note: When asked about Nicotol, one of our leading druggists said: "Nicotol is truly a wonderful remedy for the tobacco habit. It is way ahead of anything we have ever sold before. We are authorized by the manufacturers to refund the money to every dissatisfied customer and we would not permit the use of our name unless the remedy possessed unusual merit." Nicotol is sold in this city under an iron-clad money-back guarantee by all up-to-date druggists, including all the Sun, the Logan and the Chambers Drug Stores.

TAILLESS NOW.

Di Vico's comet should now be within 300,000,000 miles of the sun, but at that distance away its gases are frozen solid by the zero cold of distant space. When, however, it approaches as near the sun as the earth, the vivifying rays of that luminary will melt and expand those gases and set up convective currents among them, some of them boiling up towards the sun, and others being driven back by the impact of the sun's rays, thus forming that weird thing—a comet's tail.

The comet itself will probably have a bright nucleus, surrounded by a hazy, nebulous envelope of gases, which the telescope will show as permeated with clouds of illuminated dust, swirling and streaming in a state of violent agitation. In any event it will be an interesting object for astronomical investigation, and if its course should lie within a few millions of miles of the earth, it will be a fine spectacle for the unscientific observer.

ANOTHER COMING.

There is another comet belonging to the Neptune family which will be due a year later. It is Brorson's comet of 1847, also with a calculated period of seventy-four years. It may be delayed a year or so, or it may arive in advance of its predicted time, and both come into our skies at the same time. When it does make its next appearance it will be studied with better instruments than any which existed three-quarters of a century ago, and by means of that are boiling within its furnace of seething commotion and what other new branch of chemical and optical science—spectrum analysis—we shall be able to determine what elements luminous particles are being shot with the velocity of light far out into the distant confines of our solar system. It is a fascinating study.

Ocean-Going Zoo Rescues Local Woman.

Mrs. Maud Hayes.

SHIPWRECKED in a calm sea and picked up by an ocean-going zoo, was the unusual experience of Mrs. Maude Hayes, wife of Scott Hayes, son of former President Rutherford B. Hayes, according to word received from her yesterday by her mother, Mrs. S. T. Anderson, 1626 Shatto street.

Mrs. Hayes, who is well known in Los Angeles and in theatrical circles of both America and Europe as Berle Hope, sailed from New York, May 20, on board the Chilean mail steamer Limari. On June 6, the ship was wrecked off Santa Rosa, Peru, in a calm sea and some hours later a storm broke and the passengers were forced to leave in small boats.

They were picked up five miles from the wreck by the steamer Mantaro, which carried a traveling menagerie. The lions, tigers and monkeys were driven frantic by the storm, and imperiled the lives of the passengers in their efforts to break their cages. Some of the monkeys did escape, Mrs. Hayes writes her mother, and fled to all parts of the ship.

Although more than 300 lives were lost in the sea port towns on the Coast during the storm, Mrs. Hayes relates that not one person on the Limari was injured.

TO GAS RANCH PESTS.

New Method of Fumigation to be Shown by Farm Bureau.

Farm Adviser Hodgson announces that a public fumigation school for citrus growers will be held under the auspices of the Whittier farm bureau center, Tuesday, August 19, at 9 a.m. Many prominent fumigators and experts will take part in the programme, which will include a complete discussion of the new method of liquid hydrocyanic acid gas fumigation.

Prof. H. J. Quayle, of the citrus experiment station, will review the development of the new method and point out some advantages. Horticultural Commissioner H. J. Ryan will deal with fumigation standards and pest control work. S. A. Stowell, commercial fumigator of Covina, will present the commercial operator's ideas as to the new method. Farm Adviser Hodgson will speak briefly on farm bureau work over the county. L. C. Nanney, director of the local Whittier center, will preside. The latest appliances for using liquid gas for fumigation will be exhibited.

PLAN SPECIAL COURSE.

Local School to Give Instruction on Business Libraries.

A special group of courses concerning business libraries will be given in the Los Angeles library school next year, it was announced yesterday. A series of lectures on technical books will be given by Miss Elsie M. Baechtold, principal of the department of science and industry, formerly librarian of the engineering library of the University of Illinois.

Miss Baechtold's lectures will be supplemented by courses giving the principles of indexing, filing and business management as applied to libraries. This will be given in addition to the regular library school course which prepares for work in any type of library. Graduates of the school have gone into many different kinds of libraries and the demand for assistants trained in the school is greater than the supply, it is stated.

No entrance examination for the school is required of college graduates. For others an examination in history, literature, and current events will be given at the Public Library, September 6. Information may be obtained from the principal of the school.

AX-HANDLE BIDS.

Government Wants to Dispose of Surplus War Stock.

The United States War Department has more ax handles than it needs and it wants to get rid of them. According to information received by the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, 228 Wilcox Building, the government is inviting bids on the following material:

Thirty-eight thousand two hundred and three ax handles, new, thirty-six inches long, single bit, oval, and are all bent hickory or oak run of timber. Handles are packed five dozen to a crate. Crates are in good condition.

No bid for less than 100 dozen handles will be considered. A deposit in bond, certified check, Liberty Bond, or legal tender amounting to 10 per cent. of total amount of bid must be submitted with bid; and all material must be removed by successful bidder from government custody immediately upon receipt of notice of acceptance of bid.

All bids are subject to rules and regulations contained in bid form, copies of which can be obtained by applying to 425 Central Building. Bids must be submitted in triplicate and must be mailed in special bid envelopes to Zone Supply Officer, Surplus Property Division, Twenty-first and Oregon avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., in time for opening at 10 a.m., September 2, 1919.

The Experience of Godowsky and Other Famous Pianists in making records for player pianos was such that they decided to cease their work for all such instruments and to confine their future reproductions exclusively to the Ampico—presented in its highest form in the

KNABE AMPICO
Reproducing Piano

Because of many erroneous claims, made recently by agents for player pianos and so-called "reproducing" pianos, we feel that the above explanation is due the public.

On Feb. 16th, 1919, Godowsky wrote—

"Although I have gone through this process before, I must state it at this moment, in the flush of enthusiasm, that no other recording of mine on any instrument whatsoever gives me the deep, unalloyed satisfaction which these reproductions on the Ampico do. And, furthermore, this applies to the records made by my fellow artists, whose renditions it has been my pleasure to hear.

(Signed) "LEOPOLD GODOWSKY."

—and again on June 24th, 1919, Godowsky wrote—

"Since the progress of the Ampico has left the other competitors far behind, I decided to give my future reproductions to the wonderful Knabe Ampico exclusively.

(Signed) "LEOPOLD GODOWSKY."

The Ampico may be secured in the KNABE—"World's Best Piano"—in the artistic HAINES BROS.' PIANO — and in the sweet toned FRANKLIN—prices range from $775 to $3300. Terms.

PROOF STRONGER THAN LETTERS

So far as letters can prove anything, these letters from Godowsky, the world's greatest pianist, and letters from scores of other world-famous pianists and critics which we have previously published, prove the KNABE AMPICO REPRODUCING PIANO without a peer.
—But there is stronger proof than ANY letters.

The highest praise that could be written by any pianist cannot equal the evidence that was given by the Knabe Ampico Reproducing Piano in its joint recital with Godowsky at Trinity Auditorium the night of June 5. This joint recital was the "acid test"—the reproductions of Godowsky's playing were subjected to direct comparison with the virtuoso's original performance, every note and tone of the original and the reproduction critically compared one against the other. The result was a unanimous verdict that the work of the Ampico and the artist are in every detail IDENTICAL. The lavish praise showered upon the KNABE AMPICO by wholly disinterested critics and musicians has far exceeded anything that we would venture to say in our own advertising.

No Other Reproducing Piano or Player Has Ever Been Subjected to Direct Comparison in Public With the Playing of World Famous Pianists

No other instrument could successfully meet this "acid test."

PUBLIC RECITALS DAILY—Come in and judge for yourself whether or not there is any other instrument that can even be compared with the KNABE AMPICO.

THE LIVE ONES.
The difference between a buccaneer and a profiteer is that the buccaneer is dead.

HAS A KICK.
How about having the law on the dairyman who is specializing on buttermilk because of the kick in his cow?

UNSOCIABLE.
It would take more than the great covenant to get President Wilson and Senator Sherman to sleep on the same folding bed.

PATRIOTS ALL.
The packers say that they do not put their stuff in cold storage for profit. They are merely keeping it fresh for breakfast. Money is the last thing they think about—when they go to bed at night.

FARM LIFE.
Farmers and ranchers are beginning to advertise for stenographers. They want to dictate to somebody besides the government. Pretty soon they will be putting in cash registers and adding machines.

THE PERFORMERS.
Managers are threatening to take the place of striking actors in the Chicago theaters. But this would not appease the public as, according to reports in certain circles, the managers are bad actors.

NAKED TRUTH.
One report from fashion circles in Paris is that skirts are going to be short, while another authority states with equal emphasis that they will be longer. At the beach they are compromising by going without.

A TUMBLE IN FLIVVERS?
Now that Henry Ford has been awarded six cents damages against the Chicago Tribune the chronic automobile buyer and trader will naturally expect a reduction in the price of Fords. Henry has a reputation for being willing to divide with the public the profits on his labor and investments.

OH, SO MUCH EASIER!
A thirsty clubman of Newport, R. I., has declared his intention of leaving America, never to return, saying that prohibition has interfered with his personal liberty. The writer pities any man who leaves American soil in order to find a drink—or for any other reason. At the same time, let it be freely admitted that for many of us it is much easier to repeat the old toast, "My country, right or wrong!" than to say, "My country—may she always be boozy; but boozy or bone-dry, my country!"

A WHALE OF A STORY.
Most fishers are great dreamers, not to say prevaricators; but it remained for a modern Ike Walton of New York to demonstrate the possibility of fishing while enjoying a refreshing slumber. After going to bed, this man says, he tied a line, with a baited hook on the end of it, to his big toe and tossed the line out of the window. Toward morning he was awakened by a jerk at the line and, jumping out of bed, he pulled up a fine trout which he handed over to the cook with the request that she prepare his breakfast immediately so that he might go fishing. Perhaps the phrase, "They bite while you sleep," can be applied to other birds than cooties.

THE KING HABIT.
In a small way it looks as if royalty were trying to stage a comeback in Europe. In Hungary an archduke is holding the spotlight for the moment and in Russia a princely relative of the ancient house has been pledged the support of the monarchists. Emperor Charles has refused overtures from Austria, and there is still a formidable Hohenzollern party in Prussia. Royalty is a weed that thrives in the sun, but may nevertheless come up in the dark from a soil moistened with blood. But as there have been kings ever since men began to write history, so there will be men who think in terms of kings when authority is mentioned.

WHO THROWS THEM OUT?
As a result of the shopmen's strike there has been a tie-up of both freight and passenger traffic on branch lines of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad and thousands of miners and their families in the Logan, Coal River and Cabin Creek fields are reported to be suffering from hunger. Of course the wretched conditions into which their families have been placed will be laid, by the union men, at the doors of the corporations. That is to be expected. But are there not always two sides to a question? Instead of saying that thousands of men have been thrown out of work by a strike, would it not be proper (because true) to say plainly, "Thousands of men have thrown themselves out of employment"? The "throwing out" is always done by the unions, while the employers are cursed for all the trouble that follows.

LOS ANGELES INVADED.

LOS ANGELES has been invaded by a new gang of radical agitators of the soviet type. They are sowing discord in local industries and preaching the Bolshevist doctrine of a general strike. They have but hazy ideas themselves as to what would come afterwards. Their intelligence seems limited to the single idea of starting something. The car strike is their first blow. This week people are not to ride. Next week they are not to eat.

To the members of labor unions they assert that the general strike is certain to stamp out free industry here and make Los Angeles a "union town." To workmen not affiliated with unions they say that the general strike will result in turning all the industries over to the workers, and that in the future the men will employ a manager instead of a manager hiring men. They insinuate that the plan has worked in Russia, but a capitalistic press is keeping the facts away from the people. They make common cause with the I.W.W. and say that the time has come for the proletariat to move over to the west side of the city and take possession of the fine homes.

In short, everything that has failed in Russia and Hungary would, if they had their way, be attempted here. They would have everyone ride free on the street cars, and the property owners pay the cost of operation. They would ration all food supplies and sell bread, meat and milk only to persons holding cards vised by their soviet committee. They would seize all the funds in the banks, rifle safe deposit boxes and spend the loot where, in their opinion, it would do the most good.

They pretend to have discovered the mistakes that caused their general strike to fail in Seattle and Winnipeg, and claim that they learned in those two abortive attempts how to make such a strike succeed. For one thing, they say if another Ole Hanson should appear they would hang him above the main entrance to the City Hall, which would be cleared of duly elected and appointed city officials and filled with the appointees of the soviets.

II.

TO THOSE not familiar with the workings of the radicals this picture will appear grossly overdrawn. So long as the surface of society is not broken the uninformed cannot conceive that malignant rogues are seeking to mine the subsurface and plant it with explosive bombs. The average American has such confidence in American institutions that his mind cannot grasp the idea of their possible overthrow. He fails to pass from the visible fact to the idea behind and he argues that what did not happen yesterday and the day before cannot happen tomorrow. But The Times warns that the world is passing through a cycle of violence and that any temporizing with the forces of anarchy, whether intellectual or physical, is perilous.

Los Angeles has been inflicted with periodical invasions of radical labor-unionists for a period of years. Here alone, of all the cities on the west coast, the torch of free industry and independent labor has never been dimmed. And the walking delegates have turned on us the envious, covetous glances that the barbarians of old turned upon the fertile valleys and populous cities of ancient Italy. Los Angeles has been a bridgehead of industrial freedom, a haven of refuge to the wage slaves of other less prosperous communities. So the industries of Los Angeles have been marked for slaughter.

Economic conditions are unsettled here, as elsewhere. They staggered under the shock of a world war and have not yet fully regained their equilibrium. The high cost of living has occasioned unrest and the pinch of poverty is acute in the midst of a fictitious prosperity. The Times signaled the approach of these conditions; it has sounded warnings that the scant attention paid to production would lead to a shortage in necessities and that high prices would be inevitable. It warned that the strikes and sabotage fomented by the radicals would make these conditions worse. And the only remedy proposed by the radicals is more strikes and more sabotage.

III.

THE appeals of the radical agitators have never caused the independent workmen to waver in the past, and The Times does not believe that they will do so now. What have its proponents to offer? Do they propose higher wages? The average wages paid skilled labor in Los Angeles are equal to the union scales. This is not, and never has been, a cheap labor town. Under closed-shop conditions there would be no increase in pay. Do the agitators propose greater freedom for the workmen? All the leading industries in Los Angeles now recognize the principle of collective bargaining. The employees elect committees to discuss wage scales and working conditions with the employers; and each industry carries into effect both the letter and the principle of self-determination. The men of one craft are not bound by the action of the members of some other craft in another part of the country. There are no labor dictators; and where there are no tyrants there can be no slaves.

These soviet propagandists talk a great deal about labor solidarity, rights of workmen and other abstractions; but what concrete benefit can they offer to those who would give up their industrial independence and become subjects of a closed-shop autocracy? What return would they make for the monthly tribute every employee of a closed-shop industry is compelled to pay for the privilege of working? Conditions in the free industries of Los Angeles are the best in the country. Measured by the average cost of living here and elsewhere, the wages paid are the highest. What have the radicals to offer to induce an independent workman to rebel against his own prosperity?

If these agitators came with some definite proposal to increase production and thereby decrease the present high cost of living, despite their bloody record, they would be entitled to a hearing. If they brought the promise of new industries and a greater output they would awaken the interest of the public at large. But the thing they propose is to close every industry in what they term a sympathetic strike.

IV.

AND WHAT is to come after? When the cars have all stopped running; when the butcher shop no longer has meat and the bake shop is without bread; when the dairy herds go unmilked and children are dying through lack of nourishment; when the undertaking establishments are closed and the dead are without interment, what then? Will the working people of Los Angeles be happier or more prosperous when the pay envelope disappears from every home? If the general strike should succeed, what after?

This question has been asked wherever such a strike has been attempted. The answer of the soviet propagandists is that the workmen will reorganize the industries and the capitalistic class will be eliminated. But can they point to a single instance where this result has been achieved? The capitalists were driven from Petrograd; but the proletariat soon followed because there was none to pay for work done. Under our modern civilization the pay envelope is as necessary to the workman's home as are air, water, fuel and sunlight. Wherever the pay envelope has been abolished, hunger and misery have taken up their abode. The employers were driven out of Petrograd; and the city's population has fallen from 2,000,000 to less than 600,000. Bela Kun drove the capitalists out of Hungary; but the very proletariat that elevated Bela Kun to power soon rose and forced him into exile.

The ancient edict that man shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow has not been abrogated. The world has lived by its labor ever since the human race has existed. Machinery is proving a substitute for brute force, but intelligent labor is as necessary today as it was at the building of the pyramids. The prosperity of Los Angeles during the last twenty-five years is proof that, to reap its highest reward, labor must be free. There are no industrial wrongs in this community that soviet administration can right. The workmen are making good use of their liberty and there is no occasion for paying tribute to walking delegates.

V.

UNTIL this radical assault is repelled the whole community will suffer. But it must be met by a united and fearless front. Any yielding now would have dire consequences. The moral and material support of every citizen who has the good of the city at heart must be given to the industries that are bearing the brunt of the attack. On the question of open shop there can be no compromise. It is the principle on which the prosperity of Los Angeles is grounded, and principles are not to be compromised. Every employer of labor in Los Angeles must prepare for the defense by giving to his employees the highest wages and the best working conditions that the industry permits. Who fails to do this is as great an enemy to independent industry as the Bolshevist.

Workmen who remain loyal may be assured that they have the support of the best elements of the community. The public must be prepared to bear inconveniences until the strike is repelled; to walk if necessary until the cars are running again; to go without meat rather than force the butcher to yield to the demands of the agitators. It is every man's fight. There must be no slackers among employers; there must be no flinching on the part of the general public. Before united opposition the assault will soon break; for the agitators, though noisy, are weak. And they know in their own hearts that they are preaching to Los Angeles a doctrine of self-destruction.

PROBLEMS IN PROPORTION.
Every day something is said or printed which indicates the lack of a very important sense, the sense of proportion. Not long ago a newspaper headline informed us that the stupendous number of twenty thousand American soldiers married French girls. Now twenty thousand soldiers marching down Broadway, each one with his French bride, would make an impressive parade. But more than two million American soldiers were sent to France. The ratio that exists between twenty thousand and two million is the ratio of one to one one hundred. Therefore only one American soldier out of each one hundred married in France.

Mathematicians know that the mind cannot comprehend large numbers. They also know that in most cases it is not the quantity but the ratios that exist between quantities that are important. Algebraic expressions are artificial thought processes and they deal with relations and proportions. The value of thinking in proportions has escaped the popular imagination. At the very point where mathematicians have called symbols to their aid the untrained mind, with no idea at all of relative values, starts out on an uncharted sea.

Another illustration can be seen in the economic struggle going on everywhere. Railroad employees, who are already getting about three times as much pay as school-teachers, have solemnly informed the government that the cost of living must come down or their wages must go up. There is not supposed to be any sentiment in that ultimatum. It is a matter of pure arithmetic. They cannot eat unless they get more money. But the school-teachers also have to eat. If the same ratio exists between the number of meals eaten by railroad men and school-teachers that exists between the pay of railroad men and the pay of teachers it follows that the knights of the rail get nine meals to the teachers' three. They told the President of the United States that they were eating up all they could earn. There is no mathematical mystery about this. The railroad men are either the largest eaters in the country or they are profiteers. They also admit that if they are given more pay their employers will have to raise the freight rate. That in turn will raise the cost of living, and again the railroad men will be unable to eat.

Since mathematics can do nothing for the railroad men, let us return to the school-teachers. People must vote directly or indirectly on the pay of public school-teachers and that, of course, throws the whole matter open to attacks by loose thinkers. A school board never sees anything but a grand total, and totals are awful things to display before the eyes of a terrified populace. Voters never pause to consider that the subdivided burden would fall but lightly on each of them, while the benefits to the teachers and to the educational system would be relatively great.

Not long ago a California town held an election to create an additional fund for a very worthy purpose. The total sum to be raised amounted to several thousand dollars, and of course looked large in the aggregate. Each person in the community had a dreadful presentiment that he alone would have to bear the whole burden. Many friendships were strained and some were broken. Neighbors took sides and fought like gladiators of old. Yet, when the subject was examined in the cold light of arithmetic, the crushing burden for each citizen paying the average tax was found to be a total of eighteen cents for a whole year.

In proportion to her population France suffered a loss in killed on the battlefields of the great war seventy-eight times as great as ours. In spite of this fact there is a greater economic unrest here than in France. Congress is besieged by organizations clamorous for a reduction in the cost of living, and yet the ones making the greatest noise are the worst profiteers of all. Everybody in the United States is prosperous except the intellectuals, and they are not saying much. The prosperous artisans earn greatly disproportionate amounts, and that seems to be the secret of their heart-burnings.

All these difficulties and dissensions call loudly for educational treatment, and that leads us back again to the school-teachers, preachers, editors, book-keepers, office men and other educators. They will not be found wanting. They will not strike. Neither will they threaten to strike. They would not, even if they were organized, because there is something more than money in their work. They will continue to be the hope of democracy. Children of today who are taught to understand relations in numbers will have a better realization of related things. They will become voters and exercise their franchise more intelligently. Seeing, then, that purely commercial activities everywhere are adequately recompensed they will demand that educators, who give so little thought to their own personal welfare, be paid in proportion to the exceptionally valuable services which they render the nation.

RIPPLING RHYMES.

THE COMMON PEOPLE.

The common people round the troop, the Toms and Dicks and Harrys; one builds himself a nice new coop, one dies, another marries. The banker's clad in gaudy rags, his bank has marble portals; the hostler curries down his nags and both are common mortals. The tinsmith makes our motor cars, the blacksmith works his bellows, the poet soars among the stars and all are common fellows. We all are equal at our birth, one kid's just like another; and when we tumble off the earth, what man's above another? I walk along the churchyard aisles and, pensive, muse and ponder; the granite's reared in costly piles above that grave o'er yonder; and there a poor man sleeps alone, a friendless wight and daffy, above his head a simple stone, devoid of epitaphy. And both are sleeping just the same, the poor man and the Croesus; on earth they played the common game and now they're gone to pieces. In youth we all are gay and vain, in middle age we're sober; and all of us have ache and pain when life has reached October. The king, who has God-given right to be a nation's master, must leave his downy couch at night to hunt a porous plaster. It makes me tired to hear the talk of strata and of classes; we're just the plain old human flock, we're just the common masses. WALT MASON.

AIN'T IT THE TRUTH?

My Cousin Anne says, why is it
Some professions are so much
More self-patronizing than oth-
Ers, and opticians always wear
Eyeglasses, and their wives
Wear them, and they rig their Children out with them as soon
As they get old enough to keep Them on their noses; and success-
Ful dentists always fill their Mouths and their wives' mouths
And their family's mouths with
Gold and silver; but a barber
Will surround himself with hair-
Tonic for others, and allow his Own head to become as bald as a
Billiard ball, and lawyers very Rarely do any lawing on their Own hook, and who ever heard of
A surgeon with a leg off or an Arm off, or an appendix out, and
The homeliest woman in her home
Town runs a Beauty Parlor.

THREL FALL.

THE LANCER.

Well, anyhow, it is safe to assume that, as a result of the Tribune libel suit, Henry Ford has learned about Benedict Arnold, anarchy and the War of 1812. He has provided the world with considerable free entertainment and is the richer by the conservative sum of six cents.

And not the least of the results gained has been to expose a hollow fraud much indulged in these days—bogus authorship.

I don't know who started it, but some enterprising millionaire discovered that he could acquire a high-brow standing and a reputation for profundity by signing his name to articles written by obscure men with brains.

Since then the magazines and newspapers have been filled with solemn and elevating articles presumably written by baseball pitchers, fillum magnates, labor-union leaders and auto manufacturers. About the only class of people no longer seen in the magazines and publications are the writers.

I don't suppose there is any special harm in it. It furnishes employment to a good many writers; it furnishes the public with something to whisper about; it even furnishes the "authors" with a form of mild entertainment; during the long winter evenings they can puzzle through their articles and wonder what the words mean.

The only serious phase of the Ford libel suit is the shadow that it casts upon President Wilson and his good faith with the people of the United States.

Certainly Mr. Wilson owes some sort of very pointed explanation to the people who trusted him as to why he should have recommended to them that they vote for Mr. Ford for an office of the importance of United States Senator.

One of the cruel problems that confront many honest families is what to do with the little unfortunate who is now and then born with a piteous little benumbed brain, unequal to the struggle of life. Until now the family that produced a moron has had a tough time of it.

But there is no cloud without a lining of silver. A way has been shown at last.

Recent events have revealed that the world has a good opening for boys of defective intellect; they can become attaches of the State Department and participate in our diplomacy.

The latest inspiration of the great experts now in charge of our foreign policy is to butt into Balkan politics and try to adjust the claims against Thrace.

Having shown an utter inability to handle the simplest and most obvious diplomatic problems, the State Department naturally rushes into a field which the great British diplomatic experts of Downing street have admitted quite candidly to be beyond their comprehension.

I can see no reason why folks should be surprised that Mrs. Kafitz should be found to be only comparatively attractive to the naked eye.

Pompadour, Du Barry, Cleopatra do not appear from the likenesses they left behind to have been especially beautiful women. And nearly all of them have shown a streak of coarseness. It is a strange thing; but the women who have had great power over men have often been molded of common material.

Cleopatra was a woman of the highest culture; was perhaps the most highly educated woman of her time (if not of all time.) Nevertheless she did not disdain to roam around Alexandria at night with Marc Antony, hammering at people's doors and running away like a bad little boy and girl on Halloween.

Until now no one seems to have been able to understand this anomaly; so I will let the light glow forevermore upon the riddle.

What men adore in women is the spirit of childhood—the glow of adorable youth. Women with a streak of coarseness are frequently exuberantly youthful. I haven't the distinction of Mrs. Kafitz's acquaintance; but I am willing to wager that she is full of the spirit of childhood.

Once in a long while a woman found with this unquenchable fire of youth is also well educated and charming; she is then the adorable child with the brain of a cultured woman—in fact, an immortal goddess. Of such are the vamps who have overthrown kings and changed the course of history.

Congress sometimes becomes a little more silly than necessary. As, for instance, in this high-cost-of-living investigation.

You might as well hold a solemn investigation to find out why a peaceable rainstorm is afflicted with thunder and lightning.

High cost of living has nothing in the world to do with profiteering, food hoarding or conspiracies. High cost depends solely upon the law of supply and demand.

As long as food is very scarce in the world food will be high. When it becomes plentiful it will be cheap. The only way we can bring down prices is to persuade Europe to find some other form of sport besides revolutions; and start to raising grub again.

Of course Congress knows this quite as well as everyone else. The extraordinary legislative gymnastics now in progress are just "bunk."

The actors' strike has brought out another form of suffering. Chorus girls don't wear tights any more; but they have to use face powder on their bare legs; so the high cost of living marches onward.

THE LANCER.

An advance of about 40 per cent. in canned stuff is promised. If this thing keeps up tying a can to a man will be a good deal like conferring a decoration. The double-cross, anyhow.

NOT MUCH.

A little bit of life,
A little bit of love,
A little bit of happiness
And money; just a shove
Up the hill and over
To make our journey
And yet we do not ask much,
We say to all we meet:
Not much, not much,
Only all there is
Of richness and of beauty
In a world like this!

A little bit of fortune,
A little bit of smile;
A little bit of nowadays,
A little afterwhile;
A little bit to dine on,
A little bit to sip,
A tender arm, a red cheek,
A kiss upon the lip;
Not much, not much,
Only all that men
Have fought for and toiled
And always will again!

A little bit of gladness,
A little bit of song;
A little bit of goodness,
A helping over wrong;
A little bit of friendship,
A little bit of rest,
A little of beauty
In a love-lined nest;
Not much,
Just enough to
The life ever-
Come true in dream!

MOOSE CAMP ON CANYON LAKE.

Fraternity Anticipates Big Government Work.

Plan to Impound Water in San Dimas Ravine.

Counterpart of Roosevelt Dam will Help Ranchers.

Taking time by the forelock the Moose Lodge of Pomona has leased a beautiful camp site in San Dimas Canyon just beyond the point where the big lake which is to be formed in the canyon will have its farthest bounds. On this spot will be erected a fine pavilion for the benefit of the members of the lodge and their families, while in the rear will be built a number of cozy cottages by members of the order. Already several men have chosen building sites and will get their cottages built before the government improvements are completed.

Besides members of the Moose Lodge, a considerable number of others are already selecting sites and erecting summer homes. According to the leasing terms of the government, the lessee must pay a yearly rental of $15, and is required to put up some kind of a habitation. This may be very modest, but it must answer as a habitation. Some of the cottages are quite elegant, Dr. C. E. Smith, of this city, being among those putting up substantial houses. His summer house will cost about $1000. E. R. Yundt, C. W. Guerin, A. M. Lichty and others are already improving their lots. These lots are one-fourth of an acre in extent. All of them border the canyon, being mostly on the hillside either along the proposed lake or a short distance farther up the canyon.

At present the canyon is practically dry, the forest rangers stating that this is the dryest season for sixteen years. Ordinarily there is a good stream flowing down San Dimas Canyon the year 'round. Forest rangers are serving special notice on all campers to be careful of fires and the manner in which they leave any kind of a fire.

Work has already commenced on the great dam, which is to hold the winter waters from running off and conserving the same for irrigation in the valley below. For four weeks the engineers have been making lateral excavations preparatory to starting the dam proper. The dam will be one-half mile from the mouth of the canyon, at a point where the hills jut closely together and gigantic boulders stand nearly across the canyon. A more ideal spot for a dam could scarcely be found. This dam will be a counterpart of the great Roosevelt Dam in Arizona, and will not be completed until the close of 1920, about in time to catch the winter rains of 1921.

When the great circular dam is completed it will be 135 feet high, and will hold back the water for a distance of a mile and a half, forming a beautiful lake along which will be dotted the cottages of those who have secured sites. Most of the lots are already taken. Just at the upper end of the lake, exactly a mile and three-quarters from the mouth of the canyon will be located the Moose camp, where a collection of cottages will also stand. A few rods below these, and on the east side of the lake will be a public playground owned by the county. Several other good camping grounds have already been retained by the county for the general public.

Within a few months the mountain road to the upper part of the canyon will be completed, this to be very similar to the road which leads to Big Bear Lake. It descends to the creek bed about a fourth of a mile below the head of the lake. Already arrangements are made and materials on hand for a telephone line to the West Fork, which is at the head of the lake and on the west side of the canyon. This will be installed and working before the coming winter. It is also planned to remove all the trees and brush now in the lake bed, making it excellent for boating and fishing, as it is proposed to stock the canyon with fish as soon as it is filled with water.

A MELON FOR EACH AMERICAN.

Imperial Valley's Big Crop Nets Growers Nearly Two Millions.

From a little more than 14,000 acres in Imperial Valley more than 118,000,000 cantaloupes were raised this year, or a melon for every man, woman and child in America, according to figures compiled by I. T. Sparks, traveling freight and passenger agent for the Southern Pacific. Two and one-half million crates and 7830 cars were required to move the crop. The gross returns totaled approximately $9,208,000 and the net returns to the growers were $1,710,072.

From 800 acres, more than 12,000 tons of watermelons were raised, netting the growers $66,240, or $82 an acre. In June more than 100 carloads of other products moved from the valley with a net value to the ranchers of $1,122,660.

The total value of the products shipped from the valley in June more than 1000 cars was $11,356,140 gross and $2,898,972 net. The approximate cost to rent, cultivate land, plant and grow these products and deliver them to consumers was $8,457,168.

MAJOR OF ENGINEERS HOME FROM OVERSEAS.

Maj. John H. Skeggs, 122 South Mariposa street, formerly senior highway engineer with the United States Bureau of Roads in Los Angeles, and who served with the Engineers Corps of the United States Army two years, has returned to Los Angeles, having been discharged from service in New York July 25 last. He entered the service in June 1917 with the rank of captain and was given the rank of major the following December. He was overseas eleven months and participated in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne battles.

BULL CHOKES; HE SUES.

J. Rippens and Theodore Dykzeul, owners of a thoroughbred bull, demanded $400, the alleged value of the bull, from Frank A. Cooper in a suit filed yesterday, charging that the bull was choked to death through his negligence. Mr. Cooper was engaged, the complaint states, to dehorn the bull, but was careless in tying it to a post so that the animal choked to death.

SUMMER STUDY HUGE SUCCESS.

Thousands of Students Make up Time "Flu" Cost.

Vacation Schools Pronounced a Financial Success.

Board will Receive Report at Meeting Tomorrow.

Several thousand school children, who failed to make their grades last winter because of the epidemic of influenza, have made up the lost time and are now in a position to go ahead, as a result of the summer courses which have been conducted at the high and elementary schools, Harry M. Shafer, assistant Superintendent of Schools, who has been in charge of the summer work, stated yesterday.

The vacation-time classes have just closed, after a most successful month.

"At this time," Mr. Shafer said, "it is impossible to say how many pupils attended the classes, but there were easily 25,000, and all these benefited by the work."

"A great many students lost a lot of time during the influenza epidemic, and as a result failed to get promotion. Many of these have made this work up. Others have built up on subjects in which they were weak, and still others have done work that will benefit them during the coming season."

Several thousand parents have postponed their vacations because of the summer classes and are now planning to leave the city for a few weeks, or until the regular school term begins, it was learned yesterday.

The weather conditions have been good for the students and the teachers. It has remained cool and classroom work has not been any harder than it was during the regular term. All the teachers who have been occupied with the summer-school work are enthusiastic over the results that have been secured.

The students have studied diligently, Mr. Shafer states, and none of them seemed to have missed the holiday. The classes were conducted only during the forenoon. The attendance was large.

From a financial standpoint, the session was a wonderful success, Mr. Shafer declares. He says it is one of the best investments the city has ever made and is sure to show its benefits as soon as the regular classes are resumed.

Mr. Shafer inspected all the schools and is now preparing a report to be submitted to the Board of Education at its meeting tomorrow night. The report will show the total number of pupils who attended the classes and the amount of work done.

AMERICAN LEGION TO HAVE NOTABLE BALL.

SHRINE AUDITORIUM WILL RETAIN DECORATIONS. BIG BAND'S DEBUT.

Those who did not have a chance to see the Shrine Auditorium in its gala dress for the naval ball last week, will have a chance to see the beautifully-decorated hall at a ball which is to be given by the American Legion next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, in honor of the sailors and the sailors now in the city. A group of Red Cross and army nurses will act as the reception committee.

The big band being organized by the local post of the legion, under the direction of J. G. Foster of the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank, and which will be one of the largest in the country, will make its debut. It is to be equipped with the finest instruments and handsome uniforms. Walter Bronkop, chairman of the Executive Committee, states that $1000 has been appropriated for the equipment and maintenance of the band.

The band will be available for all public occasions and it is expected to play an important part in the fiestas next winter. Considerable talent has already been enrolled and every ex-member of any musical organization in the army, navy or Marine Corps is urged to join. There will be a meeting of the band men this afternoon at 2 o'clock at 600 St. Paul street. All wishing to affiliate with the band and the legion are invited to attend.

WIFE GETS DIVORCE.

But Court Will Call Attention of District Attorney to Case.

"He went to San Francisco on a vacation and was absent a week. When he came back, he said he would not live with me any longer," testified Ethel L. Fisher in divorce proceedings against Cassius C. Fisher in Judge Valentine's court yesterday.

"He told me he had found another woman he thought more of than he did me," she continued.

The court wanted to know if there was any agreement between Mr. and Mrs. Fisher as to obtaining a divorce. She replied that he told her to go ahead and get a divorce and he would pay for it. She declared he did pay for it, and that she turned the money over to a lawyer.

Judge Valentine gave Mrs. Fisher a decree, gave her the custody of the children and ordered Mr. Fisher to pay his wife $15 a week for the support of the minor boys. The court ordered the transcript of the case written up and sent to the District Attorney.

OIL

SUNSHINE OIL CORPORATION OF TEXAS INC.

Opportunity for You in Oil

THE TIME

To invest in oil is right now; the growing number of automobiles, trucks, tractors, aeroplanes, oil furnaces and oil-burning ships, besides the lubrication of all the whirling wheels of commerce are making an increasing demand for oil. You know what happens to prices of oil when demand is increasing faster than supply. For many years to come the owners of oil wells will have increasingly valuable assets. This is the oil age. MAKE IT MEAN SOMETHING TO YOU.

THE PLACE.

Wise and practical oil men are flocking to Texas. Why? The reason is plain—they are "getting the oil." They are getting bigger wells and more money for the oil. Their lead is a good one to follow. Texas is now the first State in production of oil. Most of the fields are new, only a year or two old. The Pecos field is being actively drilled and should break through in big production very soon.

THE PLAN.

The Victory Plat offers both ways of making oil profits. You own a lease all your own and a share in the oil produced on reserved drill sites by an active drilling campaign in the Pecos Texas Oil Fields.

Ask us about it. Send in the coupon.

NEW LEGION'S HIGH MISSION.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., Says it is Truly American.

Is a Mighty Force to Combat Bolshevistic Error.

Organization's Many Benefits for Members Told.

The American Legion is the spontaneous growth of the sentiments of the service men; its creed represents the thought of all; it is essentially a civilian organization; it is concerned primarily with the welfare of the United States and of its individual members. Among the thousands who aided in the early stages of its organization, there was absolute accord in the following principles:

First, the organization should be nonpartisan concerning itself possibly with policies, but never with partisan politics. Second, its membership should be composed of service men and women, regardless of whether they served overseas or were unfortunate enough to have their duty keep them in this country. Third, it should be really civilian, and in its councils, general and private, admiral and gob would be treated on the same basis.

Through all of its actions, the doctrine of Americanism stands foremost. By it, the impulses of patriotism generated in the great war will be crystallized and preserved for the future good of the nation. Its fields of useful activity are bounded only by the desires of its members.

There has been much talk about the Bolsheviki, the I.W.W. and the red flag Socialists. Many people have expressed fears concerning the attitude of our army on these menaces. There is no need for such fear. The strongest bulwark this country can have against lawless anarchy is this society composed of service men. The service man, having given up himself to his country, intends to see that this country which he loves comes to no harm.

It has been the policy of the American Legion, wherever I have come in contact with it, to play the game with all of the cards on the table. The service man will not tolerate any other form of organization. He wishes, at all times, to be able not only to tell anyone what he is doing, but equally to be able to find out anything that the organization, through some other branch, may be doing. To anyone who knows the American service man this is absolutely normal. He is square and will not associate himself with an organization unless it is square.

The reason I urge all service men not only to join, but to take an active part in the affairs of this organization is that through it they can express themselves. In its ranks they find the men who have done the same trick that they have done, and with whose ideas they are thoroughly in sympathy. They can make the organization what they wish, and I have no fear for anything that the organization may do so long as they take an active interest in it.

So far I have spoken mainly of how the men can use the organization for the benefit of this country. Of course, this benefits him, but there are other more practical methods of helping the service man which the organization is using, or may us if its members so desire. At this time there is established a reemployment bureau. In addition, there is the War Risk Insurance Department for handling questions of allotments, insurance, etc. In many of the communities clubhouses are established, which will form the meeting places where the thought of the community is interchanged and its opinions crystallized. In addition to these activities, which have been organized already, it lies within the power of the legion to institute a system of benefits for old age, disability, etc., and a legal department, whereby the best advice may be available. There would be men to undertake such work as detailed above, not from the point of view of the hired employee serving his employer, but rather from the point of view of one comrade helping another comrade.

The history of the actions of the American Legion is as clean as a hound's tooth. For all of the statements I have made above there is a guarantee in the actions of the caucuses composed of men drawn from every State in the union, of every creed and race, of every walk of life you find in the country. In no uncertain terms the St. Louis convention registered itself on the Bolsheviki; in the confession of faith adopted at the Paris caucus the same principles are set forth.

As a member of the legion, I feel I am a member of the body which most truly represents 100 per cent. Americanism.

RAISING LARGE FUND FOR POMONA COLLEGE.

ALUMNI GET FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND. MEMORIALS FOR WAR HEROES.

The campaign for funds for Pomona College, inaugurated at commencement time, is moving forward successfully, more than $400,000 having been subscribed. It is characteristic of the institution that its financial campaigns are always carried on quietly, but none the less effectively. The alumni of the college, numbering more than 1000 graduates, has undertaken to raise $25,000 for the purchase of land and the building of adequate training quarters to accommodate the expanding athletic and physical education activities of the college. Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Gerry of Ventura have given $5000 toward this project in memory of their son, Edmund Sheldon Gerry, class of '17, who was killed on the battle front in France. Further alumni contributions will include in this memorial Walter Edward Stafford of Santa Ana, the only other alumnus of Pomona who died in the service of his country.

Judge Charles G. Neely, of the college faculty, is in Chicago working in the interests of the campaign, and President Blaisdell is now in St. Louis in consultation with the architect who has been awarded the contract for building the four residence halls for women, the first unit of which will be begun this fall. At a recent meeting of the board of trustees the following gentlemen were added to the board: Messrs. Archie McFadden of Irvine, C. C. Teague of Santa Paula, and Donald Aplin of East Highland.

More than 200 new students have already registered to enter college at the opening semester in September. A valued addition to the faculty has been secured in the person of C. B. Fitts, M.A., who for the past nine years has been professor of English in Oahu College, Honolulu, where he has been prominent in Congregational work and "a leader in the educational and religious life of the islands.

SAYS JAPAN MEANS TO GIVE BACK SHANTUNG.

Nipponese Educator Declares Country's Present Course is Prelude to Restoration to China.

Japan's course in regard to Shantung was defended yesterday at a luncheon of the City Club by Kiyo Sue Inui of the department of political science, University of Southern California. He concluded by declaring that Japan is honestly trying to bring to the Far East an era safe for the small as well as the great "by brothering the weaker neighbor and by giving back to China what belongs to her, however much the world may scorn."

"Among the critics of the peace treaty," he declared, "are some who seem to think that Fiume and Shantung are analogous. There is a tremendous difference. Italy wanted Fiume for her permanent possession. Japan wanted Shantung in order to fulfill her part of an agreement with China to restore it to her.

"More than one Senator claims that the treaty of peace has wrested from China a territory with 40,000,000 people without consulting them and presented them to Japan. All these charges are due to their confusion between Shantung and Kiaochow and misunderstanding as to the extent of the concessions at the latter place."

AFFECTED DISTRICTS.

The territory involved in the present controversies, said the speaker, is but 400 square miles, half of which is water. Half of the area was, by the Chino-German treaty, a sort of joint zone, with a population of 800,000. The remainder of the land in dispute, Mr. Inui stated, is composed of the tips of two peninsulas.

"Articles I, V, VI, VII and VIII of Section VIII of the treaty of peace," he said, "transferred all these concessions to Japan, and not an iota more. Japan feels that she is in duty as well as honor bound to return Kiaochow to China, as she declared. In order, however, to legally and completely perform her task it is necessary for her to consider three points: To secure the German rights—or 'wrongs' as some people prefer to call them—from Germany; to obtain the consent of the Allies in this action of the restoration of the leased territory and finally to transfer it legally to China."

Again he declared: "However, as we understand it Germany is allowed three months to settle her affairs in the leased territory, which undoubtedly means three months after the ratification of the treaty of peace. The longer the United States and other signatory powers delay the sanctioning of the treaty the longer Japan will have to wait before she can finally return Kiaochow to China.

"International law and international courtesy require these formalities before Japan can legally and completely restore Kiaochow concessions to China. Thus it is absolutely necessary that China affix her signature to the peace treaty.

TREATIES REVOKED?

"But the Chinese contend that with the entrance of their country into the struggle they revoked all treaties with Germany and hence the title to Shantung reverts by nature to China. This hasty contention seems sentimentally natural and politically reasonable, but legally it has no solid ground whatever. Hence in the complicated international dealings the Chinese interpretation is absolutely impossible.

"The Chinese delegates, with their expert legal advisers, understand these simple rules of international and common law. But they are utilizing this opportunity for their political ends.

"In order to think that China is a republic we need to extend our imagination to the limit. She is hopelessly divided between North and South.

"The Pekinese proposed to fight Germany, hoping that they might unite China by having a common foe. But because she was unable to take any active part in the war and because Germany lasted so short as an enemy, China has sought another imaginary external foe that the nation may be unified. Today she is trying to accomplish her object by heralding Japan as the successor of Germany. On the other hand, the Cantonese are not too slow to seize the opportunity of strengthening their influence by giving publicity to the treaties made by their northern antagonists as secret and threatening."

ON PICTURE BRIDES.

Ujiro Oyama, Japanese Consul to Los Angeles, explained several of the customs of Japan, which are not understood in the United States.

Speaking of the picture brides, he said this was an honorable custom in Japan and had no national political significance that he ever heard of. He said the custom is really necessary. "There are no Japanese women in this country to speak of, and this is the most satisfactory manner of marriage, though I would not advise my American friends to try it.

Mr. Oyama said the Japanese government is most anxious to have the friendship of the United States and will do everything possible to secure it. He said the Japanese government is trying to prevent Japanese outlaws from crossing into the United States from Mexico and the Japanese steamship companies were refusing to carry them to Mexico from South America.

Calomel Users! Listen To Me! I Guarantee Dodson's Liver Tone

Your druggist gives back your money if it doesn't liven your liver and bowels and straighten you up without making you sick.

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick! It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile, crashes into it breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated, or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous, I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore, it cannot salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste, which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless, doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.—[Advertisement] fficiency of America's Medical Men is Feature of War Record.

Sixteen thousand physicians and geons, 12,000 nurses and 122,000 listed men in the medical depart- t served the American army in ance, according to figures made blic by Dr. J. K. Swindt of Po- na, in an address to the mem- s of the Pomona Chamber of mmerce on his return from over- a. Thirty-three thousand Ameri- physicians volunteered for vice, said Dr. Swindt, and those o served the men overseas cared 195,000 wounded, of whom 182,- recovered. Pneumonia and influenza caused the death of 8000 men. Of the 2,200,000 American soldiers in France only 1000 developed cases of typhoid and of these only fifty died. In the Spanish-American war more American soldiers died of typhoid and other diseases than were killed in battle.

Dr. Swindt said that there were 72,723 deaths in the American army during the war, 32,000 men being killed outright, 13,479 dying of their wounds, 22,000 of disease, and over 4000 suffered accidental deaths.

EXPOSED AT FIRST.

"When the Americans first entered the great world war," said Dr. Swindt, "the physicians and surgeons were allowed to go to the front-line trenches. As a result, many were killed and shortly thereafter an order was issued keeping all of them out of the trenches as they were needed to keep the fighters up to condition and it was considered unwise to expose them to unnecessary and useless danger. The casualty list of doctors rapidly diminished after that."

Dr. Swindt pointed with pride to the accomplishment of the medical department in landing a base hospital in France one month and one day from the date the United States entered the war. Another accomplishment that reflected the efficiency of this branch of the service was that of keeping 94 per cent. of the fighters always in condition for active duty, only 3 per cent. indisposed by wounds and the other 3 per cent. by sickness. Dr. Swindt said this was a record that has never been approached in any other war.

Dr. Swindt described the way a wounded soldier was transported from the field of battle back to the base hospital and eventually to the reconstruction hospital. First he was carried on a stretcher from the field of battle to the dressing station, then the stretcher was placed on two wheels and he was taken to the field or evacuation hospital, thence in an ambulance to the depot where a hospital train consisting of sixteen cars, fifty-five feet long and containing berths for thirty-five or forty patients to each car, took him in charge and unloaded him in the vicinity of the base hospital where another ambulance conveyed him to his destination. At a later date the patient was transported to a convalescent hospital and afterward, if the patient had lost an arm or leg, or was incapacitated in some other way, he was brought back to a reconstruction hospital, over here.

HOSPITAL IN FACTORY.

Several notable buildings were used for American hospitals on the other side, among the most notable being the Haviland china factory.

The great size of some of these hospitals was another feature touched upon by the speaker who said one contained 25,000 beds and would have been enlarged to hold 40,000 beds if the armistice had not been signed when it was. An interesting sidelight was the statement that there were 15,000 more beds in base hospitals than were actually needed at the close of the war.

The necessity of quick work was emphasized when the speaker said the surgeons in the hospitals worked in shifts of four hours.

Civil Service "Exams" Re-Opened for Former Soldiers.

Under an opinion of the Attorney-General recently rendered to the Civil Service Commission, United States soldiers, sailors, and marines who missed opportunity to enter civil service examinations because of their military or naval service may now be given a chance to qualify for government employment.

The Civil Service Commission, wishing to give discharged service men every opportunty to qualfy for civil positions, asked the Attorney-General for an opinion as to whether it would be legal to open, for the benefit of honorably-discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, examinations which had been closed. The Attorney-General having expressed the opinion that such action is legal in view of the spirit of a recent act of Congress which provdes for preference in appointment to civil positions for discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, the Civl Service Commision will open only to honorably discharged service men examinations which were pending on April 6, 1917, the date of America's declaration of war, or which were subsequently announced, and for which registers of eligibles now exist.

Sixty days from August 1, 1919, will be allowed soldiers, sailors, and marines in which to be examined for positions for whch examinatons have already been held if they were discharged from the military or naval service prior to August 1, and sixty days from the date of their discharge will be allowed those discharged subsequent to August 1, 1919.

ARMY FLYER HOME.

Lieut. Lobdell Returns After Service Overseas.

After having been in the army aviation service for two years, and overseas for one year, Lieut. J. Karl Lobdell returned to Los Angeles yesterday.

After the signing of the armistice, Lieut. Lobdell was fortunate in being one of those selected to take a four-months' course of study at the University of Paris. Upon the completion of his work at the university he was ordered to Brest for return to the United States and arrived at New York July 30.

Lieut. Lobdell states that those officers and men of the A. E. F., who were privileged to attend the universities of France deeply appreciated the opportunity afforded them and as a result a fund was subscribed by the American students sufficient to pay the expenses for one year of fourteen French students to universities in the United States. Lieut. Lobdell believes that the plan of sending Americans to French universities has resulted in a much better and clearer understanding of the French and their ideas.

HOST OF NURSES COMING

Hundreds of American Red Cross nurses are now at Brest waiting for transportation to the United States, according to a letter received by A. S. Montgomery of Van Nuys from his daughter, Miss Mary Montgomery, who has been on duty at Camp Hospital No. 52, Mons, France.

Miss Montgomery and Miss Grace Hobbson, also of Van Nuys, have been in France for about nineteen months. They enlisted in the Army Red Cross Nurses Corps, January 20, 1918, and after a short training at Camp Dodge, Iowa, were sent to France. Both are graduates of the Michael Reece Training School for Nurses at Chicago, and joined shortly after completing their training course.

STAGE SET FOR REDMEN

Members of the Improved Order of Red Men of Southern California have discovered an appropriate and unique place in which to hold their open-air class, adoption and pow-wow, which will take place next Labor Day in the Painted Desert, located in San Diego's Balboa Park.

Chiefs and members of Mojave and Tehache tribes of Los Angeles will take part in the ceremonies, as will also practically every branch of the order in Southern California. Several hundred candidates are to be initiated into the order's three degrees, according to M. L. Haines, attorney for the Bank of Italy, who is president of the Red Men's Association, which maintains its headquarters in Los Angeles.

The Painted Desert covers an area of five acres and contains a number of Pueblo communal houses and villages. These are exact, full-size reproductions of the most characteristic desert Indian pueblos in New Mexico and Arizona. They include the celebrated North Pueblo of Taos, N. DEFENDS FATHER.

Niece of Carry A. Nation Testifies Against Her Mother.

The Butcher divorce case, which was continued until some day this week by Judge Taft, was lightened yesterday by the testimony of Mrs. Alice M. Blewitt, the daughter of Mrs. Annie M. Butcher, who said her father, Robert Butcher, defendant in the action, was always kind to her mother.

She also described a visit her mother made with her sister, Carry A. Nation, the saloon wrecker, to a grog shop. She said it was very humiliating.

Her mother, the daughter also said, had planned to see the President of the United States with reference to prohibition.

Mrs. Butcher in her suit alleges cruelty. Mr. Butcher contends that his wife suffered from delusions and that she nagged him.

Actor Jailed for Alleged Neglect of Infant Daughter.

Saying he desired to consult an attorney before he pleaded to a charge of failing to provide for his daughter, June Agnes Corthay, 3 years old, Louis W. Corthay was given by Judge Taft yesterday until Wednesday, and in default of bail he was remanded to the County Jail. The complaint was sworn to by his wife, Leona Corthay. The evidence showed that Mr. Corthay, an actor, had been paying the trustee of the courts $4.50 a week until May 27. Since that time he has made no payments.

SHOULD BE DEPORTED.

"I am just like any other American," he said. "I believe in America for Americans. I believe that this indecent foreign element should be kept out. I further believe that the Federal government should take steps to put out those whom we have with us. I know these men perhaps as well as any other person in this country. I have been in contact with them all my life. At one time I owned seventeen saloons and eleven gambling houses. Then I began to think the matter over and I got rid of the whole bunch. It was at this time that I started on my brake-beam travels."

It was during an argument with an English nobleman over a card table that he won his nickname of "Three-Finger Jack," he says. Other fights he participated in made more fingers useless so that now he has but three that can be used.

Speaking of Bolshevist propaganda in this country, Mr. Godwin said: "I have information furnished me by the government which shows the method employed by the Reds in distributing their propaganda. At the time the armistice was signed, warehouses in Germany were filled with literature printed in nearly every language but the German. This shows the method planned by that country for conquering the world. If you remember, Bismarck's last words were, 'Beware of the Russ.' This warning was heeded by his country and a campaign was begun to undermine the Russian economic system. The argument used was that the employee and the employer have nothing in common.

RUSSIANS CORRUPTED.

"As a result the Russian factory system was corrupted and little but German goods were sold in that country. Germany was planning the same campaign in America and other lands when the war broke out. If we had entered the war at the beginning we would undoubtedly have suffered the same fate as Russia. The German would have realised his dream of world dominion."

The effect of this propaganda was shown this year in the number of strikes in America, says Mr. Godwin. The total number in any previous year was 6000 while in July of this year there were 4700. He says that if America would adopt an educational system to show the purpose of our form of government, we would have very little trouble with agitators. He believes that the impressions created by the Reds can be very easily offset if some system of propaganda is formulated by the decent and law-abiding section of the community.

Meetings of the people should be held, he says, where they can be told what is being done by the anarchists. Few people here realize exactly what Bolshevism and I.W.W.-ism are, he declares. When they do, he says, they will fight it with all the strength at their command.

Mr. Godwin told of a socialist meeting that was held on the roof of the public library a short time ago. He criticised the city government for permitting such demonstrations. He said that when these strike makers can come out so boldly, it is no wonder the movement is being checked with difficulty.

"If there are so much better places in which to live, I do not see why these 'reformers' stay," he continued. "They all agree that Russia has the perfect form of government and that it is really the land of the free. As long as it is possible to leave the United States by both air and water, I can see no reason for their staying in this 'workingman's hell,' as it has been termed.

"There was a time when it was thought that no better form of government existed than that of a monarchy. A new form was set up and was successful. But the old form was held onto until the republic was given a chance. It may be that there is a better form than that at present, but all experiments along this line have been jokes. Job Harriman tried the 'ideal system' but his colonies were always failures. Any time an organization is conceived where private ownership is denied you may be sure the dream will not last. When you deny private ownership and private gain you destroy incentive and incentive is what makes the world go round. These fanatics should not be allowed to spread their propaganda, however. Their followers are people who want something for nothing, and that is pretty hard to find in this world."

Bolshevism in Russia is the same in theory as these co-operative colonies, but on a larger scale, says Mr. Godwin. "The history of the movement is this," he stated. "Bolshevism started in Russia and from there spread to Australia. It was brought to Canada and was promulgated under the name of the I.W.W. The policy of the flaming torch in America, as advocated by the I.W.W., is identical with the policy of the Bolshevists. We have the scourge here in the United States and it must be killed. Socialism died here and so must this newer anarchy."

PARLOR BOLSHEVISTS.

One of the most dangerous elements in this country is the parlor Bolshevist, he says. This type of individual, he declares, reads a few statements made by men who have never been heard of before and to whom no standing is given by our government. He or she receives these statements as gospel and any denials offered by our Ambassadors are never considered.

Among the several plants in Los Angeles at which Mr. Godwin has spoken are those of the Cudahy Packing Company and the American Can Company. In both places, the management states, the results have been gratifying. Mr. Godwin is said to be an exceptional speaker and quickly has his audience with him. In these as well as other local factories, he has promoted the cause of Americanism as opposed to Bolshevism.

During the war he worked in the lumber camps of the Northwest, where, he says, are found the majority of "Wobblies" of the United States. A number have come here and he followed them to prevent them doing any damage. Because of the numerous attempts that have been made on his life, he is closely guarded. As soon as the undesirables are driven from Los Angeles he says he will move on.

QUEER TRIBAL SNAKE DANCE TO LURE MANY.

CROWDS GOING TO ARIZONA TO SEE MYSTIC RITES OF HOPI INDIANS.

A relic of their barbaric past, yet such a part of their tribal existence that it cannot be discarded, the annual snake dance of the Hopi Indians will be held this year, next Wednesday, August 20, and September 6, at the Hopi Indian Reservation in Eastern Arizona. Of it the Associated Press correspondent says:

"The ceremonies surrounding the annual festival are so weird and barbaric that thousands of tourists and pleasure-seekers, bored by the commonplace and seeking something different, pay the Hopi Reservation a visit.

"Preceding the snake dance, which continues for nine days, the Indians hold a musical concert, participated in by two bands, equipped only with flutes. After playing several selections, the music ends with a footrace.

"When the snake dance starts, warriors of the tribe are dispatched to the desert to bring in the reptiles. They are accompanied by the musicians, whose performances on quaint musical instruments are supposed to lure the snakes into the hands of the warriors.

"After capturing several snakes, generally rattlers, the warriors return to the village, where the reptiles are placed in stone jars. Incantations, accompanied by music and weird dances around the jars then continue for nine days."

TAKING NEW CENSUS OF OUR INDUSTRIES.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ASKS MANUFACTURERS TO FURNISH DATA.

Questionnaires from the industrial department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce have been sent to every industrial establishment in the city on record with the organization with the request that the information be sent immediately to insure the service planned. Full and complete data regarding every manufacturing concern are desired.

The industrial map of Los Angeles has changed so rapidly during and since the war that the chamber plans to compile a new and complete list of every establishment having to do with production.

The questionnaire calls for the officers of the company, capital investment, products manufactured, location of plant, area of plant, number of employees, the markets sought, raw materials required and other information that will assist in reaching an accurate compilation of the output of every commodity in the metropolitan manufacturing district.

The information requested never has been so important as now, according to chamber officials. The data given by manufacturers are treated as strictly confidential and will be used only in furthering the best interests of all concerned.

CITY'S CAMPS OFFER EARLY FALL OUTINGS.

To those whose vacations are not to come until the end of August or September, the city playground department offers a splendid opportunity this year. Outings have been arranged for the two camps—Camp Seeley, near Little Bear Lake, and Camp Radford, near Big Bear Lake—for almost the entire month of September.

The period from the 25th to the 30th inst. is especially desirable for those who have to be back for school opening, September 3.

Two family outings have been arranged for Camp Seeley in September—one from September 1 to 13, the second from September 15 to 27. After the outing from the 25th inst. to September 6 at Camp Radford there will be one more, from September 8 to September 20, at which time the camp will close for the season.

FOR THE VACATIONISTS.

Camps Seeley and Radford are to be Kept Open in September.

Because September is perhaps the most pleasant month in the mountains, the Playgrounds Department announced yesterday that it has arranged to keep Camps Seeley and Radford open until October 1.

The charge for a six-day outing at Seeley is $7.75; at Camp Radford, $9; for a thirteen-day outing at Camp Seeley, $11, and $12.25 at Camp Radford for the same length of time. These prices include transportation, food and housing. The campers must furnish their own blankets and towels, however. There are also special reductions in prices for children under certain ages.

Further information may be had by calling at the office of the Playgrounds Department, room 205, Normal Hill Center, in person, or by telephone.

PRODUCTION OF ARNOLD INCREASES; DRILLED DEEPER

Late reports from the Arnold well near Newcastle in Young County indicate that the production of the well has had considerable increase as the well has been drilled deeper. The well was reported to be flowing by heads Thursday with the drill about seven feet in the sand. Estimates as to what the production is good for vary greatly, some of the estimates running as high as 2,500 barrels a day. There are more conservative estimates placing the production at about 500 barrels.

So far only a limited storage has been placed at the well. The gas pressure is sufficient to clean the well out at frequent intervals. As far as could be learned Friday morning the well was still drilling.

There has been a big rush for leases in Young County, especially in the northwestern part, following the showing in the Arnold well. It was reported late Thursday that owners of acreage near the well were asking $1,000 an acre for the leases. Newcastle, Graham and other towns near the well have filled up with lease prospectors and many lease and real estate transfers have been reported the past two or three days.

Why the Navy Wants Western Men for the Pacific Fleet

HOW A GOB REALLY LIVES TOLD BY AN EX-GOB.

The Actual Truth About the Life of a Young Man in the Navy Today. Advantages, Disadvantages.

"lash 'em up." At your look of mystification as the instructions to "lash 'em," he'll give you a withering look of pity and sarcastically remark, "I mean heave this rope around your midships and make fast your panties, son."

And it dawns on you that the navy is no place for the super-sensitive young man, who is always taking offense at the remarks of others. The jokes in the navy are not subtle, usually they have the hair on them and they always get home. The rookie must learn to give and take. One of the rights of the navy is to say what you think to those of your own rank. However, don't try it on your superior officers.

THE FIRST DAY.

At 5 o'clock on his first morning in the navy the rookie first realizes that he is with an aggregation which rises, eats, works and goes to bed by the clock. Probably you have just fallen asleep after lying on your cot half the night wondering what is in store for you, when a raucous voice of a master-at-arms is heard shouting, "Rise and shine. Show a leg. Want your coffee brought in on a silver tray?" Somewhere else about the camp come the bugle notes of reveille. The meaning of the last remark of the master-at-arms is that coffee or cocoa is always on tap immediately on rising. All rookies are sent to the shower baths the first thing after turning out of their hammocks. After that comes the early morning libation, and at 5 a.m. after a cold shower that hot drink sure tastes good.

That cleanliness is even a little ahead of godliness in the navy is discovered when the next order, "Turn to and clean up," is sounded. If you are in a building, scrubbing brushes and "squegees" are broken out and the floors and walls are given a thorough washing. If in a tent everything must be set to rights.

After breakfast the new rookies are sent to the "stores" and there fitted with their outfits. As to the clothing issued by Uncle Sam, it may be said that he gives his men sufficient, with the exception of socks, shoes and underwear, to last them their four years, unless the man has particularly bad luck.

HIS CLOTHES.

Even when the rookie has received his outfit he is still far from satisfied with himself. He is not yet the rakish-looking gob he has seen on liberty from the fleet. His white hats have never been washed nor sewed, and they look like inverted dishpans. He can't seem to get used to the idea of his pants buttoning up on the sides and across the top and the open collar of his blouse makes him feel naked. Lack of pockets makes him feel lonesome and his hands are lost. The white clothes which have been issued him are not white at all, but a sort of canvas color, his regulation shoes feel heavy and the socks are not of the widely-advertised brands, although he finds later that regulation socks are nearly holeproof.

In the meantime the chief petty officer, a boatswain's mate or quartermaster, has been sizing up his charges and he usually finds there are a few men who have some knowledge of military matters, either received at a military school or possibly in the National Guard. When they are discovered these men are picked as apprentice petty officers. The first afternoon the men are handed dummy guns and intricacies of drill with small arms is explained to them. They are also taught the proper way to carry themselves and how to march.

For a month this course of instruction is kept up with the addition of learning the alphabet of the semaphore and wig-wag, the ardois or signals by electric lights, practice of tying the different knots, the difference between a "mark," and a "deep," on the lead or sounding line.

All this time earlier arrivals have left for the main training camp and new arrivals have been received. It's strange how condescending a man who has been in the navy three weeks can be to a one-day rookie. You don't have to know a man's name, everyone calls everybody else "Jack."

Finally comes the day when the quarantine period has passed and the rookie is transferred to the main training camp. This is a big step with him, for during the past month he has had no liberty and the prospect of going ashore and getting a mess of ham and eggs looms large.

At the training camp he is assigned to a certain company and it is with this company of men that the boy will probably spend the most of his enlistment, for the company is like a class in school. They have all a certain degree of sea knowledge and when the call comes for a certain number of men for a ship, the entire company of men who have graduated from the apprentice to the ordinary seaman's class is sent.

IN THE MAIN CAMP.

Training periods last from four to six months. Each day is spent at military drills, target practice with small arms in the rifle butts, boat drills, hammock and bag inspections, and all the hundred and one things which go to make a landlubber a man-o'-warsman. After two months the rookie is beginning to get used to the life. Every time he has to salute a gold striper, he doesn't think, "I'm just as good as he is." He has learned the knack of washing his own clothes without wearing all the skin from his knuckles, has found that a small quantity of lye mixed with the water when washing his white clothes bleaches them to a pure white, that when a hat has had its brim sewed that it stands up straight and that a neckerchief properly folded and tied stays in good shape. He has had the first pleasure of drawing money from Uncle Sam and the first liberty. And on this first liberty he has found that going ashore and having a good time tires him out more than twenty-four hours of straight drilling.

Then comes the big day when the word is passed that a certain number of men are to be sent to sea or on board ship. Disappointment may be your lot, however. Practically every man has enlisted with a desire to serve aboard the latest dreadnaught, but men must also man the small cruisers, torpedo and gunboats, and as there are more of the latter it is very likely that the six months' gob finds himself on a supply ship, a repair boat or with the mosquito fleet or torpedo flotilla.

Whatever ship he goes to, however, he will find that things are done, orders are given and executed in an entirely different manner. At the training station, the instructors have realized that it is a trying period with the new men and have been somewhat lenient. On board ship there is more pep and snap in everything, and one realizes that being a gob is a serious straight-forward business.

ON BOARD.

He is assigned to a certain division, there being four on board ship, each division having a fourth of the ship to take care of. The men of this division will be his shipmates for the rest of his cruise or enlistment. These men will size him up and if he shows an inclination to shirk his particular share, they will make it warm for him. But if he does his duty, minds his own business until the older men begin to make overtures he will find them the best of friends, ready to back him up in trouble on ship or ashore, or go to the bat for him on the jump.

The greatest thing which the young man has looked forward to has been the sights of foreign lands. This inducement which he read at the corner of First and Broadway is not fiction, and the opportunity of seeing South America the Hawaiian Islands, Japan and China are usually given him before he has finished his first cruise.

A cruise to the Asiatic stations is usually made every two years by the Pacific Fleet. Some time they will also go to South America and the isthmus. When the order comes to sail for Honolulu the same feeling which made Columbus's heart bound when he sailed for future America will be the lot of the gob on his first cruise from home ports. As he sees the Farallone Islands off San Francisco Bay fade into the sea to the eastward, and feels the ship begin to rise to the heavy, even swells, however, he'll probably begin to lose his appetite. He'll be sick. Older men will sympathize with him by telling of the luscious taste of pork spare ribs and other oleaginous meats. But friend Jack will get over it, and about the third day he'll begin to take interest in the flying fish over the bow and the preparations for gun practice. Next to the desire to see foreign soil has been to be a "pointer" on one of the big 14-inch guns. It's up to himself whether this last desire will be satisfied. Every man has a chance to make good at target practice. Every day drills consist of rapid loading of guns, target practice by means of a rifle placed on top of the gun and fired at a moving target, the only difference being that instead of a heavy charge being used, only the rifle cartridge is fired.

While life on board ship is cut by regulations, and everything done by the clock, yet friend Jack finds that there are many spare minutes for himself. During these times he finds that there are boxing matches and band concerts going on, minstrel shows being formed, as well as baseball nines being organized. If he has any aptitude for any particular recreation he'll find no trouble in attaching himself to a crowd of like desires.

When the ship reaches Honolulu he is granted liberty every other day if his conduct is first class. He will be drawing his full pay—sufficient for him to see the sights and still have some left. At Honolulu he will visit Waikiki Beach and see the Kanakas riding the surfboards; Diamond Head, the extinct volcano at the point of the harbor, will be taken in, as well as Pali Mountain and the Punch Bowl, back of the city. Back of Waikiki Beach is the former home of Robert Louis Stevenson, the national gardens and Queen Lil's palace. There is no doubt but that he'll fall in love with Honolulu.

From here, perhaps, his ships will sail for Pago Pago in the Samoan Islands. During this trip the equator will be crossed, and the picturesque rites and ceremonies which all deep-sea ships put on when crossing the line will be staged by the enlisted personnel. Neptune and his court will initiate all men who have never been south of the equator, the initiation consisting of sitting in a chair while the dentist pulls your teeth with tongs from the machine shop, the doctor prescribes a pill of soap and bitters, your head is given a coating of soap and molasses, more is daubed on your face, and you are tipped into a tank of water, where Neptune's bears souse you up and down, hit you with padded blackjacks and you are finally released a fullfledged deep-sea sailor. Commissioned officers and enlisted men alike have to undergo this initiation.

At the Samoan Islands, little opportunity for shore leave is to be had. Natives in their war canoes, with twenty men sending their boat through the water at a marvelous rate of speed, will greet you outside the bar. You anchor to buoys, as the harbor it too deep for ordinary anchor chains. It will rain five or six times a day, but the sun will shine in between. Natives will board with carved war clubs and tapa cloth which you can secure by trading for a piece of salt water soap or worn out undershirt. They will stage a dance on shore for the ship's company and you see the queen with a looking glass dangling from her forehead prance up to the king and rub noses, all the time humming a tune like a funeral dirge. You'll be disappointed at the absence of shredded wheat clothes, you'll be horrified at the first sight of the eastern disease called elephantiasis, which makes a leg, foot or arm grow until it exactly resembles an elephant's foot.

IN JAPAN.

From here you'll probably go to Japan, see Kobe and the women coaling ship, pass through the Sea of Japan, see Fijuyama, stop at Nagasaki, drop down to Yokohama, on to Shanghai and Hongkong, where the sight of a dead person floating to sea is not uncommon. At Manila the wrecks of the Spanish fleet and the old Bilibid prison. And at all these places yellow faces, foreign language, strange foods, manner and habits. The desire to see a white face, be it but the face of milady from the kitchen, the longing to hear English be it that of the water front only, begins to creep over friend Jack and when the word comes that the fleet is about to sail for the good old U. S. A. and the homeward bound pennant is broken out from the masthead, believe me there are some happy gobs on that ship.

The thrill of the first sight of America after months spent in foreign lands is worth the entire enlistment. This feeling makes you realize more than anything else what it means to be an American, the value of our citizenship. The lump in your throat you may be ashamed of, but you will know that every other man on board is being troubled with the same bronchial affection.

HOME AGAIN.

After a short stay in port during which time the ship will be put into dry dock, you will be given a furlough of ten to fifteen days and you'll have a chance to come home. And you'll come home looking like the gobs you saw on Broadway and the sailors who danced on Olive street when the fleet arrived. Your hat will be set at the precarious angle. You may shock your mother with your table manners, with your sea-going talk, but as she sees the healthy clean look in your eyes and the swing of your carriage she'll be glad that you signed up in Uncle Sam's outfit.

When the furlough is up and you go back to your ship you'll probably drop down to South America, see Valparaiso, where Old Bob Evans told the Chileans where to get off at, see the full rigged ship way up on the hillside, swept there during the earthquake and tidal wave. Come up to Callao, Peru, take the ten-mile trip to Lima, the capital, see the burying place of Pizarro, the remains of the Inca glory and wonder at the immense buzzards which light in the back-yards. Stop at the Isthmus of Panama, take the short trip to Colon on the Atlantic side. Come to Magdalena Bay for target practice and then return to the States, to be paid off.

You may not continue in the navy, you may return to civil life, but for the boy who has served an enlistment, the chances of making good in civil life art strong in his favor. If for no other reason he has learned self-discipline as well as obedience to orders from his superiors.

Someone has said that the navy will make a man or a monkey out of a boy. It comes close to being the truth. It all depends on the boy.

CALL FOR SHIP FIREMEN

Unless 1500 Americans come forward to fill vacant jobs as firemen on ships in the new American merchant marine the operation of many cargo carriers will be handicapped, it was declared yesterday by Henry Avila, Pacific Coast supervisor of sea training of the United States Shipping Board, with headquarters in San Francisco.

The firemen are wanted at once. The demand for men for service in the engine room of American ships is becoming more insistent daily. Shipping Board officials say that if 3000 men should respond to the appeal for firemen, jobs could be found for them without delay.

Sea recruits will be assigned immediately to the Shipping Board training ship Iris, on which they will be instructed in their new duties for six weeks. After graduation, student firemen are assigned to deep-water vessels. While in training the pay is $30 a month. After the men win permanent assignment they receive from $75 to $90 a month, with quarters and board free.

Men going into the merchant marine as firemen must weigh about 140 pounds. None but Americans (native born or naturalized [illegible] cepted. The age [illegible] 18 to 35 years.

TO CHART FROM THE AIR

Following the completion of the first trans-Atlantic flight by the United States Naval Air Service, this branch of the service has come to the fore as one of the most important and interesting branches of government work, is the information contained in a letter received here to stimulate recruiting. Aerial photography, the statement added, is one of the most desirable professions open to recruits.

In the statement it is said that the men who enlist now will be given instruction in photography from the ground, from speed boats, and from naval seaplanes. They will be taught the theory of the various branches of photography, it continued, and will receive practical instructions in the mixing of chemicals and in general laboratory and outside photographic work. SECRET SERVICE HEAD HERE IS SUPPLANTED.

C. L. KEEP ABRUPTLY RELIEVED OF LOCAL POST IN FEDERAL DEPARTMENT.

C. L. Keep, for nearly two years agent in charge of the Bureau of Investigation for Southern California, received notice yesterday that he has been superseded in office by Stephen A. Connell, who arrived here yesterday from Washington, D. C. The office was in the peculiar position of having two officials in charge for a few minutes when Mr. Connell walked in with a letter from the chief of the Bureau of Investigation. The notice came as a surprise to Mr. Keep, who had received no previous notice that he was to be relieved of his post. The letter simply stated that instructions would follow. Mr. Keep then relinquished the office to his successor.

Speculation was rife as to the purpose back of the change, which was said to have been brought about by William J. Flynn, formerly chief of the secret service of the Treasury Department and is now director of the Bureau of Investigation. Mr. Connell was with Mr. Flynn as a secret service agent. It was thought Mr. Keep might be appointed to another post.

Mr. Keep was appointed agent in charge of investigation on November 1, 1917, and since that time has handled the largest number of investigations in a like period for the local office, brought on by the inquiries necessitated by the war. Previous to his appointment he was with the immigration service of the Department of Labor for eighteen years and was an inspector in charge. He was virtually "loaned" by that department to the Bureau of Investigation.

NEW PHONOGRAPH PLANT.

Announcement was made yesterday of what it is said will be the largest factory on the Coast for the manufacture of talking machines. The new product, it was stated, will be sold under the name of the Blue Bird phonograph and will be manufactured in the new plant just leased by the company at Thirty-second and Main streets. The company is backed by the Hellman interests and has a capitalization of $250,000.

Besides increasing the local pay roll to a considerable extent, it was said that the new enterprise would be of importance to our harbor as all the raw material will be brought through the port from South America.

Success of the venture is assured, according to Emmanuel Cohen, secretary and treasurer of the company, as the leading music dealers of the coast are heartily behind the project.

The factory is a two-story structure with a floor space of 120,000 square feet and with trackage facilities to take care of a large business. The mahogany that will be used in the construction of the cabinet will be brought directly here from the south and the spruce and other materials wil be procured on the Coast. It is planned to make the machine an exclusive Western product.

"By bringing the raw material to Los Angeles," said Mr. Cohen, "we can make a superior machine at a lower cost. Then too, it will be a home product and this means a great deal to this section. We have abundant capital and we mean to put this proposition through. Associated with me is Irving H. Hellman as president and M. F. Fybush as vice-president. We have skilled workmen in the plant and are building up a strong sales organization. By the end of this month we will have several thousand machines ready for the market and these have already been sold."

Offices of the company have been opened at 312 H. W. Hellman Building.

CHANNEL AWAITS FLEET.

Vessels to Sail for Santa Barbara Next Tuesday; Set Programme Tabooed.

According to present plans, the Pacific Fleet will weigh anchor early Tuesday, leaving Santa Monica for Santa Barbara, to remain there until the 26th. This information was given by Admiral Hugh Rodman to the committee composed of Mayor H. T. Nielson and Ralph W. Hersey, representing the Mission City, that waited on him.

The armada will enter Santa Barbara Channel about noon, with the fog cleared away and the sun high overhead. Admiral Rodman really prefers to travel at night; but, realizing that there will be many people lining the coast between here and the channel metropolis, he has decided to make the trip in daytime, so that all may have a chance to see the fleet.

He cautioned the Santa Barbara committee against preparing an elaborate programme of entertainment. He said he feared the people of the Pacific Coast were going to spoil the men with the lavish treatment accorded them. Accordingly, an elastic scheme was outlined to him, which will permit the sailors to follow their own inclinations; or, if they prefer, amusements of an informal and varied nature will be provided for them.

As the entire Pacific Fleet will rendezvous in Santa Barbara Channel for a week, it is possible it may be put through some maneuvers there. The expansive roadstead, which seafaring men declare one of the finest on any of the Seven Seas, affords splendid facilities for marine drills. Although Santa Barbara's is an open harbor, the Channel Islands, twenty-five miles off the mainland, make it a safe port.

A unique feature that will be carried out fleet week calls for a series of banquets in the Palm-room at the Belvedere, in honor of the petty officers. Different groups will be entertained on succeeding nights in turn by the Santa Barbara Chamber of Commerce, Commercial Club, Rotary Club, Realty Board, Auto Trades Association, etc. This is in recognition of the fact that the "noncoms" are usually overlooked because it is not "au fait" for them to mix with the commissioned officers or the sailors, who are always taken care of.

Santa Barbara motion-picture theaters will be open free to all men in uniform. There will be all sorts of beach sports and athletics for the men who like that sort of fun, with horses and Fords to give the jackies a chance to try their hands at steering land-going craft. Box-suppers will be served those having shore leave in the evening. This will be followed by a dance on a large pavilion that will be erected near the bath-house.

Lompoc has already guaranteed to contribute $1000 to the entertainment fund. Ventura, Oxnard, Santa Paula, Santa Maria, San Luis Obispo and other points in the surrounding counties have indicated their intention to come en masse and help.

Eleven years ago, Santa Barbara was visited by Admiral Robley D. Evans and his white squadron on its historic trip around the world. The city made a record at that time. Every effort will be made to try to sustain the reputation then established, when Admiral Rodman's entourage drops anchors off the American Riviera, according to Chairman R. W. Hersey of the Santa Barbara Fleet Committee.

The programme, for which $55,000 in cash premiums and prizes is offered, will range in variety from exhibits of live stock, poultry and pure-blooded animals to a harness and running race meet and a saddle and driving horse show. Entries for all departments will close September 20.

COMMERCE LOOMS LARGE.

Graphically illustrating the extent, variety and importance of the commerce passing through the port of Los Angeles, the report of Clarence H. Matson, traffic manager of the Board of Harbor Commissioners, for the month of June is perhaps the most interesting ever issued by that official. The grand total of all inbound and outbound commerce is shown to be almost twelve millions, or $11,969,190, to be exact. The inbound was valued at $6,125,493 as compared with the outbound of $5,843,697. To the inbound commerce must be added the special item of domestic lumber, the value of which was $2,052,495.

After lumber the next most valuable domestic article brought into the port was flour, of which 4635 tons were brought in and which were worth $551,565. After that comes sugar, 2664 tons that entered being worth $479,520. Other domestic receipts worth over $100,000 included the following: Coffee, 461 tons, worth $322,700; news paper, 2460, value, $275,520; butter, 185 tons, value $185,000; fresh fish, 1818 tons, value $145,440; canned milk, 827 tons, value, $132,320.

The biggest item of domestic outbound commerce was gasoline, 21,773 tons, worth $1,352,904; distillate, 25,610 tons, $1,298,895; fuel oil, 75,705 tons, $678,577; dry goods, 107 tons, $321,000; and automobiles, 75 tons, $105,000. Among the foreign shipments were 18,915 tons of kerosene, worth $670,583.

EDUCATORS TO TALK SHOP AT YOSEMITE.

WILL DISCUSS COMPULSORY EDUCATION, CHILD WORK, AND LIKE PROBLEMS.

Preparations are being made at Camp Curry, Yosemite Valley, for the reception of the city, county, and State superintendents of schools, who will convene there tomorrow for an all-week session. Several hundred persons will journey to Camp Curry to attend these meetings, including many of the leading educators of California.

So great is the demand for bungalows at the camp that all of them have been reserved already for the convention week. Foster Curry gives assurance that there will be ample tent accommodations for all others who desire to visit the Yosemite at this time.

Among other important problems that will be considered at the sessions of the Superintendents' Convention are the following: Legislation concerning compulsory education, child labor and registration of minors; recent progress and next steps in school finances; handling of State programme in physical education; compulsory Americanization; better preparation of teachers; consolidation of schools; agricultural extension work, and art instruction in the public schools.

HUGE WINE BOTTLE HAS ANNIVERSARY.

BUT CELEBRATION, ATTENDED BY WALNUT ELEPHANT, IS DRY AFFAIR.

The huge wine bottle standing twenty-four feet in height and containing 990 ordinary size bottles of California's choicest vintage, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary yesterday at the Chamber of Commerce exhibit hall. The observance was a dry occasion.

Coincidental with the arrival of the wine samples, arranged in mighty bottle formation, came the famous walnut elephant, whose sturdy proportions represent 850 pounds of one of Southern California's choicest products.

Although the same age and having stood side by side before the admiring gaze of millions during the past quarter century, the big bottle didn't give the elephant a drink, nor did the elephant pass the walnuts.

The celebration of their anniversary was quiet. According to tests made of the elephant's legs and the outside appearance of the 990 bottles, both exhibits are good for another quarter of a century.

JUST GROWN UP CHILDREN

Most of we care-free Americans forget to grow up at all. This fact is very evident when nature needs help in the form of a laxative. Children-like, we shrink from the bitter tasting or heavy oil preparations that have heretofore been in common use.

There is a laxative that has successfully overcome this unpleasant feature. The name is PURLETTS, but "The Candy Laxative" is an almost as frequent identification. The unpleasant drug tastes are completely disguised. You can chew PURLETTS and really enjoy the taste.

PURLETTS relieve constipation and the many ailments due to torpidity of the liver and bowels. They contain no drastic purgatives and therefore restore the natural tone to the bowels and help to re-establish normal functions. 25c for a box of 36 tablets. Be Careful in Using Soap on Your Hair.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for it is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.—[Advertisement.

(Modes of Today)

A harmless, yet very effective, treatment is here given for the quick removal of hairy growths: Mix enough powdered delatone and water to cover the undesirable hairs, apply paste and after two or three minutes remove, wash the skin and the hairs have vanished. One application usually is sufficient, but to be certain of results, buy the delatone in an original package.

Not to Sell Home-Furnishings but to Create Successful Home

It is the business of Barker Bros'. to create successful homes. If we sell home-furnishings, that is only incidental to the higher purpose of this great store's being.

To sell home-furnishings would require a building, a sales force and a book-keeping department. To create successful homes we need Decorators of experience and genius, Artists of originality and talent, Assistant Buyers (we prefer that term rather than "salespersons") of knowledge, sympathy and breeding.

We need a Location for our store that is the most convenient possible (the rent is low, considering.) We need Prestige to command the most admirable lines of merchandise in every branch.

We need an enormous Buying Power and many versatile, brilliant Buyers in order that we may have incomparable assortments in every department of the things the people really want.

THESE THINGS WE HAVE—and in addition an organized Educational Movement among our employees through which virtually each of the twelve hundred members of the Barker Bros'. have been enrolled in what may truthfully be called a great "HO FURNISHING UNIVERSITY," to study and help you problem of Better Home-Making.

Barker Bros. find it costs no more to create successful simply to sell home-furnishings, and our customers tell us that, THEY are concerned, it's really LESS expensive, in the end, their homes with the help of a store that KNOWS HOW homes are made.

A GENIAL flow of fellow-feeling throughout this store is responsible largely for "THE WONDERFUL SPIRIT" upon which so many of our visitors comment every day.

Out in the sunshine along the breeze-blown ocean shores, it is easy to be care-free and kindly disposed toward the world in general and one's companions in particular.

In this mood, the TWELVE HUNDRED FIFTY-TWO friends who work with us daily in this business will gather upon the sands of Santa Monica next Saturday for the summer picnic.

After this week, there will still be one more full Saturday holiday which, being followed by Sunday and Labor Day, makes a splendid three-day vacation to close the summer refreshingly for everyone at Barker Bros.'

Western Windows Call for Expressive Drapery

—and Barker Bros. have entered, heart and soul, into the joyous business of helping every home to have curtains "in character" with its type and with the tastes of its people.

Think of the old notion about draperies!—stiff pairs of curtains, unvarying in size (because time was when nearly every window had the same dimensions)—formal portieres, made in a factory and sold ready to hang up.

Now we have thousands of fabrics and thousands of ideas. A great many of our customers like to buy the materials and make their own draperies—we have artists to suggest schemes and experts to tell them how to work them out.

Others prefer to choose the style and let us do the work in our great workshop. And, of course, there are plenty of fascinating ideas already fashioned into such filmy forms as panel curtains, lace curtains, ruffled curtains, etc., etc.

Never before—we say this after honest thought—was Barker Bros.' Drapery Section so positively radiant with glad possibilities for every sort of home. Never have we seen such enthusiasm for having more expressive curtains and never were we better prepared to satisfy every desire at a congenial price.

Gifts Chosen with Love and Leisure

are the truest "good-will gifts" of Christmas-time.

And so we are glad that the unusual abundance of beautiful things in our Art and Gift Department (mezzanine floor) enables the offering, this week, of a rare wealth of charming givables at VERY PLEASING SAVINGS.

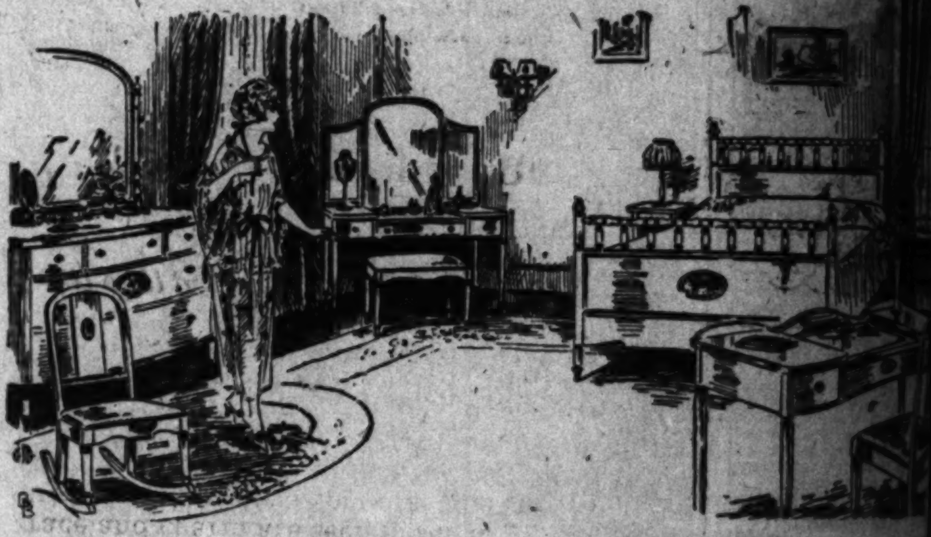
The gift-charm of a lovely Lamp or sumptuous Shade—a worthy Picture or an artistic Frame—a piece of Pottery or bit of Marble statuary—is great.

To choose gifts here and now, while you have time to do it thoughtfully and lovingly, will, we believe, add satisfaction as well as economy to your Christmas giving.

Your average saving will be about 20%—this week.

THE WICKER FURNITURE DEPARTMENT BURSTS ITS BOUNDS AND HAS REMOVED TO A MORE SPACIOUS HOME UPON OUR SIXTH FLOOR. THE "HOUSE-WARMING" RECEPTION IS IN PROGRESS. WON'T YOU COME AND SEE THE NEWEST THINGS IN REED—THIS WEEK?

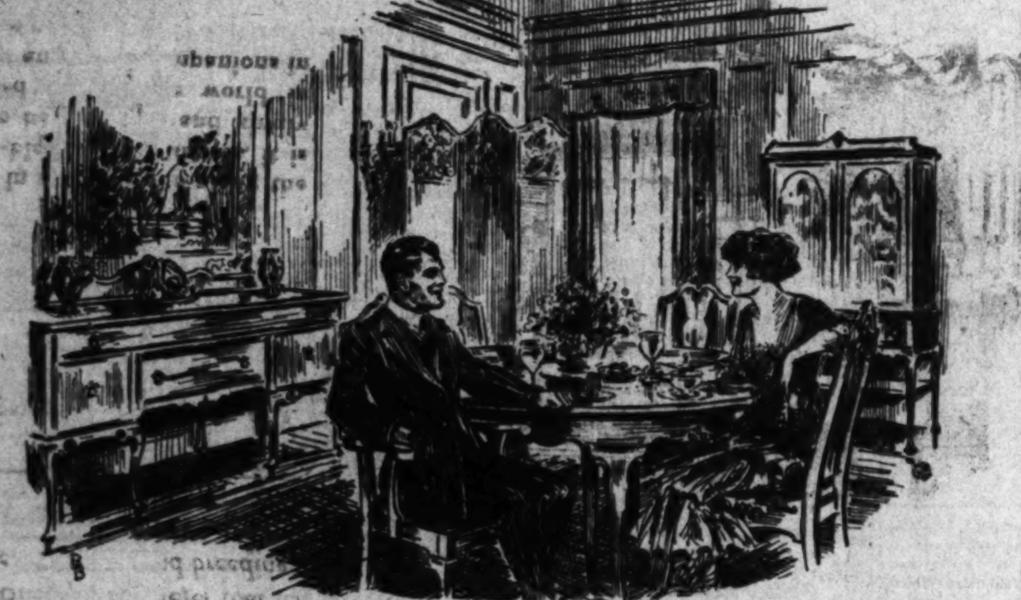
This is the Truest Version Known of an American Period Furniture



Quite aside from the romantic interest clinging to this furniture, its popularity in old New England during those quaint Colonial-Georgian days—doesn't it appear very, very beautiful and acceptable to modern eyes and to present-day tastes?

Only the general outlines — all grace and charm are seen in the illustration, the delicate beading and other decoration being lost in the reproducing, but if you'll call to see it on Barker Bros.' floor, y surely find it fascinating in cacy of detail and rich, finish.

And if you come soon you'll be charmed with the price, we've been permitted upon it. AND THIS IS ONE OF A NUMBER of most cellent values in bedroom and pieces we offer for a time.



Now Walnut Comes "Into Its Own"

—not that its mellow brown beauty was ever disregarded, but a tide of new and eager enthusiasm for this native wood is now registering. And for one reason or another, fortunately for the home that needs new dining-room furniture, we offer unusually good values.

The particular pattern pictured is a correct interpretation from old English masters. In every characteristic it's Queen Anne, always a dependable design for the dining-room—

But we have Walnut dining-room suites in Italian and Spanish modes as well as Oak furniture in the same spirit upon which we are naming for the time being prices that will surely clinch your enthusiasm for this admirable furniture.

Many a Vague Longing for a Taste of Living-Room Luxury has quickened into definite realization—as hundreds have seen and loved the latest arrivals upon our fascinating floor of Living Room Furniture.

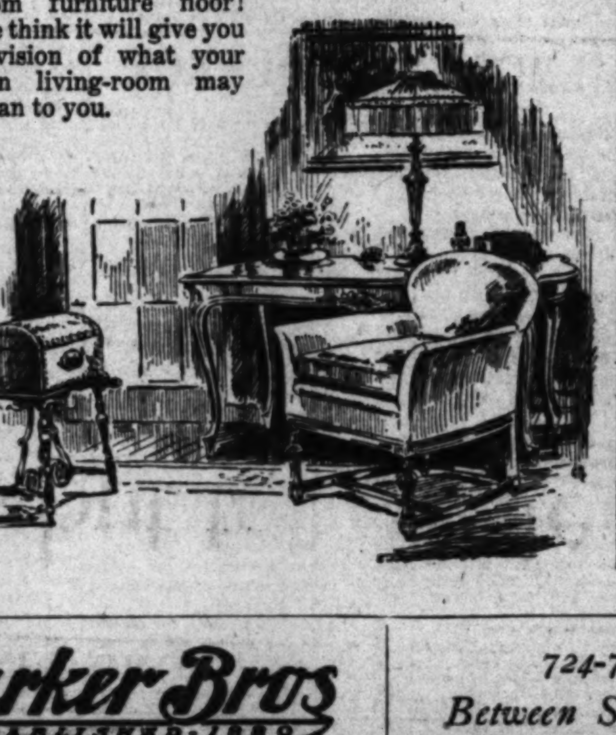
It is amazing, so many have told us, how much of beauty can be bought now for an unassuming sum.

Some of the new overstuffed furniture—davenports, chairs and rockers—seem to have reached the very limit of "cushiony comfortableness." And their lines are consummate grace and beauty.

Please come and linger just a little while within the re-creating restfulness and beauty of our living-room furniture floor! We think it will give you a vision of what your own living-room may mean to you.



Good Sleep is Worth a Barker Bros.' Mattress

Indeed, good sleep is worth almost anything—and a Mattress of our own make is never expensive.

Only a poor, "cheap" mattress, or a mattress that is not so clean and comfortable as it might be at its price, is "expensive."

Barker Bros.' Mattresses and Pillows exist to make people sleep RESTFULLY.

They are built in a sunny Los Angeles factory and cost our customers less—infinitely less—than the comfort they afford is worth.

We'd like to show you all the different types and styles—tomorrow!

INTRODUCING MR. LOMBARDI.

Bert Lytell in Throes of Sartorial Orgy.

His Life's Now Devoted to Pins and Drapes.

Angles on Metro's Filming of Hatton Play

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT.

When a perfectly healthy normal leading man, by a process of evolution or otherwise, has to become a professional (masculine) modiste, and instead of pursuing Melpomene or Thalia through five reels, is devoting his time to draping Chloe and Daphne in accordance with the latest sartorial art—why 'tis high time the world should know about it, especially the film following world with whom this same leading man has achieved popularity.

Instead of carrying the scepter of the muses these days, Bert Lytell, rising star of the Metro company, is going around with a pincushion on his arm. It is full of pins, too. But these are merely props, and Lytell is far less worried about them than the obstreperous hooks and eyes with which he has to perform tricks during the filming of the Hatton's famous play, "Lombardi, Ltd."

"Lombardi, Ltd.," is the chief production of the Metro company now in the making. And they are doing everything to register it a big achievement.

No little of the business of the play concerns the art of fashioning costumes, and draping models. This makes the atmosphere of the curious study of an Italian designer's life in New York City.

Lytell has probably the most difficult role of his entire career as Lombardi. Not alone are his talents called into account for sartorial virtuosity, something about which he claims to know little or nothing, but he has to express on the screen in a very subtle manner the character of a refined Italian. This cannot be done in the ordinary hum drum mouthing and gesticulating manner, but requires a degree of grace carefully measured to the type and the result will be watched with interest because Lytell is a great favorite and because Lombardi is a far-famed stage character.

Meanwhile, however, the Metro's leading man is being educated into the secrets of lingerie and the exact position a train or a scarf should occupy, much to his own amusement and at times vexation. Several tailors and designers are assisting at the sartorial orgy, and they can tell to a quarter of an inch whether a certain piece of cloth is where it belongs on the model mounted on a pedestal. At least that has been Lytell's experience. The experts sit Argus-eyed on the sidelines while he goes through a scene.

And mind you with all this special attention he has to conduct himself jauntily and without self-consciousness, for each moment of the designing is also occupied with carrying on the action of the play. The models are not mere models in the story, but ingenues, and subdeb ingenues, and vamps, and everything else, and have to be dealt with accordingly.

HE'D RATHER PLAY BALL.

Once in a while Lytell has a chance to break away long enough to tell a few intimate friends what he thinks about the whole proceeding. He has a certain amount of good-natured spleen to vent about this business of being a model-dresser. "I look fine, don't I, with this pincushion on my arm," said he. "Now if it were a baseball glove I'd be perfectly happy, because I know what to do with that. But I never thought I'd get any more familiar with a pincushion than to see it on a dresser or maybe take a pin out of it. And now I'm going around with one clinging to my arm.

"Any pins! My life has been a regular debauch of pins the last week. I've stuck so many into some of the girls on the set that they are as full of dents as a waffle.

"And mind you these pins don't

THE QUESTION OF ADMIRERS.

Elsie Ferguson Says It's Best to Keep Aloof.

Almost all actresses receive countless letters from persons who desire to know them out of character. Many of these letters are sincere tributes from real admirers, and are usually quite precious to the recipient. According to Elsie Ferguson, Artcraft star, who is appearing in "The Social Exile," this week at Grauman's, all of us, in spite of our protestations to the contrary, appreciate real praise and admiration, and nothing, she declares, pleases her more than receiving special tributes in the form of letters.

"But," says Miss Ferguson, "if an actress would retain this popularity, she must, above all things, preserve a certain aloofness. Besides, it would be impossible to meet all the persons who write us, so one must be impartial as well.

"I remember quite well a very close friend who had an unknown admirer, who wrote her the most importunate love letters, day after day, for seasons. He was mad to meet her. It kept up a long time, and he was so faithful and persistent in his admiration that when she found he had met some people who were friends of hers and had persuaded them to present him, she agreed to the introduction.

"This is what happened. The moment he met her he lost interest. She never saw or heard of him from that day. So I have profited from her experience. I am too clever to let any admirer get close enough to see the real Elsie Ferguson. The only way to fan such an infatuation and keep such a man interested, is to confine his impressions to the interpretations of the stage or the screen.

"Many of the letters I have received lately have praised me for the 'naturalness' of my acting on the screen and asked the time-old question: 'How do you do it?' In reality there is no such thing as actual naturalness on the screen; one seems natural—that's all. I hope I make that clear. If a woman quarrels with her husband or her sweetheart in her drawing-room, there is a scene in some degree, of course; probably she raises her voice a key or two, and she moves about the room, or she may grant herself a few gestures, but that scene would be absolutely lost on the screen. She must at least double, or, in fact, at times, treble her intensity, and possibly quadruple it.

"In accomplishing this for the silent drama, we do not add intensity to our voice, but just to our expressions and determine just what emphasis to give certain ones, so as to increase the emphatic point when needed.

"With this naturalness there must also come variety, a change of tempo and expression, so that your audience may not become tired or bored or your work become monotonous. I have never derived any false opinions from what some people have been good enough to call my 'gift of naturalness,' and many do not understand that it has been a long, hard pull for me to attain the success I have. I know it, and shall never forget it. Besides, the fact that I am successful today does not mean that I will be tomorrow. Women have a rather hard time in life. All of them have. Sometimes I think it is a very terrible thing to be a woman!

"I used to think this so many times in those early days when I was a chorus girl. I was terribly shy and timid as a child, particularly when it came to talking. This was principally because I didn't care to talk trivialities, and when I did think of something I considered worth saying, I felt that I would be misunderstood, and said nothing—therefore I soon achieved the unenviable reputation of being 'horribly dull.'

"My first venture on the stage—in the chorus of 'The Belle of New York'—was largely a lark. The excitement and novelty of it buoyed me up at first, but later a reaction set in and I became quite unhappy in the 'merry merry.' I was not what was known in the parlance of back stage as 'a good fellow.' Consequently I was left pretty much to myself. The men who were on easy terms of familiarity with some of the girls would ignore me altogether or sneer something about 'goody-goody.' I became practically an exile and came to know what it is to be shunned and ridiculed by, one's companions and fellow beings."

METROITES GET THRILL.

Lively Movements at Studio Caused by Short Circuit.

Fire imperiled the Screen Classics (Inc.) new $43,000,000 "dark" stage recently when one of the Metro feminine stars stumbled over a plug connecting several lines of electrical cable and the circuit was shorted. Quick action on the part of the cameraman and the electrician of the producing unit saved the building, and little damage was done outside of the setting in which the blaze occurred.

Viola Dana, Screen Classics star, was standing in the doorway of a set for "Please Get Married," in which she is appearing under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, when she accidently kicked the plug at her feet. The cable was knocked loose; there was a flash, and the entire set was enveloped in a cloud of smoke. The flame ate its way back along the wire, and the company was in confusion. An explosion seemed imminent. It was then that Cameraman John Arnold pawed his way over furniture and past people to the nearest fire extinguisher. He got it started just as the flames reached the studio wall.

His aim wasn't as good as his intention, as Antrim Short, Miss Dana's leading man, and Sheldon Vensonhaler, property man, can testify. Their clothes were soaked by the patent fire extinguisher, and their faces as well.

COULDN'T STAND FUNERAL STRAIN.

"There are some coincidences," said George McDaniel, over the cigarettes, at Metro, the other day—"there are some coincidences that are almost too good to be true. They fit too perfectly. You've heard of the firm of Ketchum & Cheatam, Wall-street brokers? Very successful concern, too, I'm told.

"Well, here's a true one that beats it. Some years ago, while I was playing in the Helen Holmes serial 'The Girl and the Game,' we found ourselves in Las Vegas, Nev., without a character for a certain part. We scoured high and low, and finally unearthed from under a box car a dirty and dishevelled tramp, who said he had had experience in the films. He looked forlorn and dejected, and, after questioning him, we admitted that he had reason to.

"He said that he had been working in the Coffin mine, in Death Valley, in the Funeral Range, and that he had been on what is known as the 'graveyard shift.' The combination proved too much for his nerves, so he quit."

Dedicated to Better Homes

Summer Comfort in the Home

ONE of the principal fundamentals of successful home furnishing is the creation of environment that harmonizes with the season. In Southern California, where we have summer weather practically the year round, carefully selected summer furniture plays an important part in the furnishing of our homes.

The introduction of just a few appropriate pieces may completely transform the living room and the porch and lawn can be made to yield much more comfort, especially through the midsummer months, when the correct summer furniture is properly employed.

The "California" gives as much thought to the selection of summer furniture as to the most costly period reproductions. You will find here the most desirable types of summer furniture for every home need.

The hand wrought reed pieces which we especially feature are particularly appropriate for the living room, sun room and the bed room. They are beautiful and graceful in design, and the seating pieces are especially deep and generous of proportion, suggesting genuine comfort and hospitality.

We believe our display of summer furnishings will offer you some very welcome and helpful suggestions by which you can profit. We want you to feel free to come and see the display even though you may have no thought of buying.

Summer Gloaming.

It is a summer's gloaming, faint and sweet,
A gloaming brightened by an infant moon
Fraught with the fairest light of middle June;
The garden path rings hard beneath my feet,
And hark, Oh, hear I not the gentle dews
Fretting the gentle forest in his sleep?
Or does the stir of housing insects creep
Thus faintly on mine ear? Day's many hues
Waned with the paling light and are no more,
And none but drowsy pinions beat the air—
The bat is circling softly by my door,
And silent as the snowflake leaves his lair,
In the dark twilight flitting here and there,
Wheeling the self-same circuit o'er and o'er.

The Ten Painters.

The present exhibition of some seventy paintings by the Ten Painters' Club of California is so well worth your while that you must not neglect going to see it before it closes, which will be in the third week of September. It is held at the Kanst Gallery, 826 South Hill street.

Only one name is missing from the list. Guy Rose is showing in the smaller gallery at Kanst's, a one-man exhibition of much charm and distinction, about a score of landscapes and figure studies. The other nine are represented by from three to ten canvases each, much of the work being their very best and latest. On the whole, a notable showing.

Southern California's position in landscape is now assured. Many of our painters take rank among the strongest men in the country, regular exhibitors in the eastern galleries. This need occasion no surprise. Our country is so beautiful, so picture-suggesting at every turn, that the absence of brilliant landscape painters would be an anomaly. They have come from the East, the North and the South, and we have raised many of our own—or, if we haven't raised them, we have at least nurtured them into maturity. Mother Nature herself, broad of bosom and large of lap, and always smiling benignant, did the job for us. Big herself, she is producing big men.

The Ten Painters may or may not be the biggest of her artistic children—the Hundred Painters not in the club will possibly refuse to acknowledge their supremacy — but assuredly they are not the smallest. Some of them are already famous, and all the others hope and expect to be. Nature, in Southern California, is a splendid fostering mother, ready to help those of her children who are ambitious. Hope blooms apace and becomes quick fruition in such a sunny home atmosphere.

The first of the nine to claim our attention, as it happens, is Maurice Braun of San Diego. Braun is technically very expert, and his point of view is generally that of the decorator, who deals in forms that are carefully balanced. Nature is careless and prodigal—Braun corrects and prunes her. There is an excellent scheme of greens in the large canvas entitled "Spring," greens delicately toned with lavenders. "Evening," too, is greenish in hue, and here the greens are shot with golden browns in a quiet and charming composition. "Nocturne" is exquisite, a view of the bay at San Diego by moonlight, with rhythm in the lines of shore and sandbars.

Jack Wilkinson Smith is represented by landscapes and shore marines. Titles not always being available—there is no catalogue—I can call attention to the most charming of the landscape by telling you that it has a row of slender eucalyptus trees in the foreground. Nor am I quite sure of the second of the marines that I especially like. Its name is probably "Tide Worn Rocks," for the foreground holds flat brown rocks over which a pale blue and pale green sea is rushing. "Battering Tide" is even more powerful, mighty gold-brown cliffs and roaring green waves.

Benjamin Brown's "Indian Summer" is a lovely canvas, saturated with elusive light, a golden haze floating along the light-green hillsides. His "Venetian Sails" (my own title) is painted in a free and vigorous way, the tawny gold and red of sails seen above the cool green shadow cast by boats on the great lagoon. The four studies of missions in the collection are valuable as records as well as pictures.

Hanson Puthuff shows two moonlight studies, one of which took a capital prize in a recent exhibition of the California Art Club. The other, "Witchery of Night," is equally good, and gives us a touch of rose in the deep blue of night. "Morning From Wilson" is pale, delicate, almost flower-like in effect, aerial lavenders floating through the entire landscape. "Sunlit Valley" has beautifully modeled green hills, a really big impression of nature.

R. C. Colman offers us a number of seascapes, the ocean seen in late afternoon when the light is golden or roseate. The pictures are well drawn, each study being a truthful transcript of nature. Colman's small landscapes are very attractive.

From Elmer Wachtel comes a group of seven landscapes painted in this artist's simple and masterly way. No painter knows Southern California better than Wachtel, and the impeccable truth of his values gives a wonderful air of completeness to his work. The two Topanga studies are delightful, one being a gold and green effect, the other rose colored. Here we find sheer beauty, and we find it the two studies of wild lilac, the one giving us sunlight in late afternoon, the other mists floating over the hills, both showing us the blue of lilacs among slabs of gray rocks.

Another of our very strong painters is William Wendt. Some of his finest work is seen in the present collection. Unfortunately, the list of names I had in my possession gave me very little cle wto the pictures themselves, and I offer you wild guesses when I submit "The Down Hill Claim," a white cottage among green and dun hills, and showing finely modeled oaks with the nude trunks of sycamore trees in the foreground; "The Padre's Abode," a lovely vista of green landscape seen through the arch of an open mission door; "The House in the Hollow," showing beautiful green hills—and so on.

Both landscape and marines come from Edgar Payne, though his marines are the stronger. He paints with a full brush, and he models rock and wave forms superbly. "Arch Beach Coast" shows us ruddy cliffs to the left, in the foreground rocks that are chilled by shadow, beneath them a cold grayish-blue surging sea. "Choppy Waters" is painted in a high key that makes the lights rather chalky, the foreground cliffs being full of exquisite color. "Arroyo Seco" is a charming effect, pale gold and bluish greens in trees and hills.

The water-color landscapes of Marion Kavanaugh Wachtel have the reputation of being among the most brilliant, technically, now being painted anywhere. This artist, is, indeed, a master in aquarelle, and what she says in a picture is on a par with her manner of saying it. Attractive examples of her best work are to be found in the present collection. Especially fine are "Sunset in the Foothills," wonderful oaks seen in a golden glow of light, the distant mountains showing gold and pink; "San Fernando Valley," a scheme of green and gold, with rose in the halcyon sky that bends over the happy valley, picturesque ragged oaks in the foreground; "Montecito Valley," big forms in delicate blue-greens, a fascinating color scheme.

And thus ends our lesson on the ten painters of California.

ART NOTES.

Dudley Crafts Watson, director of the Milwaukee Art Institute, has proposed to start a traveling one-man show for Max Wieczorek, to start in Milwuakee and to go through three States, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. The collection will consist of about twenty paintings (decorative character studies,) the most of them new and never shown before.

On September 24 a new exhibition of recent work by the members of the Ten Painters' Club of California will open at the Kanst gallery with a big public reception.

A class in landscape painting is conducted by William V. Cahill at Laguna Beach, to close August 30. Mr. Cahill gives field criticisms on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and indoor criticisms on Saturdays.

The next exhibition of the California Art Club will be held at Exposition Park from October 2 to the end of the month. The jury of selection meets September 29 and 30.

J. Duncan Gleason, who has been at Carmel, contemplates going to San Francisco and vicinity. He is delighted with the landscape possibilities of the north.

Dana Bartlett recently made a sketching trip to Catalina Island, where he found much to his mind and brush. He is now at Laguna Beach. In January he will exhibit at the Beatty gallery in Pasadena.

PORTER WAS THERE.

But King Vidor Likes Name Right, Just the Same.

King W. Vidor, the young author-director of the last two striking successes from the Brentwood studio, possess a preference in common with most men, for a correct pronunciation of his name and since that requires the replacement of the "i" with "ee" his ears are often startled when he is addressed for the first time by a stranger.

There is good excuse for those who have had no opportunity of hearing the correct pronunciation, but down in Texas in Vidor's own "bailiwick" he feels that he has the right to take exception to unnecessary garbling of the name.

On a recent trip to Galveston Mr. Vidor's train slowed up for a stop at a station which the porter announced as Vidor—with a very long "i." It happened to be one of the little towns which the father of the young director had built up around one of his lumber interests.

"What do you call this place?" asked Vidor of the porter.

"Vidor"—again with the long "i"—the man replied.

"Hold on!" said Vidor, "You've got that a bit wrong. I happen to know the man after whom this town was named and he calls himself 'Veeder.'"

"Then why don't he spell it that way!" flung back the porter as he hustled forward to open up for the stop.

The great war paid for itself day by day and left no real debts behind it.

Europe is just as rich as, and much better trained for industry than, in 1914.

The only real losses were ships, railroad materials and the devastation in battle areas. They can soon be replaced.

American money must not be used to uphold "sawdust babies" in Europe.

Charity is no substitute for industry, and the United States treasury must not serve as a prop to governing groups.

Communist countries will grow more moderate, while Western Europe moves toward the "left" during reconstruction period.

Wars will not cease until national armaments have been displaced entirely by an international police force.

And sometimes chasing each other around the yard, spring evenings, like a couple of fool kids. Honestly, if a body didn't know Stella Kamps so well and what a fight she had put up to earn a living for herself and the boy after that good-for-nothing Kamps up and left her, and what a housekeeper she was, and all, a person'd think—well—

So, then, Tyler had expected to miss her first of all. And now he missed her only as the average boy of 21 misses the mother he has been used to all his life. He had expected to miss the boys at the bank. He had expected to miss the Mandolin Club. The Mandolin Club met, officially, every Thursday and spangled the Texas night with their tinkling. He had expected to miss the familiar faces on Main street. All the hundred little, intimate, trivial everyday things that had gone to make up his life back home in Marvin, Tex.—these he had expected to miss.

And he didn't.

After ten weeks at the Great Central Naval Training Station so near Chicago, Ill., and so far from Marvin, Tex., there were two things he missed.

He wanted the decent privacy of his small quiet bedroom back home.

He wanted to talk to a girl.

He knew he wanted the first, definitely. He didn't know he wanted the second. The fact that he didn't know it was Stella Kamps's fault. She had kept his boyhood girlless, year and year, by sheer force of her own love for him, and need of him, and by the charm and magnetism that were hers.

A hot enough little room in the Texas winters. But his own.

Until he came to the Great Central Naval Training Station Tyler's nearest approach to the natural life had been when, at the age of 6, he had sailed chips in the wash tub in the back yard. Marvin, Tex., is 500 miles inland. And yet he had enlisted in the navy as inevitably as though he had sprung from a long line of Vikings. In his boyhood his choice of games had always been pirate.

It was the roving, restless spirit of his father in him, I suppose. Clint Kamps had never been meant for marriage. When the baby Tyler was one year old Clint had walked over to where his wife sat, the child in her lap, and had tilted her head back kissed her on the lips, and had gently pinched the boy's rose-leaf cheek with a quizzical forefinger and thumb. Then, indolently, negligently, gracefully, he had strolled out of the house, down the steps into the hot and dusty street and so on and on and out of their lives. Stella Kamps had never seen him again. Her letters back home to her folks in Kansas were triumphs of bravery and bare-faced lying. She managed to make out, somehow, at first. And later very well indeed. As the years went on she and the boy lived together in a sort of closed corporation paradise of their own. At twenty-one Tyler, who had gone through grammar school, high school and business college, and had a position in the Texas State Savings Bank of Marvin, had never kissed a girl or felt a love-pang. Stella Kamps kept her age as a woman does whose brain and body are alert and busy.

On the day he left for the far-away naval training station Stella Kamps for the second time in her life had a chance to show the stuff she was made of and showed it. Not a whimper. Down at the train, standing at the car window, looking up at him and smiling, and saying futile, foolish, final things.

". . . and Tyler remember what I said about your feet. You know. Dry. . . . And I'll send a box every week, only don't eat too many of the nut cookies. They're so rich. Give some to the other—yes, I know you will. I was just . . . Won't it be grand to be right there on the water all the time! My! . . . I'll write every night and then send it twice a week. . . . I don't suppose you . . . Well once a week, won't you, dear? . . . You're moving. The train's going! Good-b—" she ran along with it for a few feet, awkwardly, as a woman runs. Stumblingly.

And suddenly, as she ran, his head always just ahead of her, she thought, with a great pang:

"O my God, how young he is! How young he is, and he doesn't know anything. I should have told him. . . . Things. . . . He doesn't know anything about . . . and all those other men——"

She ran on, one arm outstretched as though to hold him a moment longer while the train gathered speed. "Tyler!" she called, through the din and shouting. "Tyler, be good! Be good!" He only saw her lips moving, and could not hear, so he nodded his head, and smiled, and waved, and was gone.

The first few days had been unbelievably bad, what with typhoid inoculations, smallpox vaccinations, and loneliness. The very first day, when he had entered his barracks one of the other boys, older in experience, misled by Tyler's pink and white and gold coloring, had leaned forward from amongst a group and had called in glad surprise, at the top of a leathery pair of lungs:

"Why, hello, sweetheart!" The others had taken it up with the cruelty of their age. "Hello, sweetheart!" It had stuck.

Tyler met Gunner Moran. Moran, tattooed, hairy-armed hairy-chested as a gorilla and with something of the sadness and humor of the gorilla in his long upper lip and short forehead. But his eyes did not bear out the resemblance. An Irish blue; bright, unravaged; clear beacon lights in a rough and storm-battered countenance. Gunner Moran wasn't a gunner at all, or even a gunners' mate, but just a seaman who knew the sea from Shanghai to New Orleans; from Liverpool to Barcelona. His knowledge of knots and sails and rifles and bayonets and fists was a thing to strike you dumb. He wasn't the stuff of which officers are made. But you should have seen him with a Springfield! Or a bayonet! A bare twenty-five, Moran, but with ten years' sea experience. Into those ten years he had jammed a lifetime of adventure. And he could do expertly all the things that Tyler Kamps did amateurishly.

Because of what he knew they gave him two hundred men at a time and made him company commander, without insignia or official position. In rank, he was only a "gob" like the rest of them. In influence a captain.

This man it was who had Tyler Kamps' admiration. It was more than admiration. It was nearer adoration. But there was nothing unnatural or unwholesome about the boy's worship of this man. It was a legitimate thing, born of all his fatherless years.

In Tyler's third week at the naval station mumps developed in his barracks and they were quarantined. Tyler escaped the epidemic but he had to endure the boredom of weeks of quarantine. At first they took it as a lark, like schoolboys. Moran's hammock was just next to Tyler's. On his other side was a young Kentuckian named Dabney Courtney. The barracks had dubbed him Monicker the very first day. Monicker had a rather surprising tenor voice. Moran a salty bass. And Tyler his mandolin. The trio did much to make life bearable, or unbearable, depending on one's musical knowledge and views. The boys all sang a great deal. They played everything from a saxophone to a harmonica. They read. They talked. And they grew so sick of the sight of one another that they began to snap and snarl.

Sometimes they gathered around Moran and he told them tales they only half believed. He had been in places whose very names were exotic and oriental, breathing of sandalwood, and myrrh, and spices and aloes. They were places over which a boy dreams in books of travel. He had an easy way with him that made you feel provincial and ashamed. It made you ashamed of not knowing the sort of thing you used to be ashamed of knowing.

One of the boys to whom Tyler had never even spoken one day suddenly took a picture out of his blouse pocket and showed it to Tyler. It was a cheap little picture—one of the kind they sell two for a quarter if one sitter; two for thirty-five if two. This was a twosome. The boy, and a girl. A healthy, wide-awake, wholesome-looking small-town girl.

"She's vice-president of the Silver Star Pleasure Club back home," the boy confided to Tyler. "I'm president. We meet every other Saturday."

Tyler looked at the picture seriously and approvingly. Suddenly he wished that he had, tucked away in his blouse, a picture of a clear-eyed, round-cheeked vice-president of a pleasure club. He took out his mother's picture and showed it.

"Oh, yeh," said the boy, disinterestedly.

The dragging weeks came to an end. The night of Tyler's restlessness was the last night of quarantine. Tomorrow morning they would be free. At the end of the week they were to be given shore leave. Tyler had made up his mind to go to Chicago. He had never been there.

Five-thirty. Reveille.

Tyler awoke with the feeling that something was going to happen. Something pleasant. Then he remembered, and smiled.

Tyler had no pal. His years of companionship with his mother had bred in him a sort of shyness, a diffidence. He heard the other boys making plans for short leave. They all scorned Waukegan, which was the first sizable town beyond the station. Chicago was their goal. They were like a horde of play-hungry devils after their confinement. Six weeks of restricted freedom, six weeks of stored-up energy made them restive as colts.

"Goin' to Chicago, kid?" Moran asked him, carelessly. It was Saturday morning.

"Yes. Are you?" eagerly.

"Kin a duck swim?"

At the Y.M.C.A. they had given him tickets to various free amusements and entertainments. They told him about free canteens, and about other places where you could get a good meal, cheap. One of the tickets was for a dance. Tyler knew nothing of dancing. This dance was to be given at some kind woman's club on Michigan boulevard. Tyler read the card, glumly. A dance meant girls. He knew that. Why hadn't he learned to dance?

Tyler walked down to the station and waited for the train that would bring him to Chicago at about 1 o'clock. The other boys, in little groups, or in pairs were smoking and talking. Tyler wanted to join them, but he did not. They seemed so sufficient unto themselves, with their plans, and their glib knowledge of places, and amusements, and girls.

Tyler found himself in the same car with Moran. He edged over to a seat near him, watching him narrowly. Moran was not mingling with the other boys. He kept aloof, his sea-blue eyes gazing out at the flat Illinois prairie. All about him [illegible] and eddied the currents and counter-currents of talk—talk of dances and canteen suppers and entertainments.

Tyler's glance encountered Moran's, and rested there. Scorn curled the Irishman's broad upper lip. "Navy! This ain't no navy no more. Phonographs, an' church suppers, an' pool an' dances! It's enough t' turn a fella's stomick. Lot of Sunday-school kids don't know a sail from a tablecloth when they see it."

Tyler, who, but a moment before had been envying them their familiarity with these very things now nodded and smiled understandingly at Moran. "That's right," he said. Moran regarded him a moment curiously. Then he resumed his staring out of the window. You would never have guessed that in that bullet head there was bewilderment and resentment almost equaling Tyler's, but for a much different reason. Gunner Moran was of the old navy—the navy that had been despised and spat upon. In those days his uniform alone had barred him from decent theaters, decent halls, decent dances, contact with decent people. They had forced him to a knowledge of the burlesque houses, the cheap theaters, the shooting galleries, the saloons, the dives. And now, bewilderingly, the public had right-about faced. It opened its door to him. It closed its saloons to him. It sought him out.

When the train drew in at the great Northwestern station shed he was down the steps and up the long platform before the wheels had ceased revolving.

Tyler came down the steps slowly. Blue uniforms were streaming past him—a flood of them. The great train shed awed him. The vast columned waiting-room, the hurrying people, the uniformed guards gave him a feeling of personal unimportance. He felt very negligible, and useless, and alone. He stood, a rather dazed blue figure, in the vastness of that shining place. A voice—the soft, cadenced voice of the negro—addressed him.

"Lookin' fo' de sailors' clubrooms?"

Tyler turned. A toothy, middle-aged, kindly negro in a uniform and red cap. Tyler smiled friendlily.

"Reckon I am, uncle. Show me the way?"

Red Cap chuckled and led the way. "Knew you was f'om de South minute Ah see yo.' Cain't fool me. Le'ssee now. You-all f'om——?"

"I'm from the finest State in the Union. The most glorious State in the——"

"H'm—Texas," grinned Red Cap.

"How did you know!"

"Ah done heah 'em talk befoh, son. Ah done heah 'em talk befoh."

It was a long journey through the great building to the section that had been set aside for Tyler and the boys like him. Tyler wondered how any one could ever find it alone. When the Red Cap left him, after showing him the wash-rooms, the tubs for scrubbing clothes, the steam dryers, the bath-tubs, the lunchroom, Tyler looked after him regretfully. Then he sped after him and touched him on the arm.

"Listen. Could I—would they—do you mean I could clean up in there—as much as I wanted? And wash my things? And take a bath in a bath tub, with all the hot water I want?"

"Yo' sho' kin. On'y things look mighty grabby now. Always is Sat'days. Jes' wait aroun' an' grab yo' tu'n."

Tyler waited. And while he waited he watched to see how the other boys did things. He saw how they scrubbed their uniforms with scrubbing brushes, and plenty of hot water and soap. He saw how they hung them carefully, so that they might not wrinkle, in the dryers. He saw them emerge, glowing, from the tub rooms. And he waited, the fever of cleanliness burning in his eye.

His turn came. He had waited more than an hour reading, listen-

My Baby's First Summer

WHEN the days and the nights began to be hot and sultry, my baby began to droop. He lost a little weight and he was fretful at night—he who had always slept so well.

I thought a baby properly cared for should be as well and as happy in summer as in winter, so I asked my doctor.

"Why, of course," he said. "We'll give him Nestlé's Milk Food."

So now I know I don't have to be afraid of hot weather. With plenty of cool baths and light enough clothing, and with Nestlé's digesting easily in that little stomach, my baby goes happily on to health and strength.

Nestlé's is just pure milk in powder form, to which has been added cereal and sugar. You only add water to it and boil.

I know the Nestlé Company will be glad to send you, free, enough Nestlé's Food for twelve feedings, and a very good Mother's Book on how to take care of babies, if you will fill out and send the coupon to them. They want to take away your fear of hot weather, as they did mine.

Nestlé's is pure milk in powder form that is already modified and does not require the further addition of milk. Always pure and safe, always uniform, and free from the dangers of home modification. Nestlé's has stood the test of three generations and has today the largest sale of any baby food in the world.

FREE! Enough Nestlé's for 12 feedings. Send the coupon!

New Fall Silks

—Adding to the fascination of new styles—as interesting as the premiere of an opera—Fall and Winter's new silks make their initial appearance.

—The silken fabrics of the Autumn and Winter 1920 are artistic—the wonder achievements of slow weaving and intricate looms—they are distinctive and, above all things, beautiful and "different."

—In plain weaves, satins of the different weights predominate, novelty effects are shown principally in prints in the larger and more decided patterns. Pompadour and floral patterns are found on backgrounds of Georgettes, radiums, pussy willows, Cinderellas, taffetas and satins.

—Particularly for Monday's selling we are offering some very fine values, among which are

36-in. Satin-de-Luxe, $2.50

—Just twelve pieces, in the new Fall shades, of this handsome dress and suit fabric.

—A weave of exceptionally good weight and in lustrous finish—a satin that will give excellent service and is fashionably suitable for practically any style garment.

40-in. Printed Radiums, $3.45

—Fifteen pieces and that means exactly fifteen "different" color combinations in a great variety of pattern styles.

—There are designs ideally correct for gowns as well as the more elaborate patterns so much in demand for lining the better class of coats.

Notable Figures in the Fleet Festivities.

Mrs. Denis and Mrs. Dockweiler were among those at the functions given for Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Mrs. Daniels, and both entertained for Mrs. Daniels—Mrs. Denis at a luncheon at the California Club for a company of thirty, and Mrs. Dockweiler at an English breakfast for twelve at the Los Angeles Country Club, Tuesday. They also were at the reception given for Mrs. Daniels at the Ebell Club, Tuesday. Mrs. Ward, Mrs. Banning, Miss Wallis, Mrs. Schlessinger and Miss Anderson also were there. Mrs. Iden, who is the wife of the Pacific Fleet surgeon, with Mrs. Scott, wife of the commander of the torpedo-boat destroyer Anthony, was in the receiving line at the Ebell Club reception for Mrs. Daniels, Tuesday, and the entire group graced the big ball at Shrine Auditorium, Monday evening, in honor of Secretary and Mrs. Daniels and Admiral Hugh Rodman.

Price.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Mueller had with them that evening Dr. and Mrs. Thomas McNab, and Dr. Ralph Williams.

With Dr. and Mrs. Ellis Jones were Dr. and Mrs. Francis Shrine, Dr. and Mrs. Walter Jarvis Barlow, Mr. and Mrs. William de Mille, and Mr. and Mrs. Chester Ploesser.

By Rear-Admiral Coontz.

Rear-Admiral Coontz was host on Thursday at a tea which he gave on board the flagship Wyoming. Mrs. Henry Norman Jenson, just home from Washington, acted as hostess. Others in the group were Commander Jenson, Mrs. Russell McDonnell Taylor, Clark Keely, Miss Mary Gray and Miss Dorothy Gray.

At the Midwick Country Club.

The Midwick Country Club was last evening the scene of a brilliant gathering at a dinner-dance given in honor of 150 officers of the fleet and their wives.

The largest dinner parties noted were those given by Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Eugene Overton and Mrs. Joseph Hixon. Each entertained forty guests.

For Wife of Navy Secretary.

Mrs. George J. Denis was hostess at one of the most beautifully-appointed affairs of the week when she entertained thirty guests at luncheon on Monday at the California Club in honor of Mrs. Josephus Daniels, wife of the Secretary of the Navy.

The table was a thing of beauty with its floral decoration of water flowers. Three big low gilt baskets graced either end and the center. Nine others were placed about the board. These were filled with pink water flowers shading into lavender and deep purple. The handles of each basket were tied with huge bows of light French blue ribbons which trailed about among the yellow, white and pink water lilies that lay in beds of fern about the table.

Mrs. Daniels wore a frock of black embroidered crepe with a hat trimmed with French blue ostrich feathers. She wore a corsage of white orchids. Mrs. Denis was in a handsome frock of Chinese embroidered white silk crepe, with which she wore a chic white hat.

Mrs. Isidore B. Dockweiler also entertained for Mrs. Daniels at a smart breakfast on Tuesday at the Los Angeles Country Club. A dozen guests were seated about the table which was gay with baskets filled with gorgeous-hued dahlias.

Mrs. Dockweiler is now chaperoning [illegible] party at Catalina, wh[illegible]ludes her debutante da[illegible] Misses Mary and Ro[illegible]ler and her sons, G[illegible]hn Dockweiler. They al[illegible] dinner-dance at the Ho[illegible]herine last evening.

Mr. [illegible] House Party.

Mr[illegible] Mrs. J. Ross Clark have just returned from Montana, where they were gone two months—five weeks visiting Mrs. Clark's sister, Mrs. Marcus Daly at her country place at Riverside, near Hamilton, and later as the guest of W. A. Clark, Jr., who is entertaining a house party at his lodge at Salmon Lake near Missoula. Others in this party who are still there include Miss Katherine Mellus, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Clark, Miss Cora Saunders of Los Angeles, Frank Shaw of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Templeton, Mrs. Barker, Judge Lippincott and others. W. A. Clark, III, also was entertaining at the lodge, having small J. Ross Clark, Jr., and Billy Stum of Los Angeles as guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lewis are leaving today for Montana to visit her sister, Mrs. Marcus Daly.

For Mrs. Holterhoff.

Mrs. Godfrey Holterhoff, of Los Angeles, who is passing the summer in Coronado, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given at the Grant Hotel, Monday afternoon, by Mrs. G. Aubrey Davidson. The table was centered with exquisite lotus blossoms and ferns and covers were arranged for Mrs. Davidson, Mrs. Holterhoff, Miss Leila Holterhoff, Mrs. George Macaulay and Miss Katherine Bashford of Los Angeles, Mrs. W. S. Dorland, Mrs. George MacKenzie, Mrs. Frye, Mrs. Brinkerhoff and Miss Gertrude Gilbert. After the luncheon the party motored out to the Organ Pavilion at Balboa Park, and by special request of Dr. J. Humphrey Stewart, Miss Holterhoff sang Bach-Gonoud's "Ave Maria," Dr. Stewart accompanying on the magnificent Spreckels organ. Miss Holterhoff so delighted her audience that Dr. Stewart requested her to give a special programme at the pavilion this afternoon. Miss Holterhoff leaves for New York, August 25 and she will be accompanied by Mrs. Macaulay who is planning to pass the fall and part of the winter in Washington, D. C., with her sister and brother-in-law, Congressman and Mrs. Ira Clifton Copley (Edith Strohn) of Aurora, Ill.

Interesting House Guest.

Mrs. William H. Anderson of 4300 Victoria Park drive had as house guest last week Mrs. I. N. Ford of New York, whose husband was for years the London correspondent of the New York Tribune and considered one of the most distinguished Americans who ever lived in the great British capital. Mrs. Ford was a leader in American society there. During her visit, Mrs. Anderson entertained her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Langmuir, and several old friends at dinner.

Other interesting dinner guests at the Anderson home were Mrs. George Lavinge and her son, B. Onslow Levinge, who are cousins of the noted Irish playwright, Lord Dunsany, the author of the Dominion plan for settling the Irish question. Mr. Levinge is also a cousin of Sir Horace Plunkett and of the present Earl of Levinge. He served in the American army in the war and has become a naturalized American, but his mother goes soon to join her husband, who is a British officer.

By Miss Marsh.

Miss Florence Marsh is planning to give a dinner-dance on Wednesday evening at the Los Angeles Country Club in compliment to Miss Katherine Warman of Scranton, Pa., who is a house guest of Miss Julia Hayward.

At Del Mar.

Miss Josephine Cook and Miss Alice Triest of this city were members of a jolly party Tuesday evening at Startford Inn, Del Mar. After a three-hour horseback ride they partook of supper. Others in the group were Misses Annie Klauber, Edna and Frances Sherman and Messrs. Allen Klauber and Robert and Frank Triest.

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Kerckhoff and their daughter, Miss Marion

RIALTO.

Seeing the fleet has been by far the most popular form of recreation during the past week and many have enjoyed a picnic along the way in some shady canyon or a beautiful city park or at the beach. All resorts within each reach from the route to and fro from the fleet have been very liberally patronized. Some have boarded the ships. To give a list of Rialtoans making the trip would be like giving a census of the city and town.

Thursday evening the ranch home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Shipkey, on East Merrill avenue, formed a beautiful setting for a family reunion and genuine old-fashioned barbecue in honor of the soldier son, Sergt. Arthur Shipkey, but just returned from overseas. A suckling pig was roasted over the bonfire, and, served outside with all appropriate fixin's, provided a feast fit for the king or even a just-returned army lad whom all delight to honor. There were many other enjoyable features, ending with a display of fireworks. Participants in the novel event included Sergt. Arthur Shipkey, J. H. Wilkins and family, L. Bullock's August Clearance

"The One Sale Of The Year"

Again—a Monday

—A Bullock August Clearance Monday because of the Merchandise, the Values, and the Service it will provide because of Bullock's—

—The puzzle of it is, as it has been so frequently during this Month of "The One Sale of the Year," how one day can provide so much and so well—

—Which indeed it could not if "The One Sale of the Year" were not the goal of the preparations of Months with all the energy, and the heart, and the sincerity of Bullock's put into them—

—Which indeed it will, however (and in the face of a Market that is as contrary as a Market well could be—a Market, diametrically negative, that is muttering continually and shaking its head repeating "Impossible! It can't be done" which is the truth—) because it is inspired by precedent and imbued with Ideal and Purpose—

—So many, many, many of these Bullock August Clearance features have been and are "Impossible!" according to the measure of today—

—The writer wishes you could have been with him for the past several hours, as he has gone from section to section, gathering the gist of the schedule for Monday—

—If you had been you would understand and not underestimate—for the facts, difficult to convey through the printed word, are that there is Merchandise enough and there are new Values enough and they are important enough in the opportunities that they present so that Monday could be as notable a shopping day for you and for everyone as was Friday, August 1, the first day of "The One Sale of the Year"—

—Of course this will not be—One thing, if nothing else, call it the "The Psychology of Sales" if you will, will prevent——Yet Monday should have its own place among the high days of this important event—because of its vigorous value vitality.

"Let's Go Through the Store"

floor by floor and see—

—Take the first floor of Bullock's Hill Street Building—There will be Models, Sample Hand Embroidered Pieces—(Pillows, Scarfs, Table Covers, Baby Wear and the like)—beautiful as they can be—reduced! reduced! reduced! for Clearance—and supplemented by purchases equally low priced—Next to them will be fine hand-worked Madeira Linen in sets as unexpected and delightful as they should be spontaneously bought—

—On the first floor of Bullock's Broadway Building, a galaxy of Clearance Stars—

—Silk Stockings mind you, when silk stockings are difficult to get at regular prices—Silk Stockings irresistible in quality, that women should own by dozen of pairs without hesitation because of their price—

—Stationery (writing paper and Correspondence Cards) that invites women and men alike to delve deep into its treasure to provide for future needs—

—Gloves (of lambskin and of kid) examples of glove character at exceeding little cost—

—Women's Shoes (high, low, of leather and fabrics) marked so radically as to be ranked with phenomena by those who know—

—Silverware, Jewelry, Ribbons, Hand Bags, Neckwear, Toilet Helps, Notions and Men's Furnishings (do not fail to comprehend them in the entirety of their Clearance interest, and Thermos Jugs and Carafes (additions to every home) at their Clearance prices.

—On the second floor—Silks! Glorious Silks—humbled and glad to be humbled in this cause; Linens for tablings at—but those who need Linens will not ignore—Towels, Flannels, Ginghams and Wash Cottons, all of them concerned and enthusiastically so; Laces, Embroideries and Trimmings—the rendezvous (do you know how advisable many are considering it to mentally plan and forehandedly prepare for Winter Dresses, even those of Spring?—It is the advice of Thrift)—

—On the fourth floor, Athena Union Suits—a sample line routed for Bullock's Clearance—several styles of these famous suits at prices destined to make them more famous yet—Women who know will ACT, not WAIT—

—Crepe de Chine and Muslin Underwear, too, and Corsets (Ivy and La Camille)— —On the fifth floor—Outing Goods are represented in more than a meager way—

—On the sixth floor—Bedding, (Sheetings, Blankets, and Spreads without stint)—Rugs; Draperies—Floor Lamps and Shades—

—On the seventh floor—Furniture according to the demand of Bullock's in character and of Bullock's August Clearance in price.

—The thought is that because those who need Furniture and know the conditions of the markets of Furniture, Rugs, and such—are not delaying their purchasing—those who do not know should take their example as a guide.

—And so all through the store on its many floors, and its many sections—.
Again—a Monday—a Bullock August Clearance Monday is on its way towards "Friends!"

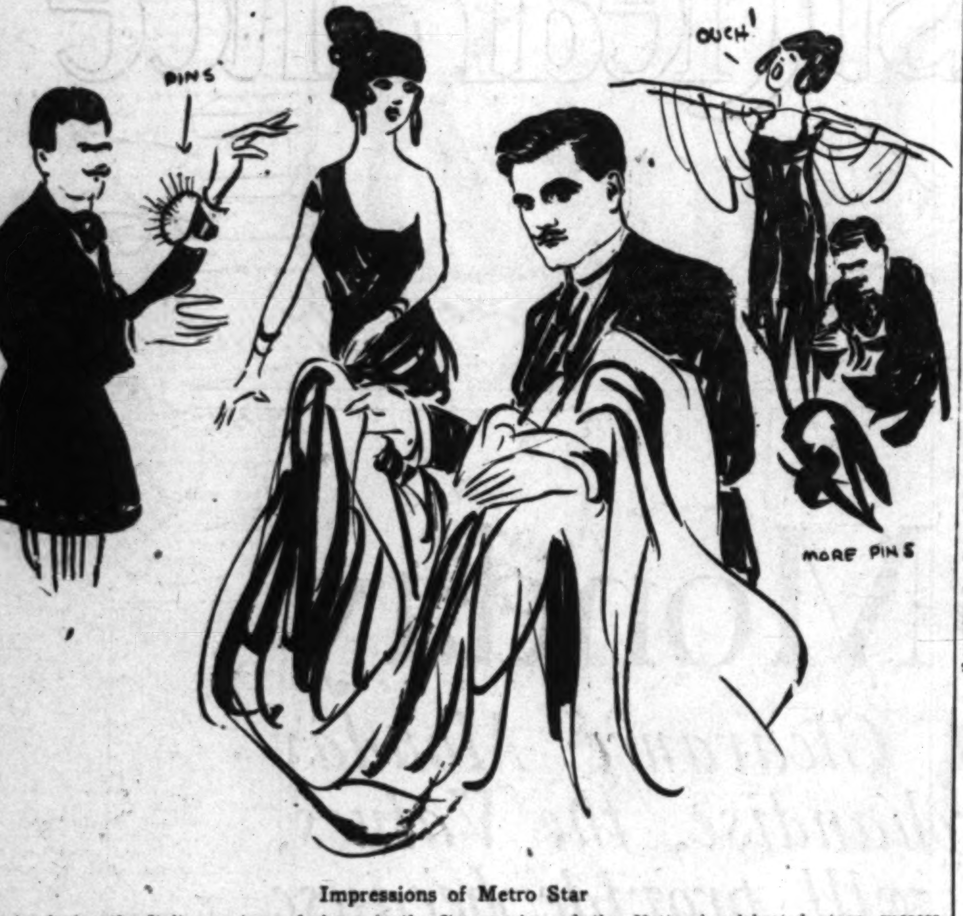
WHOEVER :: SAID :: LOMBARDI :: WAS :: LIMITED?

Bert Lytell Makes Him Versatile Person.



Impressions of Metro Star

Who is playing the Italian costume designer in the film version of the Hattons' celebrated stage success.

INTRODUCING MR. LOMBARDI.

count for anything. It's the hooks and eyes. All the drapes are together. But you have to pretend that you're pinning them. The other day I had such a lot of trouble with those hooks and eyes, that I forgot to put in the pins, and so they had to take the scene over again."

Lytell can run off the names of various kinds of cloth now like the head of a cloak and suit department. They have all manner of fancy and exclusive patterns, and cloth, which give to the Metro stage the attribute of a dressmaking establishment.

AND THE MODELS.

On the stage appear also models in all stages of clothedness. Now and then one will step up to the pedestal and Lytell will wrap a piece of tulle or satin around her waist or drape it over her shoulder. Mayhaps, he will pour pretty nothings into her ear while so doing, as a part of the play.

The other day when he was leaving the studio a girl passed him and said, "How d'ye do, Mr. Lytell." He looked at her in blank nonrecognition.

"Who's that girl" he asked the assistant director with whom he was talking.

"Well, you ought to know," said the director. "She's one of the models you've been draping the past week."

"No wonder I didn't know her," said Lytell. "That's the first time I've ever seen her dressed."

Despite the light manner in which Lytell is inclined to treat his attempts at sartorial expression, he is very serious about his role of Lombardi. He says that he hopes to evolve a new method of realizing the Italian character on the screen. "It would be impossible to visualize Lombardi for the public in the quiet manner that Leo Carrillo did on the stage," he says. "This may be true to life, but Carrillo had his dialect to fall back on. In my case, I would not be able to convey a popularly-comprehensible Lombardi unless I made the character in some degree with the public's conception of the Italian. I have to rely on a certain exaggeration in gesture and expression. Yet, I am endeavoring to avoid doing this in the banal and commonplace way that is so familiar in the photoplay."

So there is a chance that Lytell, who is now playing the role of a designer in the world of fashions, may become the style-center of a new interpretation of the Latin character. His gamut for whimsical and light comedy has been made plainly apparent in his successful work in other photoplays, and he seems to be especially suited personally and by ability to realize the Hattons' famous stage character on the silversheet.

Lytell is essentially the clever actor. He is sparkling in his talk, and easy in his manner. You should really see the nonchalant way in which he can deck out the figure of a girl with a piece of voile or whatever you call it. You'd think he'd been understudying for Lombardi all his life. It is because he knows his art that he can so adriotly cover up the deficiencies which are so often part and parcel of mere man's personality in the face of the baffling mysteries of woman's attire.

ROMANCE OF MADLAINE.

Everybody turned to and tried to make Barham happy after that. Mrs. Steppout tried to draw him out, but he wouldn't be drawn.

In the moonlight, as they parted at the station, after saying some things I couldn't hear, Mr. Turner told Miss Traverse that Barham was one of the finest fellows in the world; that he had just returned from France, where he had distinguished himself for bravery; that he was an excellent mechanician, and that he was proud to have him as a business associate.

And oh! didn't Miss Swansdown try to make up to Barham after that? But all to no purpose. He was nice and polite—but you could see he liked me best.

But of course, I cannot possibly ever think of anybody but Dick!

HELEN EDDY CAN EXPERT IN AUTOS.

When Helen Jerome Eddy becomes tired of the movie game she can get a job at selling automobiles. An Olive-street concern offered her one the other day.

It happened thusly. Miss Eddy saw an advertisement of a car for sale, and for her that's a bait more potent than an advertisement of lingerie marked down to 98 cents. So she rushed down to the motor car company, which, she discovered, was not run by a descendant of the Puritans, but by two shrewd Hebrews.

The car was marked $1000.

"Why, you didn't pay more than $600 for it," said the car-wise Miss Eddy.

The dealers looked at her askance, and they grew almost cross-eyed when they found that the motion picture actress knew everything there was to know about a machine.

"She's an agent!" one of them whispered excitedly. "She's an agent!"

They parleyed long and vociferously and finally asked her if she wouldn't work for them on a commission basis, and when Miss Eddy admitted she already had a job, they cried again, "She's an agent!" Couldn't she wouldn't she, please, come and work for them Sunday afternoon? They followed her almost half a block, still begging her to come.

BEGIN FILMING "THE THIRD EYE"

Warner Oland is the Star of Astra Serial.

Van Loan Story is the Basis of Scenario.

Eileen Percy Plays Picture Actress in Feature.

Production has been launched on "The Third Eye," the serial co-starring Warner Oland and Eileen Percy, at the Astra studio in Glendale, Cal., with James W. Horne at the directorial helm.

"The Third Eye" was written by H. H. Van Loan, author of many successful photoplays, among the latest of which is "The New Moon," the Norma Talmadge release. The continuity is by William Parker, and supervised by Gilson Willets, Pathe's scenario chief, who journeyed to the West Coast especially to put his stamp of approval on the manuscript.

Warner Oland arrived in Glendale exactly on the date Gasnier had planned to start "shooting" and immediately donning his make-up—borrowed make-up at that—promptly reported to Director Horne. He had read the screen role of the master criminal he is portraying, and so was familiar with the histrionic details of the first two episodes. Oland, noted for his work in Pathe serials, as well as in Paramount-Artcraft specials, with Elsie Ferguson, will enact a dual role. First he is Curtis Steele, the brains behind an international organization of crooks; then Malcom Graw, under which name he continues his nefarious supercrimes.

Eileen Percy plays Rita Moreland, film star, whom Steele desires to possess, but whose sweetheart is Dick Keene, a newspaper reporter, played by Jack Mower.

Mark Strong is Capt. Gale, the chief of detectives in the serial. His latest role was a dual characterization supporting Ruth Roland in "The Tiger's Trail." Previous to that he was in several features and serials as a "heavy" and character actor. Olga Grey is Steele's cast-off mistress, the "vamp" of the piece.

The camera work will be cared for by Connie de Roo, who filmed "The Tiger's Trail" and "Hands Up," and Harry Cooper, who grinds second camera.

Denver Harmon, formerly Fannie Ward's electrical expert, is the lighting chief, while Al Barker is property mogul. Frank Ormton, whose art work is favorably known in half a dozen big studios, is Horne's technical director.

A. T. Dobson is assisting Horne.

STAR TELLS WHAT SHE LOOKS FOR IN FILMS.

Carol Holloway, the Vitagraph's breezy queen of the cinema serials, starring in "Perils of Thunder Mountain," now showing at the Palace Theater, gives an interesting answer to the question as to what emotions affect the star in gazing on her work.

"The idea that photoplayers view their handiwork with a more or less personal interest, as regards the hang of the skirt, the drape of her gown or the wave in her hair, is all wrong, says Miss Holloway.

"I sincerely believe that, like myself, other photoplayers, with art uppermost in their minds, look upon the ribbons of celluloid to note the results obtained by the director, the technique observed by the players in producing an impression, how the support plays up to the leads, the propriety of the settings, whether the lighting effects helped to produce the mood of romance, mystery, etc.

"In other words, we look on the picture in such a way that we can say, after having seen it through, much as we might on finishing a novel, 'it's a good story,' or 'I enjoyed the manner in which Reginald got his revenge more than anything in a long time; some such remark which will gauge, in a degree, the picture's appeal.

DRAMATIC RESCUE WITH WARWICK HERO.

Robert Warwick, formerly a major on the General Staff in Paris and now returned to stardom on the screen, gave an exhibition of genuine heroism at Kern River recently. The Famous Players-Lasky company supporting him in "Capt. Dieppe" had just returned from "location" on that river with the story of the noted star's bravery.

From 9 o'clock in the evening until 2 in the morning the company had been fighting and struggling out in the river. A prop very necessary to the production dropped out of Howard Gay's pocket and floated downstream. Gay followed and fell into a nine-foot hole with a treacherous current.

Too chilled and exhausted by his five-hour experience in the stream to swim and fight the current, he was in real danger of drowning until Warwick heard his frantic calls for help.

The Paramount-Artcraft star, though he, too, was worn out by exertions, swam to the rescue, and succeeded in holding Gay's head above water until ropes were thrown out so the two weakened men could be pulled to shore.

Despite his close call, Gay when rescued still clutched in his hand a revolver he had been using in the scene.

WRITES SONG FOR FAY.

Thomas Bruce, organist of J. H. Christie's Strand Theater, Tacoma, Wash., has written a song, "Dangerous Nan McGrew," around Fay Tincher and her picture of that title, in which she soon will appear. Mr. Bruce, whose song is a one-step, received his inspiration from seeing Fay Tincher in a previous Christie special, and completed the words and music while Miss Tincher was appearing in person at the Strand Theater in Tacoma on her recent trip through the Northwest.

SIGNS WITH ALLAN DUAN.

Lillian Ducey, who has just finished titling the superfeature, "The Pinnacle," directed by Erich von Stroheim, has signed up with Allan Dwan. She will begin work at once on Harold McGrath's novel, "A Splendid Hazard."

For this reason Mrs. Goldsmith will devote herself at the next meeting to story-telling. Tales grave and gay will be presented.

Entre Nous Club.

Last Wednesday afternoon, at the meeting of the Entre Nous Club, Mrs. Lillian Gibson entertained about forty members and guests at her home, 144 North Chicago street. Mr. H. J. Big Sisters' League.

A 10 and 15-cent store that will help reduce the high cost of living, and that will contain everything from farm implements to beauty restorers, will be one of the features of the Big Sisters' League carnival to be given on Olive street, September 6. Mrs. Rose Bryant of Hollywood, has charge of this feature of the carnival.

This is to be a 100 per cent. benefit and the various committees report many donations coming in, as this charity is of general interest to all citizens. The lighting effects used for the Olive-street dances for the sailors have been donated. Mrs. Weirick will have 500 home-made cakes for sale; Mrs. John J. Butler has ordered fifty gallons of ice cream, and Mrs. Berthold Baruch will have a varied stock of goods, with many surprises. Many clubs in the city and surrounding towns are co-operating to make this carnival and dance a success, as the women of the executive board of the training home are working to make the home self-supporting.

and too broadly recognized to need comment. The university includes the college of liberal arts, college of law, college of dentistry, college of theology, college of pharmacy, college of music, college of oratory, college of fine arts and the university high school.

Those familiar with the present plans and programme for the University of Southern California are looking forward with more than usual interest to the opening of the thirty-seventh year of the institution. With the opening of the fall semester of liberal arts on September 29 active work will be commenced on the greater university programme by the laying of the corner-stone of the new $500,000 administration building, which is to be the first of a series of buildings to be erected within the next few years. All the departments of the university will be grouped on one campus as quickly as buildings can be provided to house the various departments.

Added courses will be given this year in each of the nine affiliated colleges, with a faculty numbering 300 professors. Practically each department will be enlarged and strengthened with the introduction of several new and important courses.

With the grouping of the most successful summer session in the history of the university, which numbered 1150 students, and with a total registration for the year of 4375, those in charge of the work of the institution are looking forward to a record-breaking year both in the courses offered and the number of students enrolled.

Colleges of the University of California will open the fall semesters as follows: Liberal arts, September 29; theology, September 29; music, September 15; medicine, September 22; fine arts, September 29; dentistry, September 16; oratory, September 29; law, September 22; pharmacy, September 29.

Janes School.

The Misses Janes private school, 6544 Hollywood boulevard, is another splendid educational institution which, established nine years ago, is more than holding its own. This school is for kindergarten and primary grades, the featured courses being French and esthetic dancing. The fall term will open September 24. For full information, telephone 57225.

Blackburn School of Dressmaking.

Every ambitious young woman, whether she be rich or poor, wants to know how to make her own clothes, both for the sake of economy and to satisfy her individual taste in dress, not to mention the fact that a knowledge of dressmaking makes her independent of the dressmaker and saves her a great deal of time and worry. The Blackburn studio, which is said to teach the latest system in dress cutting and designing, is located at 812 West Seventh street and is under the management of Mrs. D. Wood Wilson and Mrs. L. B. Pettitt, who have been in charge of the school since March. The school-teachers reproducing, designing, pattern building and corset-making and young ladies are invited to the studio to make their own gowns.

Miss Thomas's School.

The schoolroom of the happy students of the Miss Thomas's school is walled by beautiful shade trees, floored with a carpet of green grass and arched over by rose vines that cover the giant pergolas distributed throughout three and one-half acres of lovely garden. The school was founded by Miss M. T. Thomas in 1900 and is exclusively for girls under 15 years of age who wish to prepare for the Girls' Collegiate, the Marlborough or any other institution of high school grade. The special feature of the school is the individual attention given the pupils.

Westlake Art School.

Carolyn Wood, director of the Westlake Art Studio's School, announced yesterday that she has secured Patrick O'Neil, famous Irish tenor, to take charge of the vocal department of the school. Mr. O'Neil began his studies when a mere lad, in Ireland, with the great tenor, Barton McGuckin, later going to Paris and studying under Bouchy. For the last five years Mr. O'Neil has been at the head of the voice department of "The Omaha Conservatory of Music and Art." During the present session the dramatic department of the Westlake Art Studio's School will be in charge of Ben Scovell, nephew of Sir Henry Irving and son of the very Rev. Dean Scovell of Salisbury Cathedral, England. Mr. Salisbury counts his successful students by the score. He was in charge of the Shakespearean department in the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York, while Dorothy Wood was attending that institution. The department of elocution and expression will be under direction of Miss Kate Greening, who holds several English certificates. Miss Greening's love for children and her success in their training has won for her many friends among the parents of students of this school. The piano department has been fortunate enough to secure the services of Miss Myrtle Sheppard, who comes from the college of music, Illinois Woman's College. Dancing will be taught by Christina Pareda, a famous Spanish dancer from the vaudeville act, "The Land of Joy." Instruction on the banjo, guitar and mandolin will be given by Prof. Enrique M. Robles, who was a pupil of the well-known guitar artist, O. Yanez. Senora Concha de Rodrequez has been employed as teacher of Spanish.

Southwestern University.

Among the educational establishments of the Southland which are fast gaining State-wide recognition should be mentioned the Southwestern University. Located in commodious quarters in the Wilcox Building, this university comprises two splendid schools, the school of law and the school of commerce, accounts and finance. The dean and professor of higher accountancy is Reynold E. Blight, C.P.A., the head of the law school being Arthur J. Abbott, A.B., J.D. The Southwestern University was established to meet the insistent demand for more scientific professional training. Its methods and courses of instruction are thorough and practical, embodying the highest standards found in American universities. The library, an important feature, contains approximately 1600 volumes, including all the principle standard reports, digests and text-books and affords to students excellent reference facilities. Besides the legal section, there is a special department devoted to leading works bearing on accounting, commercial and financial matters which meets the needs of the students of commerce, accounts and finance. The faculty of the school of law is composed of professional law teachers, most of whom are also engaged in active practice. From time to time special lectures are given by members of the judiciary and prominent members of the California bar. The school of commerce, accounts and finance was founded to the end that its students may become fitted to deal with situations and conditions of business in its larger aspects. The aim of the school is quite as much to benefit the industrial and commercial enterprises as to help the student, and the graduates of this school are said to be eagerly sought by men of large affairs.

Los Angeles Business College.

The Los Angeles Business College, 327 West Eighth street, successor to Heald's College, established in 1890, has one straight business ideal and that is to increase the efficiency, and hence the earning power of its graduates. The success of this policy is best indicated by the recognition given it by employers. From January 1, 1919, to July 31 of the present year, the number of calls for help received at this college amounted to 464, while the positions filled, for the same period were 175. The figures speak for themselves. The average salary of the beginners, from this college, is approximately $73 per month. Besides the day school, in which book-keeping, high accountancy and secretarial work are taught, a splendid night school is conducted for young men and women who want to "brush up" on business subjects. The faculty of the Los Angeles Business College consists of E. R. Shrader, A.M., Ph.D., president; J. E. Owen, vice-president; C. W. Clark, secretary, and Edith Kallmyer, principal and treasurer.

Hollywood School for Girls.

Another educational establishment boasting of its open-air "school rooms" is the Hollywood School for Girls, 1749 La Brea avenue. This excellent school for young women (in which, however, boys are received in the lower grades as day pupils) was founded in 1911 and has been making constant progress since its inception. Pupils are taken from the kindergarten through the high school courses and graduates are admitted to the State university without examination. The faculty membership consists of fourteen teachers, all college women, with Mrs. Louise Knappen Woollett as principal. For the present session the school already has enrolled 150 pupils, the largest number in its history. Mrs. Linda Hazelton, who was responsible for the more than creditable showing in the art department last year, will be in charge the coming year, and Violet Sutton Doeg, the famous ex-tennis champion, will, as before, give instruction in tennis. Mr. Ransford, owner of Garden Court and one of the benefactors of the school, has contributed again the use of the beautiful Garden Court tennis courts to the use of this school.

St. Mary's College.
Oakland, California

With a half century of effective service behind it, St. Mary's College, at Oakland, is still moving ahead. This splendid institution, popularly known as "the college for men," is conducted by a society of Catholic educators and scholars, the Brothers of the Christian Schools. The college includes four schools in Oakland, these being: The school of arts and letters which confers the academic degree of bachelor of arts; the school of civil engineering which confers the degree of bachelor of science; the school of commerce, offering a thorough training in the elements of business practice, and the high school which is standard in every respect. The preparatory school of St. Mary's College, also conducted by the brothers, is St. Joseph's Academy, Peralta Park, Berkeley. The fall semester begins, in the school of arts and letters and the school of engineering, September 2. The high school and the school of commerce start this month.

Anna Head School.
Berkeley, California.

Under the shadow of the campanile of the University of California at Berkeley is located the Anna Head School for Girls, a feature full of significance to those who have breathed the academic air of a great university. To anyone, however, remotely he may be interested in educational work, the university symbolizes opportunity and intellectual endeavor. Certainly much good comes out of the University of California, in a practical way, for the Anna Head School. Through the facilities offered, teachers in the Anna Head School keep intimately in touch with all advances both in the subjects they teach and in the methods of teaching. The Anna Head School offers most exceptional opportunities. In the one organization is contained primary, grammar and high school instruction. It possesses excellent facilities for physical development and recreation, a swimming pool, gymnasium, tennis and basketball courts. All of these activities are under competent supervision. For thirty-two years this school has maintained its high standards of work and is accredited by colleges and universities in the East and West. The name has recently been changed from the Head School to the Anna Head School and the fall term will open, September 4, under the new name.

Raymond School.
San Francisco.

Harking back to the ancient days when great philosophers were taught, not in classes, but individually and by renowned instructors, the Raymond School of Individual Instruction is today one of the most unique and, withal, most efficient institutions of learning in San Francisco. A recent visit to this school showed every recitation room equipped for a teacher and one pupil. Since its foundation nineteen years ago this school has been developed in various parts of the country methods of instruction approximating its own. In the study rooms each student prepares the lesson for which he, as an individual, is responsible to his or her instructor. The face of the student reveals the earnest expression of one who plies a task whose importance he realizes and for which he is acquainted with the suitable method at attack. The studies are conducted in such a manner as to involve a minimum of memory work and a maximum of reasoning. Of all the various lines of work included in a well-rounded high school course, each is pressed into service to aid, in its own peculiar manner, in the highest development of the mental power of the student. Those who believe in this old and yet new-to-the-age style of instructing the mind of youth would do well to communicate with the faculty of the Raymond School.

Drew's Coaching School.
San Francisco.

"As a result of their coaching in Drew's Coaching School, San Francisco, nearly 100 boys have entered Annapolis or West Point." That is the boast of John S. Drew, principal of the northern institution. "Since its founding in 1908, said Prof. Drew, "the school has served a growing clientele as a result of the outstanding record of repeated successes achieved by its students. So widely has its reputation spread that in one season representatives from fourteen States were enrolled for courses leading to the army and navy. The school has functioned as an institution where students from the Pacific Coast can be tutored under favorable conditions for admission to the two great government schools or for entrance into Harvard, Yale, Stanford, the University of California, or any of America's higher homes of learning."

Hamlin's School for Girls.
San Francisco.

One of the oldest, and admittedly one of the best girls' schools west of the Rocky Mountains, is Miss Hamlin's School for Girls at Pacific avenue and Broadway, San Francisco. The history of this school, the fall semester of which will open September 1, dates back to Dr. Samuel H. Wiley, founder of the University of California. The main distinctions of this school are its ideals, which include the most thorough scholarship, meeting the requirements of the best eastern and western colleges to which students are admitted from the Hamlin School without examination. The institution is nonsectarian and the social life is largely under the control of the student body.

The New Education.
Cora Williams School, Berkeley.

Thinking men and women are demanding a new education. One response to this call is the Cora L. Williams School for Creative Education, in Berkeley. In this school thinkers of national prominence are working earnestly at the educational problem which today confronts the progressive world. Perhaps the phrase, "historical interpretation," best describes the work which Bernard Maybeck is doing in leading pupils to vision the life of a period as expressed through its art and architecture. Mr. Maybeck is the man who built the famous Palace of Fine Arts. Story writing, in charge of W. C. Morrow, is another distinctive feature of the school, while drama and music are taught by noted specialists. Mrs. Adelia R. Hornbrook, authority on the teaching of arithmetic, is in charge of mathematics, while still another noted educator of the institution, is Harold Fairbanks, geographer. The high school subjects are under the supervision of professors from the University of California.

Polytechnic College.
Oakland, Cal.

That California is today offering unparalleled opportunities to well-trained, ambitious young people is the opinion of W. E. Gibson, president of the Polytechnic College of Oakland. "The volume of business in the entire country is growing at a prodigious rate," said Mr. Gibson, "and California, particularly, is experiencing a remarkable expansion in all lines of commercial activity. Our college at present cannot fill one-tenth of the calls coming to its offices for graduates. The Polytechnic College plans the most intensified, thorough and practical courses ever offered by any institution in the West. Its policy will be to see that each student receives a thorough training and that he is located in a good position.

Piedmont Academy for Boys.

Announcement was made yesterday of the purchase of the home of the late Henry Butters, Piedmont millionaire, by a group of San Francisco and Oakland business and professional men, to be used as an exclusive school for boys and young men between the ages of 8 and 16. Nathan H. Frank is president of the new institution; F. Harrison Smitton is vice-president; R. Stanley Dollar of San Francisco, second vice-president; James Tyson of the Charles Nelson Steamship Company, treasurer, and Norman H. Nesbitt, M.A., principal. Thé staff consists of a number of widely-known professors. It is the aim of the Piedmont Academy to develop the boy mentally, morally and physically. The classes will be kept so small that the particular needs of each boy may receive special attention. It is planned to open the school September 3.

Glendora Foothills School.

Think of an outdoor school in Southern California's winter, nestled so closely at the base of the "Madre" Mountains that a shoulder of the mountain itself forms a classroom wherein children get their first true ideas of word-forming and man's beginning. This is the Glendora Foothills School, the Bishop's School for Young Children and the All-Year Outdoor Elementary School for both boys and girls from 4 to 14 years of age. "Book work" is on every hand vitalized by application and illustration in experiences and observation of rocks, flowers, birds, streams and of the denizens of mountain and forest. When the July sun becomes too ardent these happy children pack their beds, bathing suits, fishing rods, guns and all things needed for seashore sports and are taken to the beach, where the school term is finished.

HARLAND TUCKER SHOWS HIS DARING.

MAKES WAGER THAT HE CAN DUPLICATE FRENCH AVIATOR'S FEAT.

The exploit of the great French aviator, Jules Vedrines, in alighting with his airplane on the roof of a hotel in Paris recently, may be repeated in Los Angeles within ninety days.

As a result of an argument between himself and several brother actors, Harland Tucker of the "Civilian Clothes" company at the Morosco Theater, announces he is going to learn to fly, practice landing within a very restricted area, and then some fine day within the time allotted him will sail down to the matinee, alighting on the roof of the building in which the Morosco Theater is located.

"It is either a case of break my own neck or come pretty near breaking the pocket books of several of my friends," said Tucker today. "You see, they bet me that I could not do the trick. I know I am very foolish in attempting it, but really, I believe it can be done."

After the bet was made, Tucker hurried out to the Chaplin Aviation Field and went up in a dual-control machine with Emery H. Rogers. Once off the ground and having attained a reasonably safe altitude, Rogers allowed Tucker to assume control.

Despite the fact that it was the first flight Tucker had ever taken, he managed the plane, according to Rogers. Tucker took turns, dips and dives, always bringing the machine to level with ease. The real difficulty of flying, according to Tucker, is the "taking off" and returning to Mother Earth.

Immediately after the completion of the flight the actor made arrangements for receiving two lessons daily. He will begin his first instruction tomorrow.

In the meantime, Roscoe Karns and Alfred Whitman, who made the wager with Tucker, are praying for continued high winds, which might be instrumental in delaying their friend's aerial instruction and at the same time save them $500 apiece.

JUST CAN'T VACATION.

Colleen Moore Must Decide on Contracts Soon.

Colleen Moore recently decided to take a generous vacation, following six strenuous months of uninterrupted work in the silent drama, but producers are attempting to rule otherwise. Two long-term contracts have been submitted to her, it is stated, and both, she admits, are highly attractive. She probably will sign one of the two documents within a few days.

Two years ago Miss Moore had no intention whatsoever of even going into motion pictures. She hoped, as most every girl hopes, but even the hope never had taken tangible form. Then she met D. W. Griffith in Chicago. He offered her a chance to appear in the silent drama. In an ecstacy of delight, she accepted. She left for Los Angeles three days later, arrived here on a Saturday and the following Monday was cast.

So excellent was her work that Griffith offered her a contract one month later. Since then her rise has been very rapid. She has a screen personality and manner that have endeared her to patrons of screen drama.

And she has just celebrated her eighteenth birthday anniversary.

STARS IN MONTANA.

Daring Horsewoman has Lead in "The Lariat."

Kokoa Baldwin, who has been playing the lead in the picture feature, "The Lariat," which is being made in the Glacier National Park, is to spend a few weeks with her parents before returning to California. The photoplay is being made under the auspices of George Hough Berry, and some remarkable rodeo scenes were taken on the Montana locations, Miss Baldwin writes. She states that she has an opportunity to remain in the northern State at a studio to be especially built for her, but she prefers to return to California. Miss Baldwin is one of the ablest horsewomen and outdoor girls of the films.

MME. LANGEHAM GOES NORTH.

Mme. Christine Langeham, dramatic soprano, who is to give a recital here the 25th inst., at Blanchard Hall, has been engaged to sing at the Norwegian song festival at Tacoma. It became necessary for Mme. Langeham to arrange an earlier date for her local appearance than originally intended, on account of her engagement in the north. She will leave the 26th, and sing in Tacoma the 30th and 31st. Claude Gotthelf is to assist as her accompanist, and the Hope-Rosenfeld-Alter Trio will also play one or two ensemble numbers.

DANCER GOES EAST.

Lillian Payne, well-known local dancer and instructor in the art, will leave for New York this week and immediately upon her arrival will study with one of the best exponents of the art of Terpsichore—including all dances from the Russian ballet to ballroom. She expects to be absent for some weeks, acquiring a knowledge of all the latest developments in the art in which she is interested.

PETAIN GIVES YANK REGIMENT WAR CROSS.

WASHINGTON MAY GRANT AUTHORITY TO WEAR THE SHOULDER CORD.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

WITH THE AMERICAN FORCES IN GERMANY, July 23.—Decorations bestowed recently upon the Twenty-eighth Infantry, First Division, by Marshal Petain, included the second regimental award of the Croix de Guerre with palm, which, in the French army, entitles the officers and men of the regiment to wear the fouragere. American officers say they believe it quite probable that authority for the unit to wear the shoulder cord will be forthcoming from Washington in the near future.

All infantry regiments of the First Division have now received the Croix de Guerre with palm, the Sixteenth and the Twenty-sixth Infantry being decorated this week at ceremonies in Coblenz. The Eighteenth Infantry received the award some time ago.

The Tenth, Eighteenth and Seventy-sixth Field Artillery regiments of the Third Division also received from Marshal Petain collective citations amounting to the decoration of the colors of those regiments with the Croix de Guerre with gold star. The regimental colors were not available for the occasion, as they had not been brought back from Paris, where they were used in the Victory parade on July 14.

At the ceremonies in Coblenz the highest award of commander of the Legion of Honor was received from Marshal Petain by Maj.-Gen. Edward T. McGlachlin, formerly acting commander of the American forces in Germany, and Brig.-Gen. Frank E. Bamford of the First Division. The title of officer of the Legion of Honor was also bestowed upon Maj.-Gen. Robert L. Howze, Brig.-Gen. Fred W. Sladen, Col. Halstead Dorey and Col. Frank J. Morrow, all of the Third Division.

Swiss are Sharpshooters.

A careful estimator of elevation and windage, and the possessor of an untroubled "trigger squeeze," is not likely to be slovenly in his other military duties. We may guess that that citizen army of sharpshooters, the Swiss, can in a war of movement handle three for one from any of its neighbors and conceivable foes. A Swiss President was once asked by the retired Kaiser at national maneuvers what he would do should Germany send 200,000 men against the entire Swiss force of 100,000. "Distribute two cartridges apiece instead of one," was the smiling answer.—[Review.

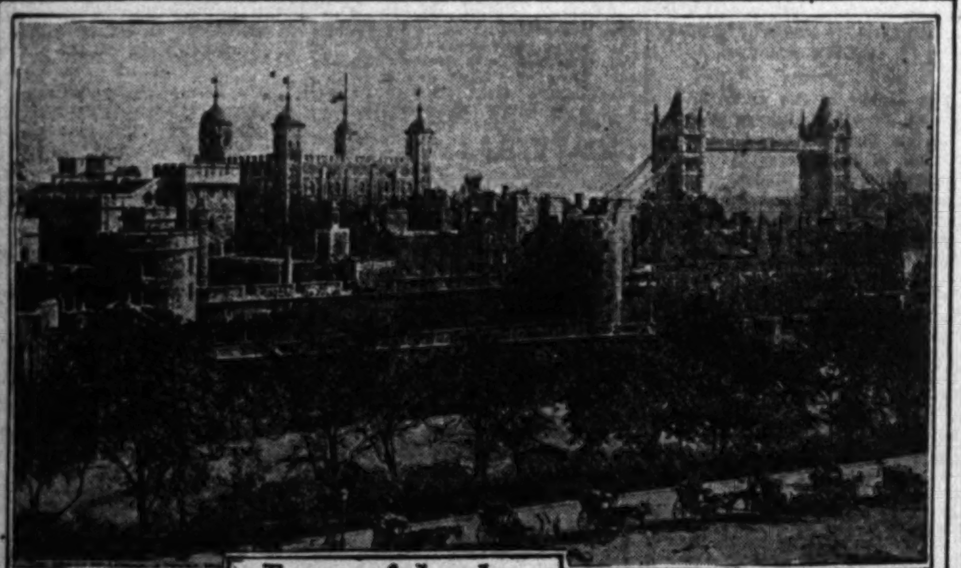
Grim Walls Yawn for Hohenzollern.



Tower of London

Traitor's Gate

Lord Sumner

Ex-Kaiser's English Prison.

In the upper panel is the historic Tower of London in which Wilhelm II and the German commanders, who are charged with crimes against humanity, will be confined pending their trials. The white tower, which was built by William the Conqueror, is now being made ready for William the Defeated. It is the central building seen in the photograph and is square with four turrets. In the lower panel at the left is the "Traitor's Gate." The ex-Kaiser will enter the tower through this historic archway which opens directly on the Thames. It was by this gloomy water passage that state prisoners of the past entered the tower, some of the most notable of these being Sir Thomas More, Lady Jane Grey, Anne Boleyn and the Duke of Monmouth. The gun carriage seen in the photograph is that which was used to convey Queen Victoria's coffin. In the right panel is Lord Sumner of Ibstone, who has been chosen as president of the Allied court that will try Wilhelm.

TOWER OF LONDON FOR EX-KAISER.

Veteran of Many Wars Will Be Responsible for Wilhelm II During His Confinement—Hohenzollern to Enter Through Famous "Traitor's Gate," Which Opened in the Past to Receive Many Illustrious State Prisoners.

BY HAYDEN CHURCH.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, July 12.—"Tower of London Receives the ex-Kaiser." At some time in the not distant future we may expect, it appears, to read this headline, in staring capitals, across the front page of our morning paper. Some fine day we Americans who make our temporary homes here will join the vast crowd that assuredly will gather to try to snatch a glimpse of Wilhelm II on his way to confinement in the grim stronghold in which so many famous figures of the past—dragged down from their high estate—languished in captivity and met their deaths.

And, a few days later, we may again be struggling for a point of vantage in the throng that will line the streets of this metropolis through which the ex-Kaiser is conveyed from the tower to Westminster Hall, or the Royal Courts of Justice or the grim Old Bailey, or wherever else it may be decided that the "Butcher of Berlin" shall stand his trial for the crime against law and humanity with which he stands charged.

TRIAL IN ENGLAND.

For, as all the world knows, it has now been announced authoritatively that the Kaiser, on being surrendered by Holland, will be brought to England for trial, and that the Tower of London will be his place of confinement. This would be sufficient in itself to center world-wide interest once again upon the famous fortress, prison and former Royal Palace, whose long history is stained with so much human blood and which so many American travelers have visited at one time or another. Now, however, comes the additional announcement that the principal German army and naval commanders who will be charged with specific atrocities on land and sea as soon as the peace treaty is ratified are also to be confined in the tower, and that arrangements are now being made for their reception there, "at an early date."

The Kaiser, it is stated, will be imprisoned in the White Tower, which is the great central building of the historic fortress, and its oldest part. Built by William the Conqueror in 1078, it is a nearly square building, measuring 118 feet from east to west, and 107 from north to south. At the corner are turrets, three square and one circular. The walls in the lower part are fifteen feet thick, decreasing to eleven feet in the upper story. Its main floor and its famous dungeons were opened to the public only so recently as in 1916.

TO HOUSE EX-KAISER.

The main floor contained the private apartments of William the Conqueror, and it is probably there that William the Defeated will be housed. Beneath, in the crypt leading to the dungeons, 45,000 rifles used to be stored—representing London's chief preparation for mobilization. It was in the White Tower that Sir Walter Raleigh was confined previous to his execution at Westminster, and in the stonework of its winding stairway that the bones were discovered of the little princes who were done to death in the adjacent Bloody Tower, by order of Richard III.

The dungeons of the White Tower lie beyond the crypt. Here is the so-called "Chapel of Little Ease," in which Guy Fawkes was imprisoned and the chamber where he was tortured and where Queen Mary heard Sir Thomas Wyatt's confession from the rack. In another part 600 Jews were herded together without light or heat in King John's day.

Arrangements are now being made to fit up the White Tower for occupancy by the ex-Kaiser. Suitable furniture will be provided and rooms will also be set apart there for one or more of the former All Highest's attendants.

The Kaiser will enter the tower by the famous "Traitor's Gate," a wide archway opening directly on the Thames. It was by this gloomy water passage that state prisoners of the past entered the tower, some of the most notable being Sir Thomas More, Anne Boleyn, Lady Jane Grey and the Duke of Monmouth. The site of the scaffold where all these and many others, including the Earl of Essex, Catherine Howard and Lord Hastings were beheaded can still be seen and has been seen by many thousands of our countrymen. Paved by order of Queen Victoria, it is close to Tower Green and also to the gloomy Chapel of St. Peter ad Vincula, where most of the celebrated persons executed at the tower were buried. Well does Macaulay say of the chapel cemetery: "In truth, there is no sadder spot on earth than this."

OFFICIAL CUSTODIAN.

Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, one of the oldest and most distinguished of British soldiers, as constable of the tower, would become the official custodian of the ex-Kaiser. Neither the constable nor the lieutenant of the tower, Sir Ian Hamilton, resides at the tower, however, and unless either should take up quarters in the building especially for this important occasion, the actual jailor of William Hohenzollern would be the major and resident governer, Maj.-Gen. Henry Pipon. Gen. Pipon, who is 76 and a native of Jersey, has been major of the tower since 1909. He has long and distinguished service to his credit, for, entering the Royal Artillery in 1861, he served in Canada during the Fenian raid and in the Royal Horse Artillery during the Afghan campaign in 1879-81 and the subsequent operations at Kabul. He was an adjutant in the Royal Artillery in the historic march to Kandahar and fought brilliantly in the great battle which followed, emerging from the campaign with a medal with three clasps and a bronze star and three mentions in dispatches. In 1900-01 he commanded the detachment of Royal Artillery of the China field force and was again decorated and mentioned in dispatches.

The Tower of London seemed, and was, an anachronism until the great war, when its constable received into his keeping Karl Lody, the Kaiser's chief spy, and later Sir Roger Casement, the Irish revolutionist and traitor! Many other secret agents of the Wilhelmstrasse and the German Admiralty also were imprisoned at the tower, and most of them ended their terrestrial careers there at the hands of a British firing party.

"TEUTONIC ATMOSPHERE."

Thus a "Teutonic atmosphere" may be said to have been created at the grim old tower in advance of the anticipated arrival there of the ex-Kaiser and the other German criminals responsible during the war for specified atrocities by land, sea and air. The principal of these latter include the following: Baron von der Lancken, who was concerned in the signing of the death warrants of Nurse Cavell and Capt. Fryatt; Gen. Von Hanisch, Gen. Von Diessel and Majs. Bach and Von Gortz, who were primarily responsible for the torture of British military and civilian prisoners of war. Included among these prisoners were hundreds of women and children. The infamous brothers, Niemeyer, who at Clausthal and Holzminden camps, respectively, perpetrated heartless outrages against Allied officers, British especially. Other Germans who will be arraigned before British tribunals are Capt. Von Brandeburg, who led the first daylight Taube raid on London, killing and injuring 700 people, and Capt.-Lieut. Von Forstner and Werther, two callous pirates who between them sank numerous passenger boats and hospital ships.

Certain of these are now expected to reach this country during the next fortnight. On being surrendered they will be taken over by naval and military escorts, accompanied by British detectives, and lodged in the Tower of London pending their trial. There are, of course, many German U-boat commanders, and at least three Zeppelin captains in custody in England, but others also responsible for various outrages will shortly be handed over to Great Britain by France and Italy. It is expected that the trials of all those arraigned will take place some time in August.

Lord Summer of Ibstone, one of this country's most eminent jurists and perhaps its greatest authority on the commercial law, has, it is announced, been chosen as president of the Allied court. Awarded a life-peerage in 1913 after a career of exceptional brilliance to the bar and on the bench, Lord Summer is perhaps better known as "Hamilton, K. C." or Mr. Justice Hamilton.

This great lawyer's part in the recent Peace Conference was notable, and his work has been described as invaluable. Many of the most important documents and declarations of the Allies were prepared by his hand. These included the reparation clauses of the treaty, and his wording leaves the wily Germans no loopholes.

He was only fifty when he became a judge. Now, at fifty-nine, he is a lord of appeal in ordinary and a privy councillor as well as a peer of the realm. He took his title from Ibstone, in Buckinghamshire, which is his country home. He still looks suprisingly young, and sharp blue eyes peer out from behind his spectacles.

The son of a Manchester iron merchant he was christened John Andrew Hamilton. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he had a brilliant career, and later became a pupil of the former Mr. Justice Bigham, now Lord Mersey. He was called to the bar in 1883, but in spite of lofty ambitions that inspired the hardest kind of work, success in his chosen profession was surprisingly long in coming to him. Years of briefelessness, in fact, had almost determined him to try another career, but when he was finally discovered his success was so rapid as to be almost without parallel.

He "took silk" as a King's counsel, the highest legal rank next to a judgeship, in 1901. He was standing counsel to the University of Oxford from 1906 to 1909, in which year he was elected a Bencher of the Inner Temple, and appointed Judge of the High Court of Justice. He filled this office until 1912, then becoming a Lord Justice of Appeal. Since 1913 he has been a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. He married in 1902 Miss Maude Margaret Todd, second daughter of the late J. W. Todd, D.D.

HAS QUIET HUMOR.

Lord Sumner has a quiet humor and witty sayings of his are frequently quoted. "It is only by the zest golfers throw into their conversation that they conceal from themselves how much they bore each other" is one of his quips.

The Allied court that tries the ex-Kaiser will consist of great jurists of England, France, Italy and Japan. The proceedings will be in English. The court will be opened by the reading of a proclamation signed by the representatives of the Allied powers constituting the court, appointing the judges and ordering the trial of the imperial criminal.

Then will be called William Hohenzollern, ex-Emperor, etc., etc., and the charges against him will be read out; and this charge sheet is long and formidable.

Specialized Offerings on Needed Home Furnishings

Housewives having a sincere desire to economize on the family budget are the particular object of our appeal this third week of August. When one takes into practical consideration the usableness of the advertised articles in this Household Utilities announcement, and their advantageous prices, there is no occasion for hemming and hawing about whether to buy or not to buy.

Doubtless there are many home needs presented within the confines of this space that you have been wanting and needing and needing and wanting. Makeshifts cannot take their place. No housewife is satisfied with housekeeping half done. Besides, though you may think you are getting along well enough without an electric vacuum cleaner, for instance, or a good refrigerator, or a fireless-gas range, the joy and help that you will experience from their use, once you own them, more than recompense you for the initial cost.

Quoting Unusually Attractive Prices on Quality Linens

Every time you see quotations from Barker Bros.' Linen Department you may be sure they are worth considering—even if you are not in immediate need of the particular pieces priced. Local Waist Factory.

I shall never try to make another waist at home! I reached this unalterable decision, after visiting that local waist factory where they cut 3000 waists at a time, and cut them upon such correct anatomical lines that they fit better than would one of our homemade waists upon which we had expended hours of good play time. I have long suspected that some extensive garment manufacturing was going on in Los Angeles; and my visit to that factory proved there was foundation to my suspicion. Also I have thought that the improvement in fit and style of ready-to-wear blouses must be due to some well reasoned-out cause. Now, it seems that instead of just cutting a thirty-eight an inch or so larger all around than a thirty-six, as you or I would do—they study anatomy and learn just where a thirty-eight woman is more expansive than is a thirty-six. All lines and curves are carefully patterned to suit each size. Exactitude here, is but the presursor of infinite pains in other details. Materials are carefully stretched before cutting takes place, so that there are no folds or wrinkles to cause queer protuberances in garments. This is at present done by hand, but a machine is being perfected which shall perform the labor of seven men, in stretching, or smoothly laying out the fabric. Whereas you or I amateurishly pursue the crepe de chine, Georgette, or chiffon as it tries to hide behind the dining table, or underneath the sofa pillows, to avoid being cut, the professional holds perfect mastery over the elusive stuff. Then comes the cutting. Oh, it is a joy to see that done. Two hundred and fifty thicknesses of material are cut at once! The man holds in his hand the cutter, which sways upon an electric cord and when once he begins to cut, he never pauses in the penciled trail traced upon the paper, which is spread on top of the 250 thicknesses of fabric. The little cutter is like an electric sewing machine save that the "needle" working up and down, is a tiny, razor-sharp knife, and the machine is hand-portable. The portions when cut are like 250 paper-thin layers of lovely colored cake. I almost hesitate to tell you the statistical truth about this manufacturing business, so stranger than fiction is it. Three years ago the factory started, with eight employees and a capital of $7000. Now there are 700 employees and I saw in the stock room, silk yardage valued at between $400,000, and $500,000. Three floors, aggreating about 40,000 square feet of space is now crowdedly occupied, and 375 power sewing machines are in operation. There are all sorts of welfare conveniences for employees, and we lunched in the new, well appointed cafeteria, where the best of foods cost less than one-third that they would cost elsewhere. The sales rooms for the accommodation of store buyers, while selecting from samples, are as handsomely appointed as any French evening room, all finished in French gray enamel, with touches of blue and gold, cabinet cases, having plate glass fronts, and rich silk and lace draperies and valances at doors and windows. The prime feature, most highly appreciated by those who work is the light. Windows, windows everywhere, the strong California sunlight being tempered by white shades. No straining of the eyes in semi-darkness, nor working by electric lights. A happier, healthier, better looking lot of girls and women it would be difficult to find, than those employed in that factory where the proprietors seem to consider the good of their workers as they would that of their own families.

"Corsets that hold the secret of good form:" That is the way the writer about a high class corset, puts it in her print. Clever, isn't it? And as true as clever.

Kiddie Kilties.

Eye-openers for the opening of school are those new kiddie kilties. That they are of Jersey, says worlds as to their wear; for every woman knows that "Jersey" briefly says "wear-always." They are dresses in one piece, the long waisted skirt having kilting below the knee. Girdled they are, most fetchingly, and the coloring is the season's latest; cluny blue, rose, navy—what you will, that becomes girl-children. With some, there are tiny bloomers to wear beneath the kilted skirt. Where, you ask me? At that first-class store where, even though so highly rated in care for women's clothes, they never neglect style for children.

Those Parisiennes!

If you think, for a moment, that "barefeet"—Parisienne feet—mean simply feet unclad, or innocent of hosiery, you are much mistaken. "The "barefoot fad," as originated in Paris, is not for purposes of economy—not even merely for coolth. Bettine writes me about it thus: "The barefoot fad was started by Mlle. —— of whom I have written you heretofore. She is the most beautiful and at the same time the most daringly original of the dwellers within the holy circle of the intellectually and artistically elect. At one of her salons, she appeared minus stockings, her feet perfectly pedicured, of course—the nails polished, pinked, and heels tinted, feet whitened evenly and encased in high heeled sandals formed from jewelled straps of gold galloon. The heels of these new foot-fads are elaborately jewelled, also; and—well, they are the most striking article of unapparel ever brought forth in this amazing sartorial center. By the way, Bettine herself has openly succumbed to the allure of Paris. She declared she never would, but had been there less than three months ere she signed herself "Bettine" in place of plain "Betty."

Her New Head-wrap.

I call it that advisedly, and you'll agree I'm right when you behold it. Eleanor is the proud possessor. It came to her as a gift from a friend in the East—not the Far East, although it looks that way. It is of silver tulle, embroidered in silver, steel and gold, and has tassels of steel beads, attached to the three long corners which fall upon each shoulder and at the back. It is gathered closely to fit the head and a thin film of the silver tulle falls quite over the eyes. Oh, it is an alluring head-wrap! Eleanor can scarcely wait for an occasion grand enough to disport it.

At Fashion's Fetes.

A tunic blouse of dark material is finished around the edge with a pleated frill of contrasting shade.

Imagine wearing a bird of bright plumage at the girdle. This is what Paris women are doing when in evening dress.

There is a chic waistcoat blouse of white pique to wear with tailored suits, the sleeves of which are of handkerchief linen.

Black serge dresses are the last word for fall. They are usually combined with black silk stitched into checks with white wool.

Bell-shaped overskirts are the latest.

Inch-wide metal belts are being shown.

Stockings usually match the dresses.

Wool serge and heavy linen are combined.

White felt hats are worn for yachting.

Leather buttons are very chic on tweed suits.

Bright colored wool embroideries appear on millinery.

Ribbons appear in the form of bands of loop fringe.

Pink ribbons always look fresher than blue in lingerie.

Long white kid gloves are worn with afternoon dresses of printed chiffon and voile.

Plain collarless neck lines still predominate, though a few tiny hand-embroidered collars are seen.

The Oswego (N. Y.) branch of the National League for Woman's Service gives weekly dances at Fort Ontario for more than 1200 convalescents in the army hospital there. Moreover, this branch furnished automobiles every morning and afternoon to take the men on outings. Forty cars are available for this service. In addition, the women of Oswego bring flowers and sweets to the wards every week, and daily many of the patients are entertained in private homes.

In twelve interesting scenes, showing the developments of W.C.C.S. girls' work in Milwaukee, 1000 girls had their first chance to appear in the movies. The Pathe News Company will exhibit the films throughout the country and the public may see the members of the Girls' Community Service League taking lessons in first aid, sewing garments for the Red Cross and the reconstruction hospitals, in drill and forming for parade.

Over 500 treatments have been given since January to the children crippled by infantile paralysis, whom the Jamaica (L. I.) Motor Corps of the National League for Woman's Service brings to the free clinic of he Jamaica Hospital in their ambulances three times a week. What is more, all children operated on thus far and for whose trip to the hospital the league is responsible are expected to regain the use of their limbs, or whatever other parts of their bodies are paralyzed.

The children are transported from every part of Jamaica and vicinity. The ambulance calls for the cases every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday morning and returns them to their homes in the afternoon. Between fifty and seventy-five miles are traveled on each of the hospital days.

Valuation of the aviators' vests made during the war by the aviation department of the Detroit branch of the National League for Woman's Service from donations of old furs and kid gloves has been placed at $15,000. The league women in Detroit turned out 425 of these vests. The first samples were brought to the attention of the War Department, office of the chief signal officer, and after a thorough inspection and trial were accepted by the War Department for distribution to various aviation camps.

The American Jewish Relief Committee has raised $2,524,196.58 in the period from January 16 to June 30, 1919, as against $1,317,033.67 in the same period last year. These figures are contained in the report of contributions which was issued this month through the national headquarters of the committee at 15 East Fortieth street, New York City. These are the first returns in the campaign for $35,000,000 for relief work that is being sought throughout the country by the committee. There will be no national campaign, but instead a series of State drives are being relied upon to raise the money. Only a few States have had their drives thus far, but the success that has attended these is attested to by the sum returned to date, which is almost double that for the first half of last year.—[B'nai B'rith Messenger.

WOMEN'S SHARE IN DEMOCRACY.

Are Preparing to Establish Chambers of Commerce.

Schools of Salesmanship a Part of the Course.

Significant Development of Feminist Movement.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, July 30.—That women are preparing to reap their share of the proceeds of our new world democracy is evidenced by their recent establishment of a Woman's Chamber of Commerce, with a national headquarters in Washington and branches in most of our large cities. They have even opened one in China, and South America is soon to boast several of them.

Schools of salesmanship, with special courses in Spanish, French and possibly Chinese, are to be opened by the New York Woman's Chamber of Commerce in the fall, with a view to training a whole army of women trade experts to be placed in foreign trade fields. These classes will be open to any woman who displays any special aptitude for business. She need not be a college graduate. Heretofore, many well-trained and talented women have been excluded from good positions through the stipulation that all applicants must possess university diplomas. The Woman's Chamber of Commerce thinks this is unfair and is going to attempt to put an end to it.

CHANGE IN PRACTICES.

In fact, the Woman's Chamber of Commerce, if enabled to carry out its programme, is going to change a great many practices now in vogue with regard to the employment of women. It has been waiting patiently for the proper time to stage its campaign, and it believes that the time has arrived—that woman's hour has struck. Political equality is practically assured. Now the real battle for economic equality has begun. But the women are very indignant if you intimate that there is anything belligerent in what they are going to do.

They are going to work hand-in-hand with the men, amicably and peaceably, following admiringly in their footsteps and united in a common cause—the promotion of American business prosperity. Incidentally, the organization is especially interested in the promotion of its own sex. It stands for "the encouragement of humanitarian effort in promoting the best interests of womanhood in the United States and other countries," which means, among other things, the entrance of women into all occupational pursuits—field, factory, forum, home, hospital, laboratory, mining, surveying, aviation, school, store, shop, social center and institution, court, club, studio and pulpit.

The Woman's Chamber of Commerce is the latest and most significant manifestation of the feminist movement. It shows that women have at last clearly grasped the fact that business is the controlling element in the world today—that the production of goods is an enterprise in which they legitimately figure and in which they should therefore be expected to be as competent as are men. Women can support themselves comfortably by producing almost anything from ten penny nails to novels, and they intend to do it, at the same time not denying to their sisters the right to be supported by mere men while they are bringing splendid healthy children into the world. For centuries it has been commonly accepted that children were women's chief interest in life.

FEMINIST'S VIEW.

"Thus it happens," said the young feminist, as she played with a heavy paper-weight which was holding down a pile of bills of lading on her desk, "that more and more women are going into business, not with the idea of meeting a possible future husband, but to stay in business and make money in it. It is useless to pretend that this will not change the old order of things, but there is every reason to believe that the new order will be better."

The scope of the Woman's Chamber of Commerce is extremely broad. It embraces not only the economic welfare of women, but their physical and spiritual welfare as well. In some of the chambers, reading rooms have already been established, containing books, magazines, newspapers, bulletins, pamphlets, leaflets, charts and maps dealing with current events and with subjects of special interest to women. The organization has also created a committee to survey existing educational opportunities for women, and to encourage night schools, afternoon study sessions, work interval classes, vocational training, arts and crafts instruction, high school study and university extension.

Moreover, the chamber places great emphasis upon health. Health talks for women have been held in many cities, and plans are being formulated for the maintenance of athletic clubs and gymnasiums in connection with the various local headquarters, as well as clinics, where women will be cared for by efficient women doctors. Conditions surrounding industrial workers will be investigated and reported upon, while everything will be done to stimulate recreational pursuits among women, such as boating, swimming, skating, golfing, tennis and gardening. In towns of limited recreational opportunities, the local chamber will endeavor to secure the co-operation of the men's chamber of commerce in establishing new ones.

LACK ORGANIZATION.

"Women's chief lack at present is organization," declared a member of the Woman's Chamber of Commerce the other day. "Business men are highly organized, and so are men industrial workers. They get a great deal of fun out of it. They are always giving banquets, dances and social affairs, and their clubs are numerous. They never have any difficulty in assembling a convention or any kind of a meeting to discuss their problems. Their social life is broad. Women are only beginning to realize the value of organization, much less achieve it. So we are going to do all we can to lead them up to it by means of community affairs—musicals, community sings, clubs, amateur theatricals, and civic clubs."

At the present time very few men's organizations admit women engaged in the same business or profession. It is only recently, for example, that various bar associations have admitted women lawyers. This means that thousands of intelligent, well-trained women lack the opportunity to mingle among men who are equally advanced in science, industry and the arts, because of this masculine clannishness. Newspaper men maintain press clubs in all of our large cities, but when a newspaper woman wants to go to a club she usually has to patronize a poorly equipped Y.W.C.A. The Woman's Chamber of Commerce is going to hold a series of meetings for the public discussion of various questions to which both men and women will be invited.

Life the men's chamber of commerce, which has given so much aid to Americanization, the woman's chamber is going to work equally hard on that question. In addition to maintaining classes in English, and supplying teachers to visit immigrant families, food centers are to be established displaying up-to-date methods of conservation and food economy. The chamber is already bringing its influence to bear on the housing problem. This is one which vitally affects all business women—probably to a greater degree than it does any other class. A business woman can rarely afford to rent a house in which to live, or even a large apartment, and the only alternative is a room in a boarding house. The one-room and bath apartment is still so scarce, in spite of the tremendous demand for it, that it is beyond the income of the average business woman. The erection of apartment houses, of the one-room-and-bath variety, is being strongly urged by the chamber; also apartment houses of the dormitory type, making it possible for a group of women to live in home surroundings through the hiring of one housekeeper and a maid or through a co-operative kitchen.

THE RURAL WOMAN.

The rural woman is going to be a special subject of consideration on the part of the Woman's Chamber of Commerce. She is usually an excellent business woman, but gets smaller returns for her skill and resourcefulness than any other class. The women of the cities are now coming to her rescue. They are going to bring their pressure to bear on the men's chamber of commerce to get labor-saving devices established in farm kitchens, a system of motor trucks operating between the cities and farms, and books and phonograph records circulating in the isolated rural districts where women often go insane from loneliness.

It may be hard to see how all of these activities are related to the economic independence and glory of women, but the Woman's Chamber of Commerce assures us that they are. For women are just awakening to the fact that in this—a man's world—everything is based upon the production of goods. There are still a great many who do not realize the need for economic reforms. These must be encouraged, guided and educated. Women can't become capitalists, investors, manufacturers and business geniuses in a day, but the Woman's Chamber of Commerce is going to try to make the struggle as short as possible.

NEW YORK'S WAYWARD GIRLS.

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—If it were your business to hear the cases of dozens of prostitutes, shoplifters and wayward girls every day in the week, would you still be able to keep your faith in human nature? Would you be able to leave each harrowing session of the courtroom with the unchanged conviction that life was worth while, and that somewhere there was a spark of nobility in every soul? The women officials of the Women's Day Court of New York do.

One afternoon in this court is enough to turn the average person into a profound pessimist. He leaves it in a state of settled gloom, uncomfortably conscious of the futility of existence in general and of vice crusades in particular. Even men employed by the Women's Court can't stand the strain very long. As one of them remarked: "You get so you're sheddin' tears with one eye and shootin' daggers with the other." So they have to be transferred. But the women—the young Assistant District Attorney who prosecutes the cases, the probation officers who follow them up, and the police women who supply the testimony—all marvelously manage to maintain their normal outlook. The hard shell of cynicism which most people cultivate to protect themselves from the unpleasant aspects of life these women have not. They are just as much shocked at each new evidence of depravity as if it were something altogether new to them, and thus they are able to meet each case with a fresh outburst of sympathy.

When asked how she managed to maintain such a cheerful attitude in the face of constant disillusionment and disappointment, one of the probation officers replied, "You have to. If you don't, you're absolutely no good in the work. As soon as you begin to get hardened it's time to quit."

The Women's Day Court is a continuance of the Women's Night Court of New York. The sessions used to be held at night, because this was the time the majority of the women were arrested. They were brought immediately to the courtroom, and their cases settled as quickly as possible. It was found, however, that the night sessions were much harder on every one concerned than day sessions, so now they are held in the day time. The court is in a downtown building which was formerly a church. It fact, it is still a church, so far as architecture is concerned. The magistrate's bench is directly in front of a carved pulpit, and the sunlight which occasionally lights up the faces of the offenders filters through stained glass windows. Even the benches are pews. The culprits are brought through a vestryroom, where the church's choir was wont to foregather, and are heard by the judge, after which, if the case is not dismissed, they are taken to another vestryroom on the other side of the pulpit, or bench, and delivered to the probation officers.

The first case the other afternoon was that of a good-looking young girl of 16, who was brought to the court by her mother. The mother explained that the girl would not obey her, that she was constantly staying away from home, and that in the past three weeks she had stayed away for three whole nights. She wanted her committed to a home. The judge heard the case, gave the girl some good advice, and turned her over to one of the probation officers. The mother then began to regret her hasty action, especially when her daughter broke down and cried. "Now don't cry," she comforted her, her own chin quivering, "it will be all right. You will be well taken care of; there, dry your eyes, and I'll go out and buy you some candy."

"You see," said the probation officer. "What can you expect of this girl when the chief thought in her mother's mind is to get her some candy." The officer then talked to the mother and told her that she thought the girl should have another chance. "Take her home and keep her for another week," she said. "Give her an opportunity to make good, and in the meantime she knows that we have her under our observation."

The women of this court, after years of experience in social work, are firmly convinced that the majority of girls err because of unfortunate home conditions. Rose Rothenberg, the assistant District Attorney, puts feminine offenders into three classes. First, she says, there is the girl who hasn't a good home. She may have nothing but abuse and bickerings to come home to after a hard day's work. It is very easy for that girl to succumb to temptation. The parents however, rarely appreciate the fact that they are to blame. They usually immediately withdraw from her what little support she had, and so the girl drifts from bad to worse.

Then there is the girl whose mentality is not normal. The percentage is not as large as some psychologists would have us believe but there are undoubtedly many prostitutes and shoplifters for whom there is little hope of reform. The third class is that of the girl who contracts the drink habit. She drinks to forget some painful experience in her life, and while drunk she loses control of her actions.

It is the girls of the first class who yield most encouragingly to the efforts of the probation officers. Everything is done to build them up physically and morally. The various homes provided by religious sects for this purpose supply vocational training as well as recreational facilities. Experience has taught some valuable lessons in choosing occupational pursuits for women. It has been found, for example, that Italian girls do very well in artificial flower making, designing, millinery and anything else that calls for artistic skill, whereas Jewesses are most successful in offices and shops. Neither make good domestics. It is by no means easy to make a girl come back, but the prospect of making a good living wage is a great inducement. The probation officers claim that during the past year they were able to reform permanently 66 per cent. of the women passing through their hands. Another 10 per cent. are getting along moderately well. Thirty per cent. are apparently hopeless.

The women arrested for soliciting are at once brought to the court. The policeman or police woman submits his or her testimony, and the judge explains to her why she is held, at the same time advising her to get into communication with her family or with friends before she has anything to say. But she does not have to give her real name unless she wants to. She is permitted free use of the telephone in the courtroom, as well as the free use of stationery and stamps. If she so desires, a probation officer will go to see her family and relate to them the circumstances. In short, she is given every chance to prove her innocence or to obtain help from reputable outside sources. She is even permitted to set the date of the hearing of her case.

These circumstances are cited by the court in defending itself from certain charges made in a recent case which aroused a great deal of indignation throughout New York and raised a question as to the fairness of the methods employed by the court. This was the case of two young Jewesses who were arrested and brought into court for soliciting soldiers in front of a large Broadway hotel. Subsequent facts seemed to show that the girls were innocent—that they had merely been indulging in the questionable pastime of "picking up" a couple of companions—but the court had no way of knowing this. The girls refused to get in touch with their families or to give any information whatever. Eventually, one of the probation officers, who spoke Yiddish, went to see their mother, who immediately raised a great agitation and secured their release. They are now talking of suing the police department.

A few days after this happened, however, a woman about forty-five was brought into court for the same reason. She was a woman of apparent refinement, with good family connections, and the women of the court feared that once more there had been a mistake. A physical examination of the woman put an end to any doubts, for it showed that she was venereal. The records show that ninety per cent. of the women heard in this court are suffering from venereal disease.

This, of course, is the chief function of the court—to get hold of diseased women, to cure them, and to prevent them from infecting the rest of the community. Just how the court is accomplishing its purpose is hard to determine, but the women believe that if they rescue only a small percentage of the offenders the work is worth while.

THE TROUBLE.

Robert Jaggaby's countenance was not at any time remarkable for indications of intellectual brilliance, but now, as he stood before the camera for the purpose of being took, his expression was so inane that even the polite photographer was moved to protest.

"You'll excuse me," he remarked, "but do you want this photograph for a beauty competition or an advertiment for a new rat poison? Because, if it's for any other purpose you'd better try to look a trifle more pleasant."

"That's just the trouble," exclaimed Robert; "you see, I've the misfortune to be a trifle bandy, and I'm trying to hold my knees so that it won't show. When I smile I forget all about my knees, and when I pay attention to my knees I forget to smile."—[London Tit-Bits.

The People and Their Troubles

HOW TO TRAIN YOUR WIFE / HUSBAND

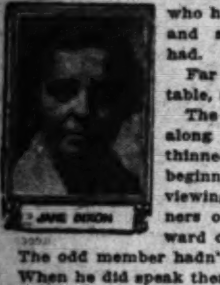
The Efficacy of Tears.

By JANE DIXON.

"What is worse than a weepy woman?"

The question came across the dinner table.

It was a mixed dinner party, some married, some unmarried, a few husbands whose wives were in the country or at the shore, a few wives whose husbands were out of town, a pair of honeymooners who had not passed the cooing stage and several wedded couples who had.



Far down, near the end of the table, sat the odd member.

The odd member, a man well along toward midlife, hair well thinned at the top, face and figure beginning to sag a bit, had been viewing the party silently, with corners of mouth inclined to a downward curve.

The odd member hadn't much to say these days.

When he did speak there was invariably a heavy note of cynicism in his words, a decided overcurrent of bitterness.

The world does not like to listen to this shade of language.

The world is not interested in a diet of doubt, mutterings, malcontent, disbelief. It wants to be patted on the back, be pandered to, be cheered and chucked under the chin.

The odd member was in no mood to go a-chucking, so he kept the silence.

There was a reason for this quaint conduct on the part of the odd member.

Guests at the dinner party, being mostly old friends, understood. The world had given the odd member a gruelling wallop in the region of the heart and the dazed victim had taken the matrimonial count.

After several years of wedded life, during which the odd member had struggled against a continuous current of domestic dalliance, he had at last gone to court, had the judge strike the shackles from his wrists, and here he was a free and untrammeled citizen all set and no place to go.

"What is worse than a weepy woman?"

FED UP ON TEARS.

The question came about through discussion of a popular play current in the city. The third party in the plot of the play was a mollusc, a silly, light-headed, chill-hearted creature who used as her chief weapon of both offense and defense a shower of pearly feminine tears.

"What is worse than a weepy woman?" The odd member dropped his fork. He looked down the length of the table. Eating was suspended. Something in the odd member's voice commanded attention. It sounded so definite, so final.

"There is only one thing in God's world worse than a weepy woman," he said, "and that is a weepy wife."

In those few words the odd member gave us the true reason for his divorce. Nor was there doubt in a single mind but that, to avoid meeting up with a case of feminine tears, the odd member would run a million miles and then jump off the edge of the earth into endless, reeling space.

He was a husband fed up on tears.

You would be amazed, wives of the world, to know how few tears it takes to shunt a husband into the fed-up stage.

About the most tragic moment in the life of a real man is that in which he discovers he is linked for life to a sniveller.

The first time the wife pulls a domestic Johnstown flood on pal husband he is very sorry. The second time he is not quite so sorry. The third time he is not sorry at all. He is just plain disgusted.

In honeymoon time husband endures the wifely waterfalls because love is young, life is sweet and there is always hope rain clouds will sail away on wings of common sense.

Later, when the keen edge of possession has worn off, husband ceases to endure gracefully. He grows restive. He is forever fearing the dam will burst. He hangs his hat in a handy place for a quick exit.

THE RESULTANT RED NOSE.

Finally, when tears have become a habit, when they are brought into play for everything from the price of a new gown to a summer cottage at the seashore, husband comes to hate them with an unholy hatred. They make no impression on him other than a burning desire to break china, slam doors, use lurid language and beat it to parts unknown.

What man wants to have his shirt front constantly dampened by a dilapidated wife?

Where is the husband who can honestly admire a bedraggled lady with a red nose and swollen eyes?

Wives, the next time you indulge in a good cry before your husbands, hasten to the mirror of your dressing table immediately thereafter and make a careful inspection of your face. See how it is disfigured. See the lines of passion, of pain, of anger. Look at the shine on your bulby nose. Notice the inflamed whites of your eyes. You have effaced whatever of charm there is in your features. You have erased, blurred, blotted out your own personality.

Save the tears for the big moments of sorrow.

Be calm. Be strong. Be cheery.

Face the problems of living and loving with a smile. Show the man you have honored with the keeping of your body and soul you are built of the finest feminine fiber. Then, if the time comes when you must cry, husband will know it is an outward manifestation of a sorrow which bends and breaks, not merely a watery bit of acting by a sniveller.

The value of jewels is fixed by their rarity.

Wives, train your husbands to place a high value on your tears. Make your tears as rare as the rarest jewel. That way lies happiness.

By MARTIN CASEY.

The wisest and best of men will not disdain sometimes to weep.

It has ever been woman's way to give vent to tears when seized with grief, rage, hysteria, fear, disappointment or joy. But she hasn't got a monopoly on the weeps by a long shot, even though she may take every advantage afforded to let loose a torrent from the tear ducts when it suits her purposes.

MARTIN CASEY

Every time a baby squawks there is a reason. But a woman can turn on the sobs over the most trivial things when she deems it expedient to do so, and a crying spell at the opportune time has often changed the tide of a domestic battle when all hope of her coming out victorious had been abandoned. It has been ever thus. A woman's tears will melt a man as quickly as a flaming torch will melt a snowball.

Most every woman knows that it is her trump card, to be played when the game is going against her, for mighty few men can withstand a tearful outburst. It matters not whether it is sincere or insincere, the moment she turns on the weeps he is ready to take her in his arms and plead forgiveness, or grant it, as the case may be, or else grab his hat and flee from the house.

And in the event that he is imperturbable in the face of the shower of tears he is straightway branded as an out-and-out brute, absolutely devoid of any feeling and just the sort who would gloat over his precious wife dying of a broken heart.

Women have—and undoubtedly will until the end of all time—resorted to tears to attain their ends. So why not turn the tables on 'em? What's good for the goose is good for the gander. If men are to be swayed by the tears of their wives there is no reason why the order shouldn't be reversed when men find it necessary to resort to extreme measures to restore happiness in the home.

HARD FOR MAN TO CRY.

Ordinarily it's hard for a man to cry. The death of some one near and dear to him will cause him deep grief which will find its expression in tears. Some of the pluckiest fighters in the prize ring have been known to cry with rage as their opponents taunted them with slurring remarks. Men have been known to weep with joy over some gladsome news, but, unlike the women folk, they are not prone to break into tears through fear or any great disappointment.

Genuine grief occasioned by domestic tragedy in which he is the principal sufferer will make a man just as tearful as the woman who experiences the same ordeal he goes through.

But she cares not who looks on to witness her expression of sorrow. Seldom, if ever, will she shrink from the prying and curious eyes as she sobs her heart out. It's a woman's way.

And although it is no disgrace for a man to give vent to tears, he invariably elects to seek seclusion where none will see his grief. He seems to be ashamed of his tears. But why should he, when the wisest and best of men will not disdain sometimes to weep?

A few months ago a hospital ship returned from France laden with wounded American soldiers and marines. On the way over they had a fire on board, but this lively piece of news was subordinated to that of a visit Gen. Pershing paid to the mercy ship the day before she steamed out of Brest.

Upon her arrival at Hoboken the khaki-clad patients voted Pershing a regular hundred per cent. 14-karat guy because he burst into tears as he walked through the wards and beheld the legless and armless doughboys and leathernecks about to embark for home. Just because tears welled up in his eyes and coursed down his bronzed cheeks they knew he was the right sort. They understood that he had feeling, and that that feeling had to give vent to expression in tears when he gazed upon the maimed heroes lying helpless in their bunks.

SOFT WEEPS AND LOUD.

So if Pershing isn't ashamed to cry, what man should be?

But how can tears be utilized in training a wife? It has ever been a woman's game. She has trained herself to it, and looks upon it as her sole prerogative. Most husbands who would have the temerity to indulge in tears to make an impression on their wives would perhaps be regarded as mollycoddles, or worse.

Women don't like to see men cry. And those of the stronger sex who can make a stab at it and get away with it are in luck.

The fellow who can shed crocodile tears is the lucky chap, provided, of course, that his wife doesn't get hep to him. The theatrical folk and "movie" stars can give the finest demonstrations of weeping imaginable. So why not practice the art of weeping, those of you who have crying wives, and give them tit-for-tat?

How long do you think it would take to cure your Annabelle of her crying spells if you burst into tears every time she made a whimper? She weeps for the effect it is going to have on you and invariably gets away with it. Next time she does it try the game yourself, even if you have to bring the tears with the aid of an onion or a good sniff of ammonia.

The soft weeps are bad enough, to be sure, but when they get real noisy about it, hitting the high notes with all the lung power in them, it is time to make a quick exodus and remain out of sight until they have it over with.

> Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues,
> And there be words not made with lungs;
> Sententious showers! O let them fall!
> Their cadence is rhetorical.

So, boys, don't be afraid to weep. Even with the high cost of living these parlous days onions are only twenty cents a pound.

LETTERS TO "THE TIMES."

Easy Enough.

PACIFIC GROVE, Aug. 8. [To the Editor of The Times:]—Floods of ink are being shed in chronicling details of the world's unrest and proposing far-fetched cures, while the most obvious remedy is needlessly delayed. What that remedy is, any child could tell.

It is that the United States Senate cease their petty quablings and partisan bickerings, and sparring for personal political position, and conclude peace. People would then have some confidence in the future, trade would become normal, and, as a natural consequence, the high cost of living be lessened. At present, no one knows what to expect tomorrow! Let the League of Nations be born, not strangled. When it's once born, it may not be quite so pretty a bantling as we would all have liked, but it will grow, and get strength and education as years roll on, if we unite to feed it and teach it.

The war at least did one good, it taught us that nations formerly enemies could unite heartily to achieve certain ends. No one doubts we worked harmoniously and effectively for destruction; now let us get together and work equally harmoniously and effectively for construction. Don't let us jeer at this as "idealism," not realism! There must be ideas or there can be no realisation.

Write right now, today, and tell your Senator to stop squabbling, make peace, and end the unrest.

EDWARD BERWICK.

Charity at Home.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 5. [To the Editor of The Times:]—About this high cost of living? How would it do for Congress to forbid absolutely exportation of all foodstuff, all clothing, all material of which clothing is made, all shoes or footwear of any kind and all lumber and articles made from lumber, and iron, and all products made from iron, letting this cover all metals until such time as the retail prices of these articles have reacted to the level of prices of 1910, then cut wages to the same level. Mr. Editor, this would be fair for us all and put us on a safe and sane basis. For all our foreign friends, we have sympathy, but charity begins at home, and talking of doing something to lower the high cost of living, how about those railroad shopmen, who in defiance of their "union officer" to take authoritative strike vote to determine whether they should go out or not, are throwing down their tools and thus seeking to tie up the moving of the nation's wheat crop and otherwise distressing the rest of the nation's population? Is it fair?

J. A. LOGAN.

It Won't Work.

OCEANSIDE, Aug. 10.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In a late issue of The Times, I saw a notice from the legal department of the State of California, saying that they wanted to make use of the food conservation plan to reduce the high cost of living.

They suggested that they appoint a committee consisting of a retailer and wholesaler and a plain ordinary citizen to try and find out who was to blame for the present high prices of necessities.

Can you imagine a retailer and a wholesaler giving a verdict against themselves, and putting the whole blame on their guilty shoulders? No indeed, it would be a farce. In fact, the whole thing is a brazen attempt to hoodwink the people, the government does not want to find out who is to blame, no, not at all, but they do want the people to believe that they are trying their best to help them lower the high cost of living.

If the government really wants to try and find who is really to blame, the remedy is a very simple one. Turn over the whole thing to the various vigilantes corps throughout the State, and ask the corps to reassemble and investigate the whole matter and the government will learn in short order who is the guilty party.

The vigilantes corps did good work during the war, hunting out spies and traitors, and would do just as good work now in hunting out profiteers, and besides, they have an ax to grind and are not afraid to put the blame where it belongs.

W. SAMPSON.

Wickedly Selfish.

PASADENA, Aug. 12.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In view of the fact that President Wilson's concessions to the anarchistic labor to encourage disloyal efforts is dominating his recent requirements that they cease to hold up the nation's lines of transportation before their wage demands will be considered will, I think, offered all true patriots greater satisfaction than any other of his official acts.

No greater calamity could overtake the republic than that its industrial organization for the reason that labor organizations are so wickedly selfish as to disregard all consideration of the public loss and inconvenience and like the reds of Russia tear down all sane, honest and impartial governments.

"God Also Is Clever."

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 11.—[To the Editor of The Times:] As a pastor of a Los Angeles church, I wish to enter an emphatic protest against using the Lord's Day for such events as took place Sunday at Exposition Park.

I do not write as an intolerant, 'kill-joy' Puritan who belongs back in the witch-burning days of New England, but as a healthy-minded, liberal-thinking American citizen.

Is there not some connection between our disregard of the sanctity of the Lord's Day and our growing disregard of the law generally? The so-called upper classes are living in fear of a lawless uprising of the so-called lower classes. Let me ask them this question: Can you expect the lower classes to have a profound respect for law when you, that is, many of you, exhibit a contemptuous disregard for the sanctities of the social and moral order?

When the war was at its worst we took God out of cold storage and used Him for all He was worth. When the war stopped we put Him back into cold storage and fell back upon our own cleverness. We are passing through a crisis in our history serious in the extreme. Men who have no use for Sunday except as a day of amusement have not much to contribute to the stability of our government, no matter how unctuous may be their professions of patriotism.

A people that will deliberately devote to sport a day that has been used in all ages for the development of moral conviction and spiritual vision has no enviable future.

Centuries ago the Jews dubbed the prophets the very thing somebody will dub me on reading this contribution to the agony columns of The Times. Isaiah came back at them with this suggestion: "God also is clever." To the ultra-emancipated modern who proclaims me a hopeless mossback, a fit subject for a cartoon in Life's anti-everything number, and who thrusts out his chest in token of his wonderful cleverness, allow me to say, "God also is clever."

R. L. JACKSON.

Brains, Not Guns.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 9.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Your statement in an editorial today that what Mexico needs is "not guns but brains." is entirely correct. Mexico need sassistance, not intervention. In view of the editorals news and special articles that The Times has been filled with recently, virtually demanding intervention, the truthful statement above comes most unexpectedly perhaps inadverently. Having made it now may we not expect the soft pedal in this intervention idea after this?

Hearst yelled himself blue in the face for intervention some years ago to no avail. Are you willing to pursue Hearst tactics that were completely discredited?

You have admitted a fact. Be manly enough to live up to it.

SIDE BY SIDE.

BY CAPT. LESLIE T. PEACOCKE.

Side by side we wandered to the end of the wave-splashed pier,
Your head poised high to catch the words breathed softly to your ear,
Your lithesome form a-quiver and expectant of caress,
Your potent charms dim outlined in the sheen of summer dress.
With the modesty of widowhood, most luring bait for man,
Your eyes cast down, as Eve's, no doubt, when Adam first began.
You lisped to me, in flute-like voice, of Love as a wondrous thing,
And nestled close as a nesting bird when I placed the engagement ring.

Side by side we wandered to the end of the moon-kissed pier,
And whispered low with blushes high sweet words I loved to hear.
You crowned me with a halo and I never can forget
Sweet jealousy you pouted when I lit a cigarette.
'Twas wasted time, you argued, when we did aught else but kiss,
And snatched each smoke to fling to waves to greet them with a hiss.
I angered not, for I was but a love-tossed, love-lorn loon,
And suffered things as all men do in throes of honeymoon.

Side by side we wandered to the end of the storm-swept pier,
With three feet, at least, between us; we'd been married just a year,
And nary a thought between us, save a quarrel ever ripe;
My solace, now abhorred by you, my old and fragrant pipe.
No words to break the silence, sadder far than any dead;
A sorry sight for cormorants and seagulls overhead.
Each thinking thoughts most bitter, and with none of "give and take,"
Each claiming to be a dreamer now too rudely wide awake.

Side by side we wander to the end of the sunlit pier,
Divided by two other forms, which you and I call "dear!"
I glance toward your escort, a most senseless looking man,
Who beams on you with happiness; I wonder how he can!
You glance at her who clings to me and curl your lip with scorn,
But you were ten, at least, my dear, the day that she was born!
My bliss is perfect, save one thing, which flicks me on the raw—
You, on the first of every month, big alimony draw!

HERE'S A TIP FOR SENATORS.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 11.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In reference to Hamilton [illegible] Howard's letter in your paper this morning, evidently what the country should demand of the United States Senate is less talk on the League of Nations and more action on the Need of Rations.

CHARLES RANDALL.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Q.: Did examinations of men for military service show what parts of the country were healthiest?

[illegible]

A.: Rejections of men because of physical unfitness were lower in the strip from Texas to Canada than elsewhere. The next lowest rate of rejections was in the strip east of the Mississippi and in the [illegible] States. The percentage of rejections was greatest in New England, New York, Michigan, Colorado, [illegible] California and Washington. In the first of these the cause is attributed to the presence of great numbers of immigrants and industrial concentrations, while in the Western States it is due to the presence of large numbers of health seekers.

Q.: Is the mock orange [illegible] ble?

[illegible]

A.: The mock orange is of Japanese origin and is used only as an ornamental plant. It is of the same general family as the orange and lemon, but is hardier and will grow much farther north. The Department of Agriculture has taken advantage of this fact and has crossed the mock orange with the ordinary orange and has thus developed a new fruit that may be grown as far north as the Ohio River. This fruit is called the citrange.

Q.: Is the "Star Spangled Banner" our national anthem?

[illegible]

A.: No song has ever been made our national anthem by official action. Foreign countries consider "The Star Spangled Banner" our national anthem and the army and navy recognize it when they require soldiers and sailors to stand at attention when it is played.

UPLAND.

Upland society folk received a great surprise Wednesday when news of the marriage in Riverside Monday afternoon of Miss Marjorie Dean Reynolds and Samuel LaFort Collins become known. The young people had planned to keep the wedding a secret, but failed to cover their tracks sufficiently. Plans for a big society wedding early in the coming month were in the making, when the young people decided to do away with the strain and worry of the formal event, and, taking matter in their own hands, slipped away to Riverside, where they were married in the First Methodist Episcopal Church by the Rev. Lyman R. Bayard. The bridegroom, who is connected with the County Horticultural Commission at Lindsay, returned north almost imediately after the ceremony after making plans to return next week and claim his bride. Berger, Mrs. E. Canby and Mr. and Mrs. Smith of Fresno.

In honor of her seventy-third birthday anniversary, Mrs. A. B. Markle of South Citron strett entertained with a chicken dinner on Tuesday. Aside from Mr. and Mrs. Markle those present were Mr. Virgoe and daughter, Lizzie, and son, Charles, who has just returned from service in France, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Mayhew and Mr. and Mrs. Sidener.

The ranch home of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Ingram was the scene of a merry gathering on Sunday when they entertained a number of relatives and friends at dinner in honor of their twentieth wedding anniversary. Covers were marked for Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Ingram and family of Hollywood, Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Ingram and family of Long Beach, Mrs. Zillah Goff and two children of Coalinga, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Burch of Los Angeles, Mrs. Clarence Waddell and Miss Nell Cork of Dallas, Tex., Floyd Hatfield, who has just returned from France, Mr. and Mrs. Roland Ingram and family, Mrs. G. D. Ingram, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Parrett and Mrs. Ella Hatfield.

Mrs. G. R. Franklin was hostess on Friday at a charmingly appointed luncheon in compliment to a group of Arizona friends who are summering in California. A large bowl of stately zinias graced the center of the table, with covers laid for Mmes. F. A. Wilde, Henry Crowther, J. Gates, Floyd Chamberlain, Virgie Lee Mattoon, Frank Lowe, W. L. Lindille, D. E. Bowlinger of Kingman, Ariz.; Walter L. Maas of Santa Monica, F. Yorker and George Hannon of Los Angeles, E. Elander of Fillmore, Joe Wagner, G. M. Simpson, C. C. Randall and her house guest, Mrs. Lickens of Los Angeles and the hostess. The afternoon hours were passed informally at cards.

OXNARD.

One of the most pleasant affairs of the past week was the card party at which the Misses Mildred and Mabel Blackstock were hostesses at their country home Wednesday afternoon. Both bridge and five hundred were played and handsome prizes were awarded to Miss Corinne Donlon for high score at bridge and to Miss Veda Petit for the high score at the five hundred tables. Following the play a delicious luncheon was served, with places marked for the Misses Jessie Petit, Veda Petit, Ruth Virden, Maud Lathrop, Louise McFarland, Blanche and Alice Eastwood, Jessie and Myrtle Gill, Corinne Donlon, Mattie Vickers, Kathleen Donlon and Elizabeth Staire; Mmes. H. R. Staples, John Norman, Ross Blouin, Joseph Lewis, Jr., T. Talley, Ben Watlington, Jr., Arnold Poppic, Jr., Fred Snodgrass, James Donlon, Otis Snow and Edwin Carty.

On the occasion of their first wedding anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Maulhardt entertained a number of their friends at an elaborate dinner party of eleven covers at their home on Wednesday evening. Handsome bouquets of sweet peas in the orchid shade, combined with smilax, decorated the table. Many useful tin articles were brought by the guests, tin being the symbol of the first wedding anniversary. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Heinrich Maulhardt, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Schill, Mr. and Mrs. William Lagomarsino, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Petre and Miss Dorothy Salkeld of Los Angeles.

One of the happiest occasions of the season occurred on Wednesday night when about 100 members of Camp Bartlett and their guests attended the first evening barbecue at the camp. After the big eats, to which all did ample justice, there was dancing until a late hour, for which there was excellent orchestral music.

RIVERSIDE.

Miss Marcella Craft, the well-known prima donna, who has been spending the summer at her home in this city, was the inspiration for a luncheon of delightfully informal appointments Wednesday afternoon, with Mrs. LeRoy Simms as hostess. Miss Craft leaves next week for New York, where she will prepare for her appearance in opera in October, preceding her concert performances. Cards marked places at the luncheon table for the following: Miss Craft, Mrs. H. J. Craft, Mrs. W. G. Irving, Miss Margaret Gage, Mrs. W. A. Hunter, Mrs. Graham Hunter, Mrs. W. W. Roblee, Mrs. Frances Sodestrom, Mrs. J. A. Simms and Mrs. LeRoy Simms.

In a graceful setting of pink amaryllis blossoms and grenery, the marriage of Miss Esther Marie Larson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Larson of this city, and Charles Schoner of Oakland, was solemnized Tuesday at the home of the bride, 261 West Central avenue. The service was read by Dr. W. A. Hunter, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church. The bride's only attendant was her sister, Miss Ruth Larson, who acted as maid of honor. Henry Helbush of Oakland, intimate friend of the bridegroom, was best man. The friendship which led to the wedding had its inception while the groom was stationed at March Field. After obtaining his discharge from the service Mr. Schoner returned to Oakland to prepare a home for his bride, who, since her graduation, has been private secretary to City Superintendent of Schools A. N. Wheelock.

REDONDO BEACH.

A very pretty luncheon was enjoyed Wednesday by a score of guests who were entertained by Mrs. George Haneschka and Mrs. Frank Haneschka at the home of the latter in the La Neptune apartments. The affair was to compliment Mrs. C. S. Pickens, Mrs. Adams Smith and Mrs. I. J. Finch, who are leaving soon for the East. The table decorations were in pink and white and a three-course luncheon was served. Covers were laid for Mrs. Finch, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Pickens, Mrs. A. J. Epling, Mrs. Roy Heath, Mrs. Ed Lechner, Mrs. J. B. La Rock, Mrs. Ernest Heath, Mrs. Elwin Lechner, Mrs. J. J. Perron, Mrs. Louis Heath, Mrs. J. P. Erickson, Mrs. E. Tranberth, Mrs. W. L. Fisher, Mrs. Charles Clark, Mrs. S. D. Barkley, Mrs. John Keppal and Mrs. George Orgibet.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Burwell and daughter from Seattle are the guests of Mrs. Burwell's brother and family, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Peebles of South Guadalupe avenue. Mrs. Burwell is a well-known swimmer who, as Miss Peggy Peebles, won all Coast records for long-distance swimming in 1917. She was formerly a member of the Bimini Club of Los Angeles. Mrs. Burwell is enjoying the water here and will spend much of her time on the beach during her stay.

BARKER BROS. BIG PICNIC.

The "spirit of the store" is very often counted a firm's most precious asset—as in the case of Barker Bros. of this city. And this feeling of friendliness and whole-souled fellowship is particularly warm and generous upon the yearly summer picnic day.

It's interesting to know that the people who work together at Barker Bros. really like one another well enough to look forward with real joy to the coming of next Saturday, when all roads will lead to Santa Monica.

An alluring programme is planned, and, of course, any amount of unexpected and therefore all the more delightful excitement may turn up before the day is over. At any rate everybody will swim and dance and join in the sports and pose for the giant photograph—and eat an enthusiastic luncheon and plenty of ice cream.

Special trains of cars are chartered and every thinkable arrangement for the convenience of transportation and complete enjoyment of all the employees and their families has been made—and will be carried out by the following carefully-chosen committees:

Executive—J. W. Boothe, chairman; W. A. Barker and C. H. Barker (president and vice-president of Barker Bros.), C. A. Barker, Lawrence Barker, Erle Barker, J. W. Beam, F. A. Barnes, F. K. Colby, R. L. McCrea, H. E. Bennett and D. H. Jones.

Welfare—Miss Ada Gee, chairman; commissary, James Wilson, chairman; joy, William Bresser, chairman; transportation, F. M. Erwin, chairman; C. A. Turney, secretary; advertising, A. D. Smith, chairman; sports, J. C. La Spada, chairman; music, A. A. Behnke, chairman; official announcer, L. M. Barker.

ON LATEST STYLES.

Myer Siegel Tells of Merchandising Business and Prosperity.

Bringing with him news of the latest fashions and of business conditions in the East, Myer Siegel has just arrived in Los Angeles to take charge of the fall and winter trade of his store. Mr. Siegel is extremely optimistic regarding the coming season, which he predicts will be the largest in the history of the country.

In speaking of the fashions, Mr. Siegel said: "The grace and charm, as well as the material in the new creations have not been excelled in the history of merchandising. Skirts are to be narrower and shorter. There will be a large trade in evening wraps and gowns. The new styles include a large selection of sports models for street wear. Nearly all the suits will be trimmed with fur.

"One of the most popular articles that I have brought back with me is the leather coat. For street and motor wear, it cannot be rivaled for beauty, novelty and service."

That the factories in the East are oversold, was the statement of Mr. Siegel.

HIGH LIGHTS ON MOORE.

Poet's Namesake is Playboy of Culver City.

One never laughs at Tom Moore; always with him. By that is meant the interviewer is given no opportunity to tell his friends facts he wouldn't record in print for fear of spoiling somebody's illusions. The debonair Goldwyn star who is appearing this week at the Kinema Theater in "Lord and Lady Algy" laughs always. That's because he's Irish and happy-go-lucky as a playboy should be. In fact, his playboyishness lies in his smile. He doesn't perform stunts. You would be quite safe in inviting Lord Algy to dinner. He would not vault over the living-room lamp. Dowagers and parental chaperones would adore him. As a matter of fact they do; as also children, dogs and ingenues. They all think Moore is especially theirs. This is because he is of the soil, like a Thomas Hardy character.

He is not bothered with theories of acting or living. Long ago he settled things in his mind. "Do your best and don't bore anyone while doing it," might be said to be the result of his findings.

"It used to be that each day brought a new problem, a worry. That was when I was very young and too serious. Now things take care of themselves," he says with an amused shrug. "I let 'em."

His accent—one wouldn't call it a brogue—cannot be set down in print for the reason that it's hardly more than the elusive lilt of the cultured, genuine Irishman. But it's on his tongue always and it's charming.

PROPERTY MAN WAS THERE WITH GOODS.

Following the script of a motion picture comedy too closely may have its disadvantages as the property man of the Christie studio recently demonstrated. Scott Sidney was directing Bobby Vernon in a series of love scenes. He read over the script to the assembled cast and staff.

Scene 41: Bobby goes down street to girl's house.

Scene 42: Girl sneaks out bedroom window.

Scene 43: Bobby vigorously pressing his suit under grape arbor.

The company arrived on location and Bobby and the girl took their places beneath the window. The property man was laboring with a huge bunch of stuff in the automobile. He appeared with a large ironing board, a pair of old trousers and a flat iron.

Mr. Sidney roared "What the—what's all this stuff?"

"Well, it's in the script. 'Bobby pressing his suit under the grape arbor.'"

The director roared again.

WISHES MONKEY ON SCENARIOISTS.

The scene was a tricky little bit of light comedy. Dorothy De Vore was being photographed in a close-up, smiling as she looked first at a lover on one side, winked, and then looked the other way and winked again.

Director William Beaudine was crouched on one knee whispering the business as Dorothy went through the facial gestures, while the camerman cranked slowly away.

Miss De Vore was just in the middle of her second wink—when her face suddenly changed. Then she let out a real feminine scream.

"Look!" she cried.

Everybody looked and there, perched on the edge of the set, complacently sitting on its haunches was a small bright-eyed chimpanzee.

Then the chase started. Through one set the property boys chased it, then through another. "Emoting" stars, grinding camermen and temperamental directors went unheeded until finally it disappeared into a window in the administration building.

There was a yell inside and then the face of Fred L. Porter, vice-president of the company, appeared at the window and the monkey was under his arm.

The owner of the monkey has not been found and pending his arrival, the animal has been quartered by Al E. Christie in the scenario department with Scott Darling and Frank Conklin.

Mr. Christie says he understands the chief food of a monkey is nuts—and in his opinion the biggest proportion of monkey—or squirrel food—is present in the scenario department.

CORPORATION HEAD CONFERS WITH GARSON

Herbert K. Somborn, president of Equity Pictures Corporation, is in Los Angeles for a conference with Harry Garson, president of the Garson Studios, Inc., who will furnish Clara Kimball Young productions and others, for the Equity.

Mr. Garson with Mr. Somborn will work out the fine details of the campaign of distribution and exploitation of Garson pictures, the first of which will be one of the most elaborate productions of the year, "Eyes of Youth," with Clara Kimball Young.

Mr. Somborn expects to remain in Los Angeles a week or more and will then return to New York. It is stated that "Eyes of Youth" will be ready for distribution during October.

ing to the phonograph and the electric piano, and watching.

Now he saw his chance and seized it. And then he went through a ceremony that was almost a ritual. Stella Kamps, could she have seen it, would have felt repaid for all her years of soap-and-water insistence. He washed all his clothes in hot water, he took a bath in hot water, and he took a nap.

Then he placed his absurd round hat on his head at what he considered a fetching angle, though precarious, and sallied forth on the streets of Chicago in search of amusement and adventure.

He found them.

Madison and Canal streets, west, had little to offer him. He sensed that the center of things lay to the east, so he struck out along Madison, trying not to show the terror with which the grim, roaring clamorous city filled him.

It was late afternoon. His laundering, his ablutions and his nap had taken more time than he had realized. It was a mild spring day, with just a Lake Michigan evening snap in the air. Tyler, glancing about alertly, nevertheless felt dreamy, and restless. He wished he had some one to talk to. He loitered a moment on the bridge. Then he went on, looking about him interestedly, and comparing Chicago, Ill., with Marvin, Tex., and finding the former sadly lacking.

A dairy lunch room invited him, with its white tiling, and its pans of baked apples, and browned beans and its coffee tank. He went in and ate a solitary supper that was heavy on pie and cake.

When he came out to the street again it was evening. He walked over to State street (the wrong side.) He took the dance card out of his pocket and looked at it again. If only he had learned to dance. There'd be girls. There'd have to be girls at a dance.

Suddenly, in his ear, a woman's voice, very soft and low. "Hello, Sweetheart!" the voice said. His nickname! He whirled around, eagerly.

The girl was a stranger to him. But she was smiling, friendly, and she was pretty, too.

"Why, how-do, ma'am," said Tyler, Texas fashion.

"Where you going kid?" she asked.

Tyler blushed a little. "Well, nowhere in particular, ma'am. Just kind of milling around."

"Come on along with me," she said, and linked her arm in his.

"Why—why thanks, but—"

"Hello, Sweetheart!" said a voice, again. A man's voice, this time. Out of the cigar store came Gunner Moran, the yellow string of a tobacco bag sticking out of his blouse pocket.

A queer feeling of relief and gladness swept over Tyler. And then Moran looked sharply at the girl and said, "Why, hello Blanche!"

"Hello yourself," answered the girl, sullenly.

"Thought you was in Frisco."

"Well, I aint."

Moran shifted his attention from the girl to Tyler. "Friend o' yours?"

Before Tyler could open his lips to answer the girl put in, "Sure he is. Sure I am. We been around together all afternoon."

Tyler jerked. "Why, ma'am, I guess you've made a mistake. I never saw you before in my life. I kind of thought when you up and spoke to me you must be taking me for somebody else. Well, now, isn't that funny——"

The smile faded from the girl's face, and it became twisted with fury. She glared at Moran, her lips drawn back in a snarl. "Who're you to go buttin' into my business! This guy's a friend of mine I tell yuh!"

"Yeh? Well, he's a friend of mine, too. Me an' him had a date to meet here right now and we're goin' over to a swell little dance on Michigan avenoo. So it's you who's buttin' in, Blanche, me girl. Beat it!" He tucked his arm through Tyler's with a little impelling movement, and Tyler found himself walking up the street at a smart gait, leaving the girl staring after them.

> Tyler found himself walking up the street at a smart gait, leaving the girl staring after them

Tyler Kamps was an innocent, but he was not a fool. At what he had vaguely guessed a moment before, he now knew. They walked along in silence, the most ill-sorted pair that you might hope to find in all that higgledly-piggedy city. And, yet with a new, strong bond between them.

Tyler broke the silence.

"Do you dance?"

"Me! Dance! Well I've mixed with everything from hula dancers to geisha girls, not forgettin' the Barbary Coast in the old days, but—well, I ain't what you'd rightly call a dancer. Why you askin'?"

"Because I can't dance, either. But we'll just go up and see what it's like, anyway."

"See wot wot's like?"

Tyler took out his card again, patiently. "This dance we're going to."

They had reached the Michigan avenue address given on the card, and Tyler stopped to look up at the great brightly lighted building.

"You mean t'say you thought I was goin'——" Moran choked. "Oh, my Gawd!"

Tyler smiled at him, sweetly. "I'm kind of scared, too. But Monicker goes to these dances and he says they're right nice."

He linked his arm through the other man's. Moran allowed himself to be propelled along, dazedly. Still protesting, he found himself in the elevator with a dozen red-cheeked, scrubbed-looking jackies. At which point Moran, game in the face of horror, accepted the inevitable. He gave a characteristic jerk from the belt.

"Me, I'll try anything oncet. Lead me to it."

The elevator stopped at the ninth floor. "Out here for the jackies' dance," said the elevator boy.

The two stepped out with the others. Stepped out gingerly, caps in hand. A corridor full of women. A corridor a-flutter with girls. Talk. Laughter. Animation. In another moment the two would have turned and fled, terrified. But in the half-moment of hesitation and bewilderment they were lost.

A woman approached them hand outstretched.

"Good-evening!" she said, as if she had been haunting the halls in the hope of their coming. "I'm glad to see you. You can check your caps right there. Do you dance?"

Two scarlet faces. Four great hands twisting at white caps in an agony of embarrassment. "Why, no ma'am."

"That's fine. We'll teach you. Then you'll go into the ball room and have a wonderful time."

"But——" in choked accents from Moran.

"Just a minute. Miss Hall!" She beckoned a diminutive blonde in blue. "Miss Hall, this is Mr.—ah—Mr. Moran. Thanks. And Mr.?—yes—Mr. Kamps. Tyler Kamps. They want to learn to dance. I'll turn them right over to you. When does your class begin?"

Miss Hall glanced at a toy watch on the tiny wrist. Instinctively and helplessly Moran and Tyler focused their gaze on the dials that bound their red wrists. "Starting right now," said Miss Hall, crisply. She eyed the two men with calm appraising gaze. "I'm sure you'll both make wonderful dancers. Follow me."

And the two as though hypnotized, followed.

A fair-sized room, with a piano in one corner and groups of fidgeting jackies in every other corner. Moran and Tyler sighed with relief at sight of them. At least they were not to be alone in their agony.

Miss Hall wasted no time. Slim ankles close together, head held high, she stood in the centre of the room. "Now then, form a circle please."

Twenty six-foot, well-built specimens of manhood suddenly became shambling hulks. They clumped forward, breathing hard, and smiling mirthlesly, with an assumption of ease that deceived no one, least of all themselves. "A little lively, please. Don't look so scared. I'm not a bit vicious. Now then, Miss Weeks! A fox trot."

Miss Weeks, at the piano, broke into spirited strains. The first faltering steps in the social career of Gunner Moran and Tyler Kamps had begun.

She was strictly business, Miss Hall. No nonsense about her. "One-two-three-four! And a one-two three-four. One-two-three-four! And a turn-two, turn-four! Now then, all together. Just four straight steps as if you were walking down the street. That's all! One-two-three-four! Don't look at me. Look at my feet. And a one-two three-four."

Red-faced, they were. Very earnest. Pathetically eager and docile. Weeks of drilling had taught them to obey commands. To them the little dancing teacher whose white spats twinkled so expertly in the tangle of their own clumsy clumping boots was the commanding officer. And like children they obeyed.

Moran's Barbary Coast experience stood him in good stead now, though the stern and watchful Miss Hall put a quick stop to a certain tendency toward shoulder work. Tyler possessed what is known as a rhythm sense. Never a half-beat behind the indefatigable Miss Weeks. It was a bit labored, at first but it was true.

At 9:45 Tyler Kamps and Gunner Moran were standing in the crowded doorway of the ballroom upstairs, in a panic lest some girl should ask them to dance; fearful lest they be passed by. Little Miss Hall had brought them to the very door, had left them there with a stern injunction not to move, and had sped away in search of partners for them.

Gunner Moran's great scarlet hands were knotted into fists. His Adam's apple worked convulsively.

"Let's duck," he whispered hoarsely. The jackie band in the corner crashed into the opening bars of fox trot.

"Oh, it don't seem——" But it was plain that Tyler was weakening. Another moment and they would have turned and fled. But coming toward them was little Miss Hall, her blonde head bobbing in and out among the swaying couples. At her right and left was a girl. Her bright eyes held her two victims in the doorway.

"Miss Cunningham, this is Mr. Tyler Kamps. Mr. Moran, Miss Cunningham. Miss Drew—Mr. Moran, Mr. Kamps."

"Would you like to dance?" said Miss Cunningham, and raised limpid eyes to Tyler's.

"Why—I—you see I don't know how. I just started to——"

"Oh, that's all right," Miss Cunningham interrupted, cheerfully. "We'll try it." She stood in position and there seemed to radiate from her a certain friendliness, a certain assurance and understanding that was as calming as it was stimulating. In a sort of daze Tyler found himself moving over the floor in time to the music. He didn't know that he was being led.

The music ceased. A spat of applause. Tyler mopped his head, and his hands, and applauded too, like one in a dream. They were off again for the encore.

Five minutes later he found himself seated next Miss Cunningham in a chair against the wall. And for the first time since their meeting the mists of agony cleared before his gaze and he saw Miss Cunningham as a tall, slim, dark-haired girl, with a glint of mischief in her eye, and a mouth that looked as if she were trying to keep from smiling.

"Why don't you?" Tyler asked, and was aghast.

"Why don't I what?"

"Smile, if you want to."

At which the glint in her eye and the hidden smile on her lips met and sparked and she laughed. Tyler laughed, too, and then they laughed together and were friends.

"Where are you from?"

"Why, I am from Texas, ma'am. Marvin, Tex."

"When do you think the war will end, Mr. Kamps?"

He told her, gravely. He told her many other things. He told her about Texas, at length and in detail.

They danced again. Miss Cunningham introduced him to some other girls, and he danced with them, and they in turn asked him about the station, and Texas, and when he thought the war would end. And altogether he had a beautiful time of it, and forgot completely and entirely about Gunner Moran. It was not until he gallantly escorted Miss Cunningham downstairs for refreshments that he remembered his friend. He had procured hot chocolate for himself and Miss Cunningham, and sandwiches and delectable chunks of caramel cake. And then he had remembered. A look of horror settled down over his face. He gasped.

"W—what's the matter?" demanded Miss Cunningham.

"My—my friend. I forgot all about him." He regarded her with stricken eyes.

"Oh, that's all right," Miss Cunningham assured him for the second time that evening. "We'll just go and find him. He's probably forgotten all about you, too."

And for the second time she was right. They started on their quest. It was a short one. Off the refreshment room was a great spacious, comfortable room, all deep chairs and soft rugs, and hangings, and pictures, and shaded lights. All about sat pairs and groups of sailors and girls, talking and laughing and consuming vast quantities of cake. And in the center of just such a group sat Gunner Moran, lolling at his ease in a rosy velvet-upholstered chair. Four particularly pretty girls, and two matrons surrounded him. And as Tyler and Miss Cunningham approached him he was saying: "Well, it's got so I can't sleep in anything but a hamick. Yessir! Why, when I was 15 years old I was—" He caught Tyler's eye. "Hello!" he called, genially. "Meet me friend." This to the bevy surrounding him. "I was just tellin' these ladies here—"

And he was off again. All the tales that he told were not necessarily true. But that did not detract from their thrill. Moran's audience grew as he talked. And he talked until he and Tyler had to run all the way to the Northwestern station for the last train that would get them on the station before shore leave expired. Moran, on leaving, shook hands like a Presidential candidate.

They did not talk much in the train, he and Tyler. It was a sleepy lot of boys that that train carried back to the Great Central Naval Station. Tyler was undressed and in his hammock even before Moran, the expert. He would not have to woo sleep tonight. Finally Moran, too, had swung himself up to his precarious nest and relaxed with a tired, happy grunt.

Quiet again brooded over the great dim barracks. Tyler felt himself slipping off to sleep, deliciously. She would be there next Saturday. Her first name she had said was Myrtle. An awful pretty name for a girl. Just about the prettiest he had ever hard. Her folks invited jackies to dinner at the house nearly every Sunday. Maybe, if they gave him thirty-six hours' leave next time—

"Hey, Sweetheart!" sounded in a hissing whisper from Moran's hammock.

"What?"

"Say, was that four steps and then turn-two, or four and two steps t' the side? I kinda forgot."

"Oh, shut up!" growled Monicker, from the other side. "Let a fellow sleep, can't you? What do you think this is? A boarding school!"

"Shut up yourself!" retorted Tyler, happily. "It's four steps, and two to the right and two to the left, and four again, and turn two, turn two."

Quiet settled down upon the great room. There were only the sounds of deep regular breathing, with an occasional grunt or sigh. The normal sleep sounds of very tired boys.

[The End.]

PAID HIGH PRICE JUST TO KNOW HIM.

The Billy Fortune stories by William R. Lighton, now being put into pictures by Will Rogers at the Goldwyn studios, have won their reputation in the Saturday Evening Post because of their fidelity to life of the West. Lighton's most critical readers have been the people of the Wyoming cow country, where the scenes of the stories were laid. Their approval has sometimes been delightfully frank.

Once Lighton and a friend rode into the town of Guernsey on the Platte at the end of a long day's trip over the plains. They were tired and cold. Fletcher's famous Log Cabin Saloon was the first place they sought. "Fletch" himself was back of the bar, bent over a magazine, and wouldn't quit his reading to wait upon his customers.

"I'll be there in a minute," he called, and went on to finish his story. Then he slapped his magazine on the bar.

"There's a real story!" he said vigorously. "I'd be plumb pleased to meet up with that Billy Fortune man."

"What would you give?" Lighton asked.

"Give?" said Fletch. "I'd give this whole saloon."

And so it happened that Lighton owned the Log Cabin for a night.

TOUR OF TWO NOTED AUTHORS.

Story of Idling Expedition of Dickens and Collins.

Their Visit at Picturesque Old King's Arms.

Big Bridecake Served to Them at Every Meal.

[By S. W. Metz, in Christian Science Monitor.]

In the late autumn of 1857, Dickens and Wilkie Collins started "on a ten or twelve days' expedition to out of the way places, to do (in inns and coast corners) a little tour in search of an article and in avoidance of railroads." Their selection was the Lakes district, but the outcome of their expedition was not one article merely, but a series of five under the title of "The Lazy Tour of Two Idle Apprentices," written in collaboration. The two idle apprentices were Francis Goodchild and Thomas Idle, the first name being the pseudonym of Dickens.

These misguided young men, they inform us in the narrative, "were actuated by the low idea of making a perfectly idle trip in any direction. They had no intention of going anywhere in particular; they wanted to see nothing; they wanted to know nothing; they wanted to learn nothing; they wanted to do nothing. They wanted only to be idle. . . . and they were both idle in the last degree." In that spirit they set forth on their journey.

BRIDECAKE EVERY DAY.

Carrock, Fell, Wigton, Allonby, Carlisle, Maryport, Hesket-Newmarket, were all visited in turn, and the adventures of the twain in these spots duly set forth in the pages of the book. In due course they came to Lancaster and were meditating night at the station on account of Thomas Idle being suddenly filled with "the dreadful sensation of having something to do," but decided to stay because they had heard there was a good inn at Lancaster, established in a fine old house; an inn where they gave you bridecake every day after dinner. "Let us eat bridecake," they said, "without the trouble of being married or knowing anybody in that ridiculous dilemma." And so they departed from the station and were duly delivered at the fine old house at Lancaster on the same night.

This was the King's Arms in the Market Street, the exterior of which was dismal, quite uninviting, and lacked any sort of picturesqueness such as one associates with old inns; but the interior soon compensated for the unattractiveness of the exterior by its atmosphere, fittings and customs. Being then more than two centuries old, it had allurement calculated to make the lover of things old happy and contented.

A MYSTERIOUS OLD HOUSE.

"The house was a genuine old house," the story tells us, "of a very quaint description, teeming with old carvings, and beams, and panels, and having an excellent staircase with a gallery or upper staircase, cut off from it by a curious fencework of old oak, or of Honduras mahogany wood. It was, and is, and will be for many a long year to come, a remarkably picturesque house; and a certain grave mystery lurking in the depth of the old mahogany panels, as if they were so many deep pools of dark water—such, indeed, as they had been much among when they were trees—gave it a very mysterious character after nightfall."

At the time of the visit of Dickens and Wilkie Collins to this rare old inn the proprietor was one Joseph Sly, and Dickens occupied what he termed the state bedroom, "with two enormous red four-posters in it, each as big as Charley's room at Gad's Hill." He described the inn as "a very remarkable old house . . . with genuine rooms and an uncommonly quaint staircase." A certain part "of the lazy notes from which these lazy sheets are taken" we are told, was written at the King's Arms Hotel.

HEAR WHAT THEY ATE.

On their arrival Dickens and Collins sat down to a good hearty meal. The landlord himself presided over the serving of it, which, Dickens writes in a letter, comprised "two little salmon trout, a sirloin steak, a brace of partridges, seven dishes of sweets, five dishes of dessert, led off by a bowl of peaches, and in the center an enormous bridecake—'We always have it here, sir,' said the landlord, 'custom of the house.' Collins turned pale and estimated the dinner at a half a guinea each."

Mr. Sly became quite a good friend of the two distinguished novelists and cherished with great pride the signed portrait of Dickens with which the author of "Pickwick" presented him. He left the old place in 1879, and it was soon afterward pulled down and replaced by an ordinary commercial hotel. It is interesting to know that the famous oak bedstead in which Dickens himself slept was acquired by the Duke of Norfolk.

MR. SLY PROUD OF DISTINCTION

Mr. Sly never tired of recalling the visit of the two famous authors, took the greatest pride in his wonderful old inn, and found real delight in conducting visitors over the building and telling amusing stories about Dickens and Wilkie Collins. Indeed, he was so proud of the association that he obtained Dickens's permission to reprint those passages of the "Lazy Tour of Two Idle Apprentices" relating to the hostelry, in pamphlet form, with an introductory note, saying, "The reader is perhaps aware that Mr. Charles Dickens and his friend, Wilkie Collins, in the year 1857, visited Lancaster, and during their sojourn stopped at Mr. Sly's King's Arms Hotel."

In its palmy days the King's Arms was a prominent landmark for travelers en route to Morecambe Bay, Windermere, the Lakes and Scotland; it was erected in 1625, and in the coaching era, was the head hotel in the town for general posting purposes. It was the most suitable place for tourists to break their journey north, both going and returning, and as such was one of the most important in the north of England.

Kept His Farm.

"You people didn't return my flower pot."

"No," said the expert, "but I wrote you that the soil was all right for farming."

"Yah."

"What's the matter?"

"All the soil I had was in that pot."—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

TOM MOORE
in
"One of the Finest"

By J. CLARKSON MILLER. Directed by HARRY BEAUMONT

The pride of the force arrests Dan Cupid.

Irish chap is at his best as the mounted "cop" in this fast-moving, sensational comedy-drama.

Special Musical Feature.

"THE ALHAMBRA QUINTETTE"
of Five Beautiful Girls, Headed by Helena Schiller, Bohemian Violinist.

MANY NEW FILMS ON THE RIALTO.

Nazimova New Type of Role in "The Brat."

"Lord and Lady Algy" Here; So's "Society Exile."

"Petal on Current" Drifts in; Comedies Sparkle.

With hardly an exception everything's new along the picture rialto this week. And some of the shows are brand new. The film's just off the dryer, so to speak.

It is worthy of note that the premiere of the film version of Maud Fulton's play, "The Brat," is to take place here, just as was the case with the original play. Nazimova is the celebrated star of the photoplay, which will reveal her in a role totally different from any she has previously essayed.

Tom Moore, who is now rapidly acquiring first-magnitude luminosity, will be seen in "Lord and Lady Algy," at one theater, and "One of the Finest," at another, his roles being entirely different.

Another big Elsie Ferguson feature is in the foreground. It is "The Society Exile," with a strong dramatic subject. Another special feature is the "Petal on the Current," with Mary MacLaren.

Other sparklers of the week are Constance Talmadge, in another of her popular comedies; Ethel Clayton is a whimsical novelty; Herbert Rawlinson, in another Craig Kennedy thriller; Earle Williams, in a problem melodrama, and Alma Rubens.

Among the films which will have a reshowing are Clara Kimball Young's "The Better Wife," Wallie Reid's "The Love Burglar," and Maurice Tourneur's "White Heather," with its submarine thrills.

The Rothapfel unit programme, a varied entertainment, will make its local debut this week.

California.

Nazimova, in Maude Fulton's sensational stage success, "The Brat," is the attraction to open at the California Theater tomorrow. As the nameless waif of the streets who goes from the chorus of a cheap musical comedy company to the night court—from the night court to a home of wealth—who, from being a nobody becomes the wife of a somebody, Nazimova is said to outdo her previous triumphs.

This is the first time in her career she has played the role of an American girl and her admirers are interested in her method of portraying the independent, slangy little lady of the slums.

The picture is having its prerelease showing at the California Theater. Manager Miller of the California is therefore arranging a special programme to accompany, including a well-arranged musical score to be played by the California Orchestra. Other features of the big bill include two new song hits played by Organist Jesse Crawford; a Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedy; news, scenic and novelty reels. Paul Reese, sailor tenor, singing "Oh, What a Pal was Mary," and a harp solo will be musical features.

Grauman's.

Said to teach a great lesson of kindness and forgiveness, "A Society Exile," the Artcraft photodrama, starring Elsie Ferguson, will open at Grauman's tomorrow.

The picture is an adaptation of a play by Henry Arthur Jones, and is said to be one of the masterpieces of a woman's soul-development. It deals with the jealous type of woman, treading the straight and narrow path according to the letter, but filled with envy and bitterness toward women possessing beauty, brilliance and fascination.

Elsie Ferguson enacts the role of an outcast, become so through the machinations of a group of envious women. A great wrong is done her, and throughout the photodrama are interwoven little incidents which prove her to be made of far better stuff than her conventional and unimaginative persecutors.

Sid Grauman has arranged a number of additional features on the scale of brilliancy.

Kinema.

Does Los Angeles remember the delightful co-starring engagement of William Faversham and Maxine Elliott in R. C. Carton's comedy-drama, "Lord and Lady Algy?" Undoubtedly there is a compact chorus of ayes, and those who have seen the play will no doubt receive the announcement that Tom Moore is to be seen at the Kinema today in its picturization with interest.

Bringing this play to the screen is a distinct scoop for Goldwyn and with Tom Moore as Lord Algy, Naomi Childers as Lady Algy, and other capable people in support, the comedy-drama should prove a worth-while attraction.

"Lord and Lady Algy" is distinctly a modern story dealing with the problems of many a young married couple of today.

The dash and excitement of the fox hunt and horse race and the pageantry of the masquerade ball form some of the more spectacular portions of "Lord and Lady Algy." The wholesomeness of country life serves as a background.

In conjunction with "Lord and Lady Algy" the Kinema features a seven-spot variety programme, with the Kinema Concert Orchestra and Leonard Clark at the organ taking care of the music.

ham.

Tally's.

Modern science has experimented with almost everything except marriage, and Constance Talmadge does that in her latest rollicking comedy, "Experimental Marriage," starting tomorrow at Tally's. She is a radical feminist and agrees to marry a young lawyer on condition that they live together but three days a week, from Saturday to Monday, the intervening time each is to do as he or she pleases without questioning from the other.

A merry mix-up follows this ludicrous contract and at last the "three-day" wife hastens to the arms of her hubby, while he demands that she cast aside the "votes for women" banner.

Harrison Ford, Walter Hiers and a cast of favorites support the star.

A variety of added attractions together with a brilliant musical programme complete the bill.

Superba.

That Fannie Hurst wrote "A Petal on the Current" is sufficient guarantee that this new starring vehicle for Mary MacLaren, which opens this Sunday at the Superba, is a human tale of a very human person.

Fannie Hurst reached a pinnacle in this particular story, however, a number of other companies are said to have bid for it before the Universal obtained it for Miss MacLaren.

So well fitted is the role of Stella Schump, who is "in Children's Shore" at the Criterion," to Miss MacLaren that critics who have read the fiction story and have seen the photodrama in preview have stated that in their opinion Universal bought the tale in the belief that Miss Hurst drew on Mary MacLaren's screen personality for her principal character.

Reality, rather than realism, shines forth in the human record of a girl's struggle to gain the shore of "Another Chance"—and of the man who proved to be the means of her rehabilitation.

Tod Browning produced the drama. Supporting Miss MacLaren, are Robert Andersen, David Butler, Gertrude Claire, Fritzie Ridgway, Victor Potel and Beatrice Burn-

Clune's Broadway.

"A Sporting Chance" is Ethel Clayton's latest picture, which opens a week's run at Clune's, Broadway, today. Miss Clayton appears as Carey Brent, a girl who puts into execution every impulse which seizes her mind, and whose impulses lead her into many difficulties. She never fails to take a sporting chance, no matter if the odds are 100 to 1 against her.

Her first impulse is to reform a man whom she believes a notorious convict. Encountering him on a country road, she employs him as a chauffeur. Later she vamps a young idler who she thinks is dancing attendance to her stepmother. She then overhears a telephone conversation between the society idler and her stepmother, in which the young man is threatening the latter with some old love letters which he holds, unless she helps him to win the hand of Carey, as his price of silence. Another impulse possesses Carey and she goes to the society's idler's apartments to get the letters.

The picture contains many amusing situations all leading up to a satisfactory climax.

The supporting cast includes well-known players. Jack Holt plays the hero role; Anna Q. Nilsson appears as the stepmother. Herbert Standing and others have prominent parts that could scarcely be improved.

On the programme is also the eighth episode of the thrilling Houdini serial.

Palace.

Is it ever proper to shield a crook? The problem of the ethics involved in this question receives exciting treatment in Vitagraph's "The Hornet's Nest," featuring Earle Williams, which will be shown at the Palace beginning today.

It happens that Ashe Colvin (Earle Williams) is seated in his study reading when a crook, pursued by the police, crawls into the window. The crook appeals to Colvin for help, begging to be hidden till the police pass. It is apparent that the crook could have turned his revolver, which he held in plain view, upon Colvin and forced the latter to let him through the interior of the building. The man's evident sincerity causes Colvin to trust him in that instant. He decides the ethical question on the spur of the moment, and, right or wrong, hides the intruder.

Symphony.

Beginning today, the Symphony will present for its Pacific Coast premiere, the Rothapfel Unit programme. This unique entertainment consists of six distinct features, produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Rothapfel himself and blended harmoniously. Mr. Rothapfel, who conceived and executed this novel conception, is well known in the screen world, having been the directing genius of the three large New York theaters, the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli.

Victory.

The hitm ade by Herbert Rawlinson in "The Carter Case" at the Victory last week has induced the management to show to his followers the further adventures of the famous detective character Craig Kennedy. With this second mystery drama, the Broadway house has booked the romance of "Crimson Kate and the Sky Pilot," featuring Alma Rubens; it is called "A Man's Country," in its film version.

The Alma Rubens picture is the dramatic story of a scarlet woman and a wandering preacher and the locale of the play is in one of the frontier towns of early California.

Miss Rubens is supported by Lon Chaney, Joseph Dowling, Alfred Hollingsworth, among others.

The new Craig Kennedy adventure is "The Vacuum Room."

Alhambra.

Tom Moore is a mounted policeman in his newest Goldwyn picture "One of the Finest," which comes to the Alhambra Theater today, and his natty uniform seems to be the magnet toward which love, adventure, romance and thrills gravitate. Moore is becoming one of the most popular screen matinee idols and this new role is said to fit him especially well. He is Larry Hayes, son of a former commissioner, who lives with his widowed mother and a little girl, Mary Jane Andrews, to whom he has given a home when her father is sent to prison. His kindness and devotion to the child almost bring about his undoing, however, when the rejected suitor of the girl he loves seeks to make her believe that the child is Larry's own.

The truth comes out in a dramatic climax after a series of exciting incidents.

The star is supported by Seena Owen, "Peaches" Jackson, Hal Cooley, Mollie McConnell and others. A musical feature is a quintette of young girls headed by Helenka H. Schiller, the Bohemian violiniste.

Quinn's Rialto.

Wallace Reid is to appear in "The Love Burglar" adapted from the stage play, "One of Us," by Jack Lait, at Quinn's Rialto beginning Sunday.

In the stage production, the chief role was played by a feminine star, but for the purposes of the screen, the leading male role was made the most important for it appeared to the producer that the male lead was by far the more significant.

The story deals with the adventures of a young society idler, who, finding his younger and erring brother in a tough slum saloon, strips him of all of his valuables and sends him home. The act is interpreted by the rough element as a bold hold-up, they not knowing that a relationship exists between the two men, and they welcome the idler into their gang, thinking that he is "The Colt Kid" an ex-convict whom they have been expecting.

How he saves a beautiful girl from the clutches of a gang leader who is forcing her to rob the wealthy frequenters of the place, and finally marries her after learning that in reality she is a novelist who is seeking atmosphere fo rher story, makes an interesting plot.

Garrick.

Clara Kimball Young will appear at the Garrick today in "The Better Wife." She is supported by Ben Alexander, the child actor, Nigel Barry, Kathlyn Williams, Lillian Walker, Barbara Tennant and Irving Cummings.

Miss Young plays the part of a young lady who falls in love with a man already married. "The Better Wife," however, really teaches a moral, a moral that has a particular attraction for married men. Much has been written and said of the fact that once a man is married he fails to live up to the standard of affection set during his pre-marriage days. That this is true of woman also is illustrated in the plausible plot in "The Better Wife."

De Luxe.

A scene of dramatic power is where two men struggle on the floor of the ocean in Maurice Tourneur's picture "The White Heather," on view at the De Luxe today and tomorrow. This is said by New York critics to be one of the most novel spectacles ever pictured.

"The White Heather" is adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama. Indirectly the title comes from the good luck flower of the Scotch highlands, the white heather. Yet Scotland is the background for but a minor part of the melodrama.

The real action centers around the recovery of a marriage record from the hulk of a destroyed yacht. For this record the hero and the villain, in the weird costumes of deep sea divers, fight to the death.

MAKES ODD RULES FOR PRIZE FIGHT.

Lloyd Hamilton, appearing in Henry Lehrman Comedies, has thrown one of his old hats into the ring along with the rest of them, and has issued a challenge to the w. k. Jack Dempsey. After stating that the challenge is not issued for publicity purposes, "Ham" lays down the following conditions:

The fight shall be for ten rounds, and during the first nine rounds Dempsey's right hand shall be tied to his necktie.

Throughout the fight Dempsey must carry a step ladder.

The floor shall be covered with feather mattresses not less than fourteen inches thick.

Only spectators with luxurious hair may occupy ringside seats. No hard domes allowed within ten rows of the ring.

Ham must be permitted to carry his lucky horseshoe in his right glove.

Either contestant may stop the action at any moment by crossing his fingers.

SMART PLAYS HOLD OVER.

"Civilian Clothes" Remains; Also "Tea for Three."

"Yankee Prince" to Jollify; Chinese Jazz Arrives.

"House Next Door" is Lewis Stone Offering.

It's a week of holdovers, except for the new acts at the vaudeville theaters, the Majestic's change of bill, and a new musical comedy at the Burbank. But nobody will object to the repeats because the shows are proving the popularity sine qua non, particularly "Civilian Clothes" which enters its eighth week today. It looks as if they might register 100 local performances before the crowds cease to justify the conclusion of the engagement of Thompson Buchanan's brilliant comedy. Another smart show which remains for another week is "Tea for Three." This is quite the cleverest play as to its situations and dialogue that has appeared in many days. It is thoroughly amusing, but it also gives the audience something to think about, because its humor is sharp-pointed, even when it sparkles most merrily. The new Lewis Stone play is one of the very best offered to date. It is from the pen of J. Hartley Manners, and deals with the theme of race prejudice. Its seriousness is lighted by those flashes of comedy for which Manners excels.

The bill at the Orpheum is headed by a novelty in the shape of a Chinese Jazz Band. Singers Midgets are to be at Pantages, while the Hip has an attractive offering. Our old friend "The Yankee Prince" succeeds Kid Burns at Pelton's Burbank, and that everybody will enjoy seeing the show goes without saying, because everybody likes George Cohan comedies with music.

Majestic.

J. Hartley Manners's comedy-drama "The House Next Door" will be Lewis S Stone's vehicle, beginning tonight. "The House Next Door" is an arraignment of false pride and prejudice, illuminated by wit and humor throughout. Stone will play the role made notable by Forbes-Robertson, namely, that of Sir John Cotswold, the irascible baronet who conceived a hatred of his nuveau riche neighbor, the Jewish "knight" Jacobson, that only devotion to his own family ultimately overcame.

The motif of this play, which resembles the pro-Semitism of Israel Zangwill and which shatters religious distinctions with the hammer of humanity and common sense.

There is delightful romance in "The House Next Door." There is big drama, too, and the production rehearsed under Director David M. Hartford promises to be one of the best during the season of the company.

Florence Oakley, Byron Beasley, Grace Morse, Donald Stuart, Bettie Wales, Alice Bromley Wilson, George Pearce and Mr. Hartford, Gavin Young and others are in the cast.

Mason.

"Tea for Three," at the Mason, has come to mean tea for a crowd, for that is a fitting description of the participants at the function presented every evening during the past week at he Mason, while mob would be more appropriate, speaking of the Wednesday matinee.

Everybody in Los Angeles seems to have a keen sense of humor, and in no play in seasons, whether comedy or farce, has there been disclosed such abundance of material for a perfectly healthy sense of fun to feed upon.

Roi Cooper Megrue, author of "It Pays to Advertise," "Seven Chances," and "Under Cover," brought the fine art of comedy writing down to a cumulative point when he penned "Tea for Three." He has provided clever situations, a story with a decidedly human appeal and dialogue that would be worthy of Shaw or Wilde. The lines have been termed epigrammatic, but in reality they are not, they are merely sound philosophy, written with a pen pointed in humor, and spoken by a clever comedian. Arthur Byron, known for his exceptional work in "The Boomerang," again appears as the man of the world. He is a physician without a practice because there are two kinds of people in the world, he finds, those who are ill and won't see at doctor, and those who have nothing the matter with them and are always running to one. As his attraction is for the latter class, he refuses to remain on the job.

Frederick Perry gives a plendid interpretation as the husband, while Elsa Ryan brings grace and charm and every artistic asset to the role of the wife. Minor parts are well taken by Mara Keval and Albert Marsh.

Orpheum.

When it comes to mixing Chinese and jazz, leave it to the navy. The Chinese Jazz Band, twenty strong, will show Los Angeles the truth of the assertion at the Orpheum, beginning tomorrow, for Thomas B. Kennedy, chief bandmaster, U.S.N., will present the twenty young Celestials in an unusual programme of music. All the members of the band were born in this country, which may account in a way for their facility with the jazz; many of them are sons of Chinese merchants of California. They have been trained by Bandmaster Gregory. Many if not most of them served in the United States forces during the war. A second headline number of the new bill is offered by Clarence Oliver and Georgia Olp, who have a Hugh Herbert success called "Discontent." It shows a small railroad station kept by an optimistic girl, who makes it belie its name of Discontent. While there is a bit of symbolism in the act, it is not wearisome, and the play will doubtless be received on its merits as a drama, as most of Herbert's are.

Others are Frances Dougherty, versatile and entertaining, with material varying from songs to the Irish harp; Bob Murphy and Elmore White in a peppy arrangement of tunes and laughs, and Mlle. Nadja.

Universal Actress is Featured.

Kathleen O'Connor.

NEW STAR ON HORIZON.

A new star has just twinkled forth in the filmland galaxy, Kathleen O'Connor, who formerly played feminine leads with James J. Corbett and Tom Mix, proved her ability so strikingly in Harry Carey's latest picture, that Carl Laemmle immediately offered her a contract to become a photoplay first-magnitude luminary.

Miss O'Connor has been with the "U" nearly a year now. In that time she has been offered contracts with European producers as well as local magnates, Brunton and Louis J. Gasnier being among those who were negotiating for her services, but Universal exercised its option and is retaining the favorite for at least a year, the time limit set by the star herself, who hesitates—intelligently enough—to bind herself to any corporation for any longer term at this stage of her career.

"The Strange Case of Cavendish" has been obtained by William Pigott, Universal's serial chief, for Miss O'Connor's premier starring vehicle. The story was written as a novel by Randall Parris, and it was adapted for the screen by William Pigott and Joe Brandt, who, as general manager of Universal's serial output, first recognized Miss O'Connor's great promise when she was playing opposite Corbett.

The continuity is being written by Karl Coolidge and work already has begun on filming the story under Jack Wells's direction. Jack Perrin will be prominently advertised as chief in Miss O'Connor's support, as Harry D. Kline, the U's general manager, has great faith in the youth's future.

In "The Strange Case of Cavendish" Miss O'Connor will have a role similar to that in "The Midnight Man," the Corbett vehicle. She will be society girl turned newspaper woman, and in this capacity she will unravel a murder mystery on the solution of which hang the destinies of several characters in the story.

SMART PLAYS HOLD OVER.

who reveals beauty secrets, and "The Reckless Eve," Nelson & Chain, and Miss Ione Pastori, holdovers.

Pelton's Burbank.

George M. Cohan's musical comedy, "The Yankee Prince," will be the attraction at Pelton's Burbank, starting today. The offering from all angles is a bell-ringer, with snappy lines and catchy music. As to plot, there is a rich American who is desirous of marrying his daughter to an English lord, but young Percy Springer puts in an appearance and knocks things sky-high by running off with the millionaire's daughter and marrying her.

The hero will be played by George Banta, Jr., while the comedy role of the bill, Steve Daly, a fight promoter, is in the hands of Larry Richardson, who was the Kid Burns in "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway;" Joseph Bonner, a new member of the company, will be seen in the character of the English lord. Another newcomer is Dell Harris.

Marie Rich will have the role of Evelyn Fielding, the millionaire daughter, and Arline Levy the girl detective.

New scenery, costumes, and, in fact, everything new, will go toward making "The Yankee Prince" a diverting attraction.

Morosco.

The Morosco Theater will present the seventy-fifth consecutive performance in Los Angeles of Thompson Buchanan's comedy success "Civilian Clothes," today.

Despite the fact that the summer season is responsible for thousands of theater patrons being absent at beaches and resorts, last week's business was the greatest on record for the Morosco Theater, nearly every matinee and evening performance attracting capacity houses.

Clyde Fillmore and Eleanor Woodruff form an admirable pair for the leading roles of the play. Fillmore's role calls for marked versatility. The reception accorded Miss Woodruff attests her success in her performance.

Pantages.

Enter Singer's Midgets at Pantages, tomorrow, together with a vaudeville bill of seven acts. The midgets, thirty of them, give a complete performance, with their four dwarf elephants, twenty small ponies, a pack of foxhounds, trained deer, besides various tiny carriages, carts, a tally-ho coach and elaborate scenery. It is impossible to imagine anything like the Singer's midgets show without having seen it. Their show is a combination of opera, circus, vaudeville and drama.

The other vaudeville numbers are: Leila Shaw and players, in a travesty triangle playlet, entitled "There She Goes Again;" the Empire Comedy Four, singers; Joe Fanton & Co., in an acrobatic act called "A Morning in Camp;" Cliff Clark, the versatile vendor of variety; Otto Cesana, the accordionist; Amoras & Obey, billed as the Parisian eccentriques.

Hippodrome.

Are you a wealthy young heiress with loads of admirers, some of whom may be after your money? If so, would you like to find out who loves you just for yourself? That's just what Evelyn Greeley does in the film, "Bringing up Betty," which opens a three-day run at the Hippodrome, starting today. She discovers that not one of her three suitors cares a hang about her when it is reported that she has lost her money. The resulting consequences make a most delectable screen story.

The Bolle Trio will top the vaudeville bill. They feature the Twinette Shirley, versatile dancers.

Talbert & Fisher bring eccentricities of song, while the Spanish Goldinis will offer a novelty.

Mann & Mallory furnish breezy bits of humor, and Armstrong & Neville are equilibrists who give the show a fast start.

The remaining act is in the nature of a surprise, it is said.

FIRST CODY PLAY IS NOW COMPLETE.

TITLING AND EDITING OF "BELOVED CHEATER" IN PROGRESS.

The first of the Lew Cody productions has been completed and is being edited and titled under W. Christy Cabanne's direction at the L. J. Gasnier studio.

Film experts who have seen the cinema in the projection room declare the story—a social satire, originally written by Stephen Fox, Jr., and scenarioized by the star and Louis J. Gasnier, the producer, in collaboration—has the flavor of Bernard Shaw.

Three leading women prominent in filmdom's "Who's Who" supported Lew Cody in the feature, which has been renamed "The Beloved Cheater" from "The Pleasant Devil." They are Eileen Percy, formerly Douglas Fairbanks's and Robert Warwick's feminine lead, Doris Pawn and Kathleen Kirkham. Jack Mower depicted Cody's "love rival" while Frederick Vroom, Alice Fleming, Andrew Robson, Walter Morosco, Ulric and Mary Busch and others have important parts.

Cody appears as a philanderer, who loves—frequently—but not so constantly, yet whose susceptible heart is capable of big affections and sacrifices. Cody has a more sympathetic role than Lois Weber, Maurice Tourneur and the other producers who formerly exploited the star's talents, accorded him, and he has made the most of the opportunity to establish a significant figure in screen annals.

Several releasing corporations are said to be negotiating for the first Cody release.

WILL SIGNALIZE NEW BOOKING PLAN.

Paramount-Artcraft week will be inaugurated beginning August 31, signalizing the formal introduction to the public of the new selective booking plan to be adopted by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the release of Artcraft pictures.

"We believe this selective booking plan to be the most vital step since the advent of pictures," remarked Cecil B. de Mille in expressing the views of the corporation of which he is director-general. "In a few words this new scheme of things means better screen plays adapted from great works of fiction and produced more richly in detail with a more extensive amount of time allotted to the director in preparing the manuscript, in scenario form, to the screen. Of course, as has been proved, an original scenario along the right line and well produced is of vast importance and will always hold its place in the photoplay world, but the screen plays that are going to hold the chief position will be those taken from themes which have left an indelible impress upon the public consciousness."

The following is a list of the September releases under the new selective booking plan: Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defense," Wallace Reid in "The Valley of the Giants," Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow" (prerelease,) Dorothy Dalton in "The Market of Souls," Vivian Martin in "The Third Kiss" (prerelease,) Robert Warwick in "Told in the Hills," Marguerite Clark in "Widow by Proxy," Charles Ray in "The Egg Crate Wallop" and "The Miracle Man" from George M. Cohan's stage play by Frank L. Packard.

ELUSIVE ETHEL PLANS AIRCRAFT.

MISS CLAYTON DEVISES PLANS FOR FOUR-PASSENGER DIRIGIBLE.

Ethel Clayton, outdoor girl and all-round athlete, is as versatile in creating sporting novelties as she is on the screen. During the week the publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky studios was diligently searching for the delectable star to have some new still photographs of her taken. Every available clew was followed and for two days the quest was without results.

However, a casual remark was dropped by one of her girl friends that capable Ethel was surely busy these days putting into effect a new idea that came to her while on a set during the filming of her latest Paramount-Artcraft photoplay, "The Sporting Chance," now showing at Clune's Broadway. Investigation showed that Miss Clayton had been drawing the working plans for a four-passenger family dirigible, which she hoped to perfect and put into operation some time before the first of the year.

"Why not?" exclaimed the ingenius individual. "It is the most practical idea for transportation and equally as safe as the airplane. It is much less expensive to operate and gets on over a vast distance in a short time. Anyway, I so enjoy trying to work out these devices and have read and studied much along these lines. I may surprise you all by appearing in just such a contrivance some day soon."

Romance of Madlaine

As told by Ella the Extra Girl

Grace Kingsley

Well, dearie, the giddy social whirl's been claimin' me for its own since last we criticised each other's make-ups. Yes, indeedy! Oh, if paw could only aseen me when Mrs. Steppout's butler buttled for me—his little girl that used to put her head in the tiger's mouth and get sticks of candy for doing same, wishing tigers could be trained to eat candy instead of raw meat. Poor paw! But tigers will be tigers and not doves of peace, and anyhow I'm proud he left me a bunch of courage in my system, which gawd knows us poor girls need in pitchers, tigers or no tigers. Yes, dearie, I've left paw's tigers far behind and entered the realm of the social lion, who don't, of course, jungle, but who's gotta be fed the same as jungle tigers, dearie, and that's what I'm coming to. Because if it hadn't abeen for feedin' 'em, this story wouldn't ahappened, there wouldn't abeen any misplaced chauffeur—though he afterward turned out to be a hero in two places—and neither would Cora Swansdown have pulled that social boner—though I guess fox pas is a nicer expression—and Madlaine Traverse wouldn't now be as good as engaged to one who, while really a social lion hisself, is, I must say, perfectly kippie. But, there, dearie, I don't need to ukulele obligato when I'm talking.

Ella the Extra Girl flung off her immense pink hat, unbelted her pink silk sweater, fanned herself with a picture magazine, and the New Girl hastily threw down her "uke," removed a bit of grease-paint from a dressing-room chair and bid Ella be careful not to sit down on it till she had her kimono safely on.

It was all a big joke on Cora Swansdown, Ella went on, dropping into the chair, and also on Miss Traverse, only the one on Miss Traverse turned around and was on the other folks, so she who laughs last breaks her corset-string, as the poet says.

And you can just bet, dearie, when I finds myself at that table, I'm glad I've et in all them banquet scenes, as otherwise I mighta had a lot o' forks and spoons left over at the end that I didn't know what to do with, and as it was I had only one small fork which gawd knows you'd swallow if you tried to eat anything with it.

You know, dearie, life ain't made me strong for romance except in the third reel, it being usually the case that romance ain't so, very long, if at all, the girl usually thinking it's romance, but the man merely thinking it's kipple to have a female's emotions all jazzed up about him. But I will say this between Madlaine Traverse and that aforesaid person looks like romance. And Madlaine Traverse ought to know romance if anybody, she having once been engaged to a Spanish nobleman and there's none no more romantic than them Spaniards, especially on post cards with castles and guitars and moonlight on 'em.

Yes, they're all romance except in their food, which, dearie, Miss Traverse'll not conceal from you she don't like, preferring, she says, a fine grade of blotting paper to tortillas any day, and also as for their bullfights she says she don't know how you could go on holding your sweetie's hand while a kind if mangy old horse is painfully losing his life out there in the ring.

SOCIAL EQUALITY.

The reason I been flitting about like a social butterfly, dearie, is because I ain't really an extra any more, though willing to be so, sometimes at $10 a day, and I'm glad you're getting parts, too, dearie, so's we're in the same social strata, because I'd hate to leave you behind, we being such good friends and all, but being obliged not to notice you unless you get along just as fast as I do, which is a cruel law of the fillums and can't be helped let the chips fall where they may.

It all began when I was playing a part on the set with Cora Swansdown, one day, and being invited to a dinner party that was given by a society dame that'd just planted her family tree a little while ago, but managed to force it so it grew right up before your eyes, so to speak. She's kinda crazy about picture players, as lots of these society dames are—not, o' course, considering a picture player that works for his living so good as she is, who got over working for her living when her husband struck oil in the back yard one day whilst digging a post hole to plant a clothes line, but still considering a picture actor amusing and something to tell about afterward, especially the scandal. Next day I had a part over on the Fox lot with Madlaine Traverse, and there come the same dame, and she invited all of us, so I got two invitations which certainly made it legal.

The dinner party was for Saturday night, and we were asked to bring guests if we wished, notifying our hostess before the end of the week. Miss Swansdown had met a man at several parties that she liked very much, and she asked him; Miss Traverse and I decided to go together. The place was away out in the country, and we were to travel by train, Mrs. Steppout sending motors to meet us at the station.

On the train I was sitting next to Miss Traverse, and opposite Miss Swansdown and Mr. Barham, which was the young man's name, so I had a chance to watch everything that went on. Cora introduced the young man and he made a good impression, though not talking much, but politely, mostly yes and no, but making a hit through his good, clean looks.

Pretty soon we reached the station and left the train, and it was then I saw Cora's friend give an awful start and turn pale. It was just as the boys were calling out the evening papers—all about the bomb plotters.

We'd been hearing a lot about bomb plots that day, and all of a sudden it struck both Miss Traverse and me maybe he was one of the plotters, and maybe something had gone off that he started. But ah, how different everything turned out!

He right away said he felt ill and would have to go back home, he guessed, but Miss Swansdown insisted he go on and be cared for at Mrs. Steppout's.

When we all stepped into the machines, I noted he pulled his hat kind of low down over his eyes and got into an automobile without looking at anybody. He was hemmed in, so to speak.

SECOND EPISODE OF MYSTERY.

Now comes the second chapter of excitement and mystery, dearie, or anyhow it turned out that way afterward. As the train had been late, we were all bundled quickly into cars by an awfully handsome chauffeur, not in uniform, who murmured a name we supposed was Mrs. Steppout's, and then said something smilingly about Mrs. Steppout's French chef's dinner getting all hot and cold in the wrong places. He spoke to Miss Traverse several times, and she answered him sweetly, but Miss Swansdown's friend remained quiet and with his hat pulled down over his eyes. Our hostess was all dolled up like a millionaire's wife in the first reel before they lose their money to the heavy and the old man goes blind, and she greeted everybody as effusively as a soda fountain operating on any hot day since prohibition set in with such severity.

And when it came Cora's turn to introduce her guest, the young man just turned a bit white and choked a little as he looked into Mrs. Steppout's eyes—but I'll say for him he didn't flinch.

As for her, she just froze! It was awful! Poor young man—whatever had he done to her that she should look at him like a vinegar queen?

I may as well tell you, right now, dearie, he was one of Mrs. Steppout's chauffeurs! You see, Cora didn't know he was a chauffeur. She had met him only three times, at mutual friends' houses, but had liked him. He had been in soldier's uniform then and she had got a crush on him right away. And he, poor young man, hadn't caught the name of the people rightly, to whose home he was coming, but supposed it was somebody in town. Knowing Mrs. Steppout as he did he'd a been court-martia'ed, I guess, before he would have come to her house like that as a dinner guest.

It was an awfully awkward situation, naturally, but I will say Mrs. Steppout might have been nicer about it. There wasn't any reason why she shouldn't have been, really, only I suppose her family tree hadn't been growing long enough so she felt she could hang anything unnecessary on it like a present of courtesy to a nice young man who happened to work for a living.

Madlaine Traverse has a big sense of humor, and, of course, she couldn't help laughing about the funny situation, when she told me about it hurriedly, as some one had told her, but she put herself out to be nice to the young man, who was as decent and clean-cut as you'd like to see. But, of course, his being so handsome made it easy for most any woman to be nice to him.

THE OTHER CHAUFFEUR.

But were surprises never to cease, dearie? I ask you if what happened next wasn't strange? When we gathered in the drawing-room, there was the chauffeur who brought us down from the train, all clothed in his moonlights and looking just too handsome for anything. His name was Turner, and—he was given to Miss Traverse to take in to dinner.

Miss Traverse and I went to a dressing-room to put a dull finish on our noses, and we couldn't help laughing and laughing. She was thoroughly enjoying herself. She said Mrs. Steppout was the funniest woman she ever saw, and this was the very funniest situation.

Then we all went down to dinner, and my, how clever and entertaining Miss Traverse found Mr. Turner. She said afterward she didn't know when she had enjoyed knowing anybody so much. She found out from him that he intended operating an automobile factory, too, and said she felt proud to know him, and guessed she had wronged Mrs. Steppout after all. When Turner caught sight of Mr. Barham, the chauffeur, he gave an odd little start, an amused look came into his eyes, and he looked over at Mrs. Steppout inquiringly.

Then he began to talk gayly and interestingly with him. Naturally, thought Miss Traverse and I, chauffing for the same family they'd be chums.

After dinner, Miss Swansdown became suddenly and oddly interested in Mr. Turner, and kept trying to take him away from Miss Traverse. Why couldn't she stick to her own chauffeur, if she wanted one, we thought—certainly there seemed nearly chauffeurs enough to go around.

Finally Mr. Barham turned to me, and when Miss Traverse finally let Cora take her handsome man away from her, Mr. Barham became warmed up and really jolly. Mr. Turner soon brought Cora back, and asked Miss Traverse if she'd like to see the Japanese garden, and she said she would, though gawd knows I don't believe she'd have cared a cent for the little pee-wee place with its pocket-plum trees like a Noah's ark garden after the flood, and its half-portion lake that they better look out or the goldfish'll drink it up—if it hadn't been for the company she was in. Mr. Turner was quoting poetry, I remember, dearie, as they turned away. Then Cora went inside to hunt up Mrs. Steppout and try to be nice to her.

A DRAMATIC CLIMAX.

Suddenly somebody called to us from the garden. It was Clyde Fillmore, who said he had just seen two queer-looking guys jump over the wall and run away. Just then Mr. Barham gave a little start, pointed to a tiny spark that glowed under the piazza, and, not hesitating one minute, ran and crawled under, grabbed the spark, crushed it, and hauled a dark object from under the porch.

Yes, dearie, it was a bomb! No less. And, can't you just imagine how awful Mrs. Steppout would have felt to have died with her chauffeur in a scene that made him look like her social equal!

Somebody went in and told the old dame, and she came running out as fast as her tight skirts would permit, with Cora hanging on behind. When everything was explained to her she fell right on Barham's neck.

"Oh, Mr. Barham, you're wonderful, wonderful!" she cried, and burst into tears. But Barham drew off as quickly as he could, quietly, but coolly.

Just then Mr. Turner and Miss Traverse came running.

Turner took Barham by the hand, just looked him in the eyes, and said, very simply and quietly, "Barham, you're a trump!"

"Oh, just what any employee should do for his employer!" said Barham coolly.

"Employer, nothing!" exclaimed Mr. Turner, "you're going to have the finest job I can get for you in my shops, with a partnership later if you want it, that's all!"

"Emp"—gasped Miss Traverse. "Then," looking over at Mr. Turner, "you're not a mechanician?"

"Who said I wasn't?" smiled Mr. Turner, proudly. "My mother here will tell you differently—also my stepdad!"

So that was it! Mr. Turner was the owner of the car, of that fine house and of everything thereabouts.

SPARKLES FROM STAR GALAXY.

Maybe you think your favorite star knows something about bon mots, but here's real evidence that he does:

Lewis S. Stone: A man shouldn't marry before he is 30. If he doesn't know better by then this doesn't apply.

Harry Carey: A bachelor is the only man over 30 who can enjoy a moonlight picnic.

Dorothy Phillips: People who live in glass houses should rent their homes to motion-picture companies as light studios.

Mary MacLaren: The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they are as greased lightning compared with the camera on a super-production.

Monroe Salisbury: If a woman has beauty, praise her for her brains; if she has brains, praise her for her beauty; if she has both and is in the movies, run like the devil with your hand on your pocket-book.

Messrs. Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons worked this one out together: Thirst in war, thirst in peace, thirst in the throats of our countrymen.

Dorothy Gish: Laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and you'll be sued for infringing on sister Lillian.

Marie Walcamp: A rolling stone gathers no moss, but what can you do with the darned old stuff anyway?

George McDaniel: An uncovered big toe on a frosty morning has sent more men back to their wives than all the judges since Solomon.

Clyde Fillmore: The philanderer's passion and his pocket-book are boon companions.

Peggy Hyland: After all, the illiterate Russian isn't so bad off; he doesn't have to read the Ford jokes.

Bert Lytell: Laugh and you do it and get through; weep and you gotta bother with glycerine and musicians.

Carroll Dempster: Genius is highbrow for the eccentric who proves the courage of his convictions by wearing his hair long in summer.

Blanche Sweet: What with the speed demon abroad it's a long lane that has no burnings.

H. B. Warner: An elopement—the greatest test of love—like tasting a wild fruit to see if it is poisonous.

Mary Thurman: Butters-in do not come from the milk of human kindness.

Rita Stanwood: A triangle—because nobody in it is square.

Robert McKim: Villainy is a state of pocket rather than an attitude of mind.

Mary Pickford: Never borrow trouble; have it sent "C.O.D."

Bessie Love: An onion a day keeps your sweetie away.

Howard Ulrey was happily surprised Wednesday evening, the event being in honor of his birthday anniversary. In company with Mrs. Ulrey and Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Short, he had planned a night at the H. C. Dewey cabin in Live Oak Canyon. Arriving there he was the only one in the party surprised to find a group of other friends awaiting them with a chicken pie dinner ready to be served. The pleasant affair proved to be another of the enjoyable house parties which are frequent courtisies of Mr. and Mrs. Dewey who open their summer home on many occasions each year for the enjoyment of their friends. Congratulating Mr. Ulrey were Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Middleton, Mr. and Mrs. F. N. She has a host of friends, many of them in the business circles of Pomona, she having been employed for many months with the "242" Tire Service of this city and with the Russell Dry Goods Store. To best attain these ends, said Miss Reilly, the system of grades has been eliminated.

Fulmer's School.

The teaching of children and the instruction of young women who intend to take up the work of teaching other children is the beautiful work being carried on in Miss Grace Fulmer's Open-Air School, 1510 West Adams street. In the kindergarten and elementary department for boys and girls, each child is placed in the grade which will best stimulate his interest and growing power. No report cards are sent home, although parents are invited to visit the school and to keep in touch with the work being done. Most of the work is done in the open air, although there are large, well-lighted rooms for inclement weather. The aim of the department of kindergarten primary education for young women is to prepare the latter to intelligently and sympathetically direct the activities of children through their earlier years.

Marlborough School.

Housed in its new cement buildings in the Wilshire district, the Marlborough school for girls stands in four acres of its own land. There is a magnificent view of the Sierra Madre and San Bernardino Mountain ranges and, although only thirty minutes from the business center of Los Angeles, there is every opportunity for walking, horseback riding, and other delights of country life. For beauty of situation, convenience and suitability, and for opportunities for health, study and recreation, it is doubtful if this school is excelled by any similar institution of its size in the country. Established in 1889, the object of this school has always been to give to young women, who are seeking a liberal education, opportunities equal to any offered anywhere outside of the large eastern colleges. Girls are graduated in Latin, English, college preparatory and music courses and it is proposed to keep the school up to such a standard that its diploma shall be valuable. The certificate of Marlborough admits its holder, without examination, to Stanford University and the University of California.

Bishop's School.

That the moral and spiritual characteristics of the student should be developed along with purely mental attributes, is the opinion of the faculty of the Bishop's School for Girls, at La Jolla, one of the finest institutions in Southern California. "Simplicity, sincerity and serenity" is the motto of the school and this three-fold ideal is manifested in the effort of the instructors to help their pupils attain strength and poise in their physical, mental and spiritual lives. In both the lower and upper schools the pupils are given instruction from the Bible and in Christian doctrine. Special attention is also given to physical training, but for those not strong enough to take the regular gymnastic work special classes are formed. A resident nurse has charge of the general health of the pupils. Among the pleasing physical exercises are dancing, riding, tennis and basketball. It has been found necessary to rigidly supervise all books and magazines read by the girls, and parents are requested not to send reading matter. The Bishop's School was established by the Right Reverend Joseph Horsfall Johnson, D.D., S. T.D., in 1909. The first principal was Mrs. Charles E. Bentham who, following her death, was succeeded by Miss Margaret Gilman. Miss E. Virginia Scripps has given to the school several acres of land which command a fine view of the sea and hills and upon this land four of a group of buildings have been erected. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, was donated by Mrs. Joseph H. Johnson in memory of her mother. Used daily for prayer and meditation, the chapel is a visible sign of the highest life for which this school stands.

If there were more men with the spirit of Robert A. Gibbs there would be less work for the juvenile courts. Prof. Gibbs proved his intense interest in very young men when, in 1908, he founded the Page Military Academy, "The Big School for Little Boys." The aim of this institution, in brief, is to supply a thorough mental and physical training for young boys and to develop in each boy the qualities that insure true success in life. In the fall of 1915 the school moved into its new buildings on La Brea avenue, between Wilshire and Pico boulevards. These buildings, unexcelled by any others of their kind in the southland, occupy a commanding position on the highest land in the vicinity, one mile west of the new Los Angeles High School. The school owns a campus of seven acres, suitable for all sorts of outdoor games. The mild climate of the south permits Page pupils to live an outdoor life the greater part of the year and the campus, being west of the city, is constantly swept by the fresh ocean breezes. In this excellent school the descipline while firm, is very gentle. The students are so young that the problem of discipline would, in any case, be comparatively simple. When the fact is added that the school is composed of young boys sent from the best homes to avoid the rougher associations of the public schools, it is evident that punishments do not need to be severe. Good teachers rarely have occasion to punish. Rather do they command the student's respect and get him so interested in his work that he has no disposition to make trouble.

"One mistaken conception of the public," said Prof. Gibbs, "is that a military school for young boys is intended to fit them for the army and to inculcate a fighting spirit. This is an erroneous impression. The military drill is given solely for the benefit which accrues to the cadets themselves from the discipline and exercise."

Miss Abell's School.

Established in 1906, Miss Margaret Abell's School for Boys and Girls is well worthy of honorable mention among the Southland's private educational institutions, especially because of the fact that the session is continuous through the years. The school is located at 723 South Alvarado street, near lovely Westlake Park. Individual instruction is given in departments of elementary, intermediate and high school work. Only a limited number of pupils is enrolled, the principal's ideal being, not many pupils but the largest number which the faculty can consistently supervise.

Girls' Collegiate.

With the present session the Girls' College School, Adams and Hoover streets, enters upon its twenty-eighth successful year. Based upon thorough scholarship, it is the earnest wish of the principals to educate each girl to high thought and true living. The faculty believes that the future of young girls depends largely on their present environment, and every pupil comes under the direct influence of teachers carefully chosen with regard to personal character as well as scholarly attainments. The instinct for beauty is recognized as one of the strongest of forces in the formation of character and to this end the "Casa de Rosas," central building of the Girls' Collegiate School, was made one of the most artistic educational buildings in Southern California. Among the subjects taught at this school are music, art, expression, domestic arts and secretarial training. The Girls' Collegiate School is said to be the only private school in the Southland that features post-graduate work, this important branch of the school being in charge of Mrs. Edith Howe Lane.

Harvard School.

"To thine own self be true, and it must follow, as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man." A better motto than this, adopted by the Harvard Military School for Boys, it would be hard to find. The Harvard School, Sixteenth street and Western avenue, was founded in 1900 by Grenville C. Emery and Mrs. R. Emery for the purpose of educating and training the sons of those who are opposed to mixed schools in the early stages of their sons' growth, who are tired of the one-sided results of tutoring and desire a school large enough to embrace the educative influence of numbers; who are appreciative of a school surrounded by ample playgrounds and conducted chiefly by men teachers; a school self-supporting, independent, Christian, thoroughly equipped and conducted in all departments of the highest plane of educational efficiency. The aim of the school is to prepare boys to enter any institution of higher learning in the country and to give to those who intend to enter business immediately, a thorough and well-rounded secondary education. Due prominence, of course, is given to physical culture and athletics. While the Harvard School is under the auspices of the Episcopal church and, therefore, a distinctly Christian institution, religious people of any faith may send their children there and be assured that their own convictions and those of their sons will be respected. Graduates of the school are admitted to the colleges and universities that admit students upon certificates without examination, upon the recommendation of the headmaster. The headmaster and principal, Rev. Robert B. Gooden, A.M., is one of the best-known and highly-esteemed educators in the State and the following statements, made by Mr. Gooden, will give the reader a definite idea of the general manner in which the school is conducted:

"The Harvard School," said Mr. Gooden, "is conducted as much like a home, and as little like an institution as is possible for a large school. There are but few rules, and these necessary ones only. The rules are for the boys, not the boys for the rules. Boys here have the privileges they would have as members of a good Christian home. The day is filled with many activities and the students are always busy at some wholesome task or play. The life of the school touches the whole boy, his spiritual, moral, mental and physical faculties."

All attendants at Harvard School must live either with their parents or at the school, and those living at the school are required to write home every Sunday.

Two Military Schools.

The value of military schools and military training has never before been so much appreciated as within the last few months, when, without anyone wanting it, and in spite of every effort to avert it, we found ourselves participants in the greatest conflict of the ages—a conflict which, needless to say, was fought between the forces of liberty and tyranny and was won by those enlisted on the side of freedom and right. The struggle, though deplorable, was necessary; it is not impossible that some such struggle will again be necessary, and, if it should be, then those nations and individuals that are best prepared, physically, mentally and spiritually, will surely once more be victors. This, then, is the best excuse for the military school—if, in spite of such an institution's splendid training of young men for the battles of everyday life, the military school is in need of defense. It is doubtful if anywhere in America are to be found two better military preparatory schools (or, rather, school, for in spirit and management the two are practically one,) than the Pasadena Army and Navy Academy and the San Diego Army and Navy Academy. To be brief, the Pasadena academy is the junior school of the San Diego institution. Capt. Thomas A. Davis (late Sixth U.S.V. Infantry.) is president of both schools, while Charles M. Wood, B. A., is headmaster of the Pasadena school, S. W. Peterson being headmaster of the San Diego academy. The San Diego school is preparatory to West Point, Annapolis and other equally prominent institutions. The Pasadena Army and Navy Academy occupies that sixteen acres of land which formerly was the home of the Annandale Country Club. This beautiful tract, about nine miles northeast of Los Angeles, is bordered by splendid boulevards, wooded hills, vineyards and grassy slopes. A street car line from Los Angeles passes within a few feet of the main buildings. The school was first opened in 1917, the plan at first being to carry only the work corresponding to that of the third to the eighth grades of the public school. However, in the first short year, the original plan has become somewhat outgrown. In order to meet an insistent demand for a school here along the same efficient and beneficent lines as the older school at San Diego, it has been found necessary to enlarge its scope of activities for the present session so as to include the ninth and tenth grades (or first and second years of a high school course.) and it is predicted that further enlargements may occur in the near future. In connection with the school's history, it is only fair to say that its work has been made possible largely through the kindly interest and substantial generosity of those public-spirited citizens of Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Henry, who for a long time had desired to see established in the Crown City a military school for boys which would be a credit to the community and a source of gratification to parents in this section of California who do not wish to send their young sons away to school. The people of Pasadena, Los Angeles and of Southern California, generally, have been quick to respond to the opportunity thus offered, and a most gratifying patronage has been the result. While preparations have been made for instruction of advanced students, the grammar grade will at no time be curtailed or slighted. The management is convinced that there is great need for such a school as this for younger boys—a school which, while giving valuable training along military and physical lines, will yet give a far more thorough and complete scholastic training than is ordinarily possible for the crowded public schools.

Yale School.

On September 17 the Yale School, a semi-military educational institution, located at 205 North Union avenue, will start on its nineteenth prosperous year. The second oldest private school in Los Angeles, Yale has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most select schools in this city. Membership is limited to twenty-five boarding and twenty-five day pupils, and the management emphasizes every pupil receives due individual attention. Both grammar and high school departments are included in the curriculum, and the aim of the school is to fit boys for any college in the country. "The home life of Yale is its most prominent feature," said T. G. Adams, headmaster, "while another strong feature is the personal attention paid to the physical development of the boys." The high school work includes book-keeping, stenography, modern languages and manual training.

La Grange School.

Although only in its fourth year, the La Grange co-educational school, at 304 South Westlake avenue, has already begun to attract the attention of Los Angeles educators. The faculty consists of eight teachers, with Miss Margaret La Grange, well-known lecturer, as principal. Based on a solid educational foundation, one of the principal features of this school is that the cultural subjects, including music, art, dancing and domestic science are taught all pupils, from kindergarten classes up. This session the faculty has installed a high schol grade for the grammar graduates of the La Grande institution. The school site includes in ample playground and physical culture is not the least important part of the regular curriculum.

"A BIG SCHOOL FOR LITTLE BOYS."

Located on LA BREA AVENUE between WILSHIRE and PICO — LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The Fall Term Opens September 16. Again we are increasing our accommodations to take care of the enlarged attendance. Already the Largest School of its Kind in America, we are adding thirty rooms to our equipment this summer.

There is just one reason for this phenomenal growth. It is that parents are pleased with the progress their sons make while with us. When we get a boy from a new town it is only a few years before a whole colony arrives.

Below Are Some School Features Which Should Be Considered:

KIND OF SCHOOL. If your son is of grammar school age he should be with boys of his own age and not in a high school.

SCHOOL SPIRIT. Page Military Academy is thoroughly democratic; snobs are unknown. The lazy boy becomes ambitious, a desire to be helpful pervades the air. The boys are well bred. An afflicted old lady once said, "This is the only place where I do not dread to meet boys. Never once by the slightest look has a single one of your boys showed that he noticed my lameness."

THE FACULTY. Only one other school for boys pays the high salaries which will command such men as comprise our teaching force. The commandant for the coming year is Capt. G. M. Hodge, a U. S. Army officer and assistant commandant at Culver Military Academy last year.

CLASS OF PUPILS. In any school of the better class the pupils come from good families. Doubtless a larger percentage of boys at Page come from long distances to attend school than to any of the other schools for young boys. Such boys invariably belong to the best families in their respective neighborhoods. In a few cases families have removed to Los Angeles from long distances that they might be near their young son while at Page, and some mothers have brought their boys six thousand miles to receive this training and have returned home, leaving the boys in our care.

CARE OF HEALTH. Page Military Academy has had a remarkable record along this line. We did not lose a day of school on account of influenza last year. Read about this fully in our catalogue.

RELIGIOUS INFLUENCE. The school is non-sectarian. While the majority of the cadets are Protestants, there are many Catholics and Christian Scientists and some Latter Day Saints. They attend the churches of their parents' choice. The school is distinctly Christian in spirit.

FIRE PROTECTION. The buildings are of semi-fireproof construction, and are the only private school buildings in Southern California not built of wood. They were planned with special reference to safety in case of fire.

Send for our catalogue and learn all about this school and why it has become the largest of its kind in America. Address ROBERT A. GIBBS, Headmaster, Page Military Academy, R.F.D. No. 7, Box 950, Los Angeles, Cal., or phone 74216.

the Mackay College to any other school in the big chain of more than 500 institutions of the N.A. of A.C.C. F. D. Mackay, president of Mackay College, is known throughout California as one of the ablest instructors in his special line of education.

Automotive School.

"With the exception of our unexcelled climate, the National Automotive School has been the greatest factor of any institution in drawing people to Southern California." This is the boast of A. Rosenkranz, president of the National Automotive School, Eighth and Figueroa streets. This school, which was founded in 1905, claims not only to be the oldest automobile school in the United States, but the only school in the country which turns out expert automobile ignition men. "Men are coming to this school from every part of America," said Mr. Rosenkranz, "our graduation classes averaging about 2000 every year." The school teaches vulcanizing, practical engineering and machine shop work, specializing in advanced electrical work as applied to automobiles. A feature of the National Automotive School is its large tractor department, covering a ten-acre field. This department handles ten different makes of tractors and practical instruction is given concerning their manufacture and manipulation.

Urban Military Academy.

Urban Military Academy, "The Military School with the Home Life," 800 South Alvarado street, was founded in the fall of 1907, and has since become one of the most successful schools of its kind in the Southwest. Its object is to prepare boys for admission to West Point, Annapolis, St. Paul's, Groton, St. Mark's, Hotchkiss, St. Vincent's, Thatcher's and other schools of similar rank. C. C. Burnett, an educator of many years' experience, and who has been head master of the academy for the last nine years, is assisted by cultured men, college graduates and specialists in their particular lines of work. A trained nurse is in constant attendance.

"It is the earnest endeavor of this school," said Mr. Burnett, "to give that care and individual attention so necessary to the welfare and happiness of boys at this age, and to lay a foundation for education in its broadest sense, to inculcate the principles of integrity in word and deed, to teach self-reliance and to establish habits of study, punctuality and application."

The success of the head master's endeavors is evident in the personal lives of the boys which have, from year to year, been under his tutelage. Incidentally, it may be mentioned in passing that Jarvis Earl, one of the U.M.A. pupils, received an average of 86 per cent. in the last Hotchkiss School examination. The location of the academy is in the heart of the Westlake district, one of the most desirable home sections of Los Angeles, and only one block from Westlake Park. The main building contains the school offices, reception-room, dining-room and dormitories for thirty pupils. In the matter of equipment the management of the Urban Military Academy claims that no other school on the Pacific Coast is so well equipped for young boys. The highest honors the school bestows are the Head Boy Medal and the Honor Medal. The former can be won only by a resident cadet, while the Honor Medal is for the nonresident cadet standing the highest in deportment and scholarship.

"Much is made of the home life of our cadets," said Mr. Burnett. "Every boy is made to feel that the Urban Military Academy is a real home for him. Its hospitable doors are open at all times to the parents and friends of the cadets. The close and sympathetic relation between teacher and pupil contributes much toward rendering the atmosphere of the school homelike and cheerful. The laws of courtesy prevail, and every cadet is expected to conduct himself as a gentleman. The domestic arrangements are under the supervision of Miss McDonnell, and no effort is spared to render the home life and social atmosphere equal to that of the most refined home. The enviable health record since the establishment of the academy is due in no small measure to the care exercised in the selection and preparation of the food."

Woodbury Business College.

"Because of the long record of good work done in training young people for business life, Willis-Woodbury College has come to be widely known and the demand for our graduates exceeds the supply." This is the statement made recently by Stephen T. Willis, president and manager of the Willis-Woodbury College, located in the Hamburger Building. "Business men in growing numbers have come to depend upon us for their office help and send in their applications much faster than we can graduate students to fill these places," declared Mr. Willis. "Willis-Woodbury graduates do not have to accept cheap positions 'to get experience,' because our system of office training provides the experience they need for actual work. The time required to complete any course varies according to the ability and application of the student. The shorthand course requires usually six to eight months and the book-keeping course about the same length of time. The secretarial course requires about nine months. From six to eight weeks are required to master the operation of any one of the Burroughs machines. The college is in session the year round and students are invited to enter on any school day of the year."

Willis-Woodbury College is a high-grade business training school with thirty-four years of successful experience, a record of square dealing with its patrons and a prestige attaching to its diploma that is of undoubted value to its graduates. It offers thoroughly systematized, up-to-date courses of instruction and assistance in securing employment upon graduation. The instructors are experienced, efficient specialists who take a personal interest in the students. Each teacher makes a specialty of one grade, while the president, an experienced shorthand writer and accountant, supervises all instruction. The splendid office appliance department, in which the students receive a training in the use of office machinery of various kinds, is a feature of great importance. Such appliances as the Bur-

Claremont School.

Thirty-five miles east of Los Angeles is the beautiful, progressive city of Claremont, and one of the most progressive institutions of that thriving municipality is the Claremont School for Boys. The school has a forty-acre campus and a recently-installed swimming pool that is proving the delight of the students. Claremont is just far enough away from the metropolis of the Southwest to make the school term of the Los Angeles boy seem like a regular vacation, especially since the endeavor of the faculty is to make the boys enjoy themselves to the limit, both in their work and in their play. W. E. Garrison, head master of the school, is known throughout the Southland as a friend of boys and as an educator of splendid ability. Each student is given the maximum of individual attention and no labor and expense are spared in the effort to develop the students, not only physically but mentally and morally as well.

Harker School.

The Harker School for Girls at Palo Alto, established eighteen years ago, is another growing school of the great Southland worthy of mention among our educational institutions. The establishment consists of a high school and a lower school and the special branches of learning taught are French, music and economics. For full information regarding the various courses taught, tuition and other matters, the prospective student should communicate with Miss Catherine Harker, Palo Alto, Cal.

Payne's Dancing Academy.

Of all the institutions in Los Angeles in which the Terpsichorean art is taught, perhaps none is so well known and patronized as Payne's Dancing Academy at 2018 Orange street, near Westlake Park. The school, which is six years old, is now in session, although Lillian M. Payne, the manager, is at present in New York gathering new ideas in the interest of her school. At Payne's Academy dancing in all its forms is taught, including esthetic, ballroom, toe dancing, the ballet and other theatrical work. A special instructor is provided for each department. Connected with the school is a private kindergarten in which dancing and regular school work are happily combined.

L. A. Military Academy.

The Los Angeles Military Academy, founded twenty-four years ago this summer, is well deserving of a word of praise as an institution that has played its good part in the physical development, mental and moral education of the youth of Los Angeles. Many of the boys who have attended this academy within the last quarter of a century have now reached manhood's years and are a credit to both the school and to the city in which they live. The academy is located at 4800 Huntington drive, near El Sereno, and the artistic, homelike buildings and cultured surroundings give the school the environment necessary for the proper training and development of boys.

Sawyer School.

The Sawyer School of Secretaries, "the school of personality," located at 410 Baker-Detwiler Building and conducted under the able direction of Miss Frances Jackling and her associate, Miss Camille Giffen, stands alone in Los Angeles as a private school of distinction for business and secretarial training. It has grown from the demand for trained assistants who are thoroughly prepared, accurate and, by natural instinct, tactful. Every successful man or woman has, at some time in his or her life, served an apprenticeship as a private secretary. The idea no longer obtains that a man or woman must begin a business career in a humble position, but the realization has come that it is essential for every one to be trained along a given line of work. Any well-trained secretary can always command a position of opportunity and worth-while salary. The faculty of the Sawyer School is composed of men and women who have been academically equipped for their positions, who have had actual experience in their work and who possess the ability to instruct all types of students.

Modern Business College.

Evidence of the value of the training given at the Modern Business College is to be noted in the fact that scores of young men and women have recently been sent from this school to take up government work in Washington. The Modern Business College, in the Metropolitan Building, was founded four years ago, by Prof. C. A. Grommet, who is still head of the school and who specializes in civil service preparatory, secretarial work and reporting. Having engaged in the business of court reporting for eighteen years, Prof. Grommet is an efficient instructer in that special line.

Holman Business College.

When a man founds a private institution of learning and, through nineteen successive and successful years, remains its manager and chief inspiration, his school is worthy of the consideration of any young man or woman who is seeking, through the gateway of knowledge, a path to success. Such a man and such a school are D. L. Hollman and the Hollman Business College, 631 South Spring street, the school occupying

MUSICAL.

IMPETUS IS FELT.

ORCHESTRAL PROJECTS EXERT GENERAL EFFECT.

A symphony orchestra of magnitude always brings in its wake impetus to smaller musical organizations throughout a city, and also arouses interest in individual executants. A city without a symphony orchestra is usually dead musically; on the other hand no sooner does an orchestra appear upon the horizon than chamber music takes a stride and frequently an opera organization or a chorus springs into being.

Approaching Events.

On the 25th inst. Christine Langenhan is to sing, and she announces a trio to be played by May MacDonald Hope, Robert Alter and Ilya Rosenfeld, which will make of the concert an elaborate performance. The Rachmaninoff Trio will probably be chosen.

Charles Wakefield Cadman has in prospect the concert co-operation of John Smallman, baritone, who is sufficiently popular to be a successful musical aide de camp to the favorite composer. It is probable that Anna Rusena Sprotte, contralto, will concertize with Gertrude Ross, composer-pianist, in the fall. Mr. Ross was a piano student with Walter Swain during his stay here in the winter, and she will accompany Mme. Sprotte, who has done much to make the Ross songs popular.

Improving Stage for Symphony.

Sparks Berry, manager of the Los Angeles Symphony Association, yesterday announced that the stage of Clune's Auditorium, where the symphony concerts will be played this coming season, is being remodeled and will be made to duplicate the stage of the Boston Symphony Association, the most famous in the country. A new sounding board will be installed and all mechanical effects are to be as nearly as possible like the arrangements of the Boston organization.

The platform of the stage is to be raised and so filled out that every musician in the orchestra will be visible to the leader and to the audience.

Adolph Tandler, leader of the orchestra, will return from New York within a few weeks, to begin rehearsals for the initial concerts of the season. Mr. Tandler is selecting the newest symphonic music in the New York market and will bring selections back with him for the Los Angeles concerts.

Rothwell Interviews Complimentary.

Walter Henry Rothwell, the newly-chosen conductor for the new Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, is giving the highest praise to the personnel of the organization. In his interviews in San Francisco, Denver, Salt Lake and Chicago, he speaks in the most complimentary terms of the talent available in Los Angeles.

Lillian Payne, local dancing instructor, who is making a tour of the East for purposes of study.

Since his departure Christiaan Timmner, the well-known Dutch violinist, has been engaged to lead the viola section of the Philharmonic. With Timmner in this capacity, Jay Plowe as leading flutist; Julius Bierlich, former concertmaster of the Los Angeles Symphony and now second concertmaster of the Philharmonic; Earl Bright, 'cellist of the Minneapolis; Alfred Wallenstein, recently with the Pavlowa company and previously with the San Francisco Symphony; Young Leo Godowsky, son of the gifted pianist, and last year also a member of the San Francisco organization, not to mention the acquisitions which are to be made, of equally superior musicianship represented in the other sections of the Philharmonic, the organization promises indeed to be the equal of any eastern symphony.

The first soloist will be Rudolph Ganz, who, this season will also be heard with the Boston, New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia and Chicago orchestras. He will play two concertos, the A Major and the E Flat of Liszt.

For the first, Mr. Ganz will play personally; for the second, he will conduct the orchestra, while the reproduction will be heard on the [illegible]-Duo Art.

This innovation was inaugurated two years ago by the San Francisco Symphony, with a Harold Bauer reproduction. The day the production was heard in the northern city, Mr. Bauer was playing the same concerto with the New York Symphony. In this instance, Ganz will be present.

Meeker Returns from East.

E. E. Meeker, baritone of this city, has recently returned from a year in Denver, and will take up his duties as soloist and director of the Boyle Heights Methodist Church with a chorus of thirty voices. Mr. Meeker spent six weeks coaching with Percy Rector Stephens, who baritone of this returned from and will take up soloist and director of Methodist Church of thirty voices. spent six weeks coach- Rector Stephens, who has attained nation-wide eminence in vocal teaching. Mr. Stephens conducted a summer course in Denver this summer. During Mr. Meeker's stay in Denver he was engaged as baritone soloist in the Trinity Methodist Church, one of the largest in that city.

He is enthusiastic over his course with Stephens, whose methods are modern and convincing, and whose manner of explaining theories is simple and direct. Also Mr. Meeker attended a course of musical history under Deems Taylor, New York composer.

While in Salt Lake, en route home, Mr. Meeker gave two programmes, and was engaged for further work there in the near future.

As director of the Boyle Heights Church Mr. Meeker will conduct a chorus of thirty voices and attempt pretentious productions with his choir. He has also resumed teaching at his studio.

Ornstein to Tour.

M. H. Hanson, the energetic and capable manager of Leo Ornstein, brilliant composer-pianist, to be heard here this season, announces that Mr. Ornstein will positively tour America during the forthcoming season, all reports to the contrary. Rumor has been rampant that this unusual artist was to appear on the continent in 1919-20, but inasmuch as his entire time for the months between October and May is filled on this side, between orchestral and recital engagements, the European tour is out of the question. He will be one of the early soloists with the Philharmonic Orchestra and later on the Philharmonic courses.

Sousa's War Experience.

Now that the tumult and the shouting have died down and the country is once more becoming accustomed to the ways of peace it is possible to tell something concerning the unusual services rendered the United States government during the period of hostilities by Lieut. John Philip Sousa, band leader and composer. He has just been placed on the inactive list of the United States Navy and has already planned the cross-country tours which he abandoned in 1915 when he contracted to become part of one of the big spectacles presented at the New York Hippodrome.

Lieut. Sousa spent nearly two years in the service of the government. He was commissioned early in May, 1917, shortly after the declaration of war and was assigned to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station near Chicago, where he was placed in charge of the work of organizing the bands.

No less than 1000 musicians were under constant training under his direction. These were divided into groups of 250 and Lieut. Sousa devoted a portion of each day to the drilling of these great bands. On special occasions he brought the entire 1000 bandsmen together in a single group and personally conducted what was unquestionably the largest band that ever played together in the recorded history of civilization.

QUINTETTE AT ALHAMBRA.

A novel musical attraction has just been secured as a permanent feature of the Alhambra Theater, and will be inaugurated Sunday when Tom Moore's latest Goldwyn comedy-drama, "One of the Finest," opens a week's stay. It is to be called the Alhambra Quintette as it is made up of five accomplished musicians, all young girls, headed by Miss Helenka Schiller, well-known Bohemian violinist, who has just completed a three-year tour over one of the big vaudeville circuits. It is the intention of the management to have this quintette not only accompany the big photoplays at both the afternoon and evening performances, but also to use them for specialty numbers from time to time as every one of the young ladies is an accomplished soloist.

SENSITIVE ABOUT AGE.

Filmlands Child Wonder Hides Birthday Candles.

Clara Horton, the grown-up child of pictureland who is playing Youth in the Lasky production of "Everywoman" recently was hostess and honor guest, all in one, at a birthday party. It was her very own, for it was her birthday. When the huge cake was brought in, candles were burning brightly on the top.

It was there that the child actress proved that she is a woman grown. She pounced on the cake, plucked of the candles before any one could note the number, and hid them.

"My age must be a secret," she explained. And a secret it shall be, except that there are certain well-defined rumors that it was her seventeenth birthday.

ROMAYNE SIGNS UP NEW PEOPLE.

H. Y. Romayne, president of the Romayne Superfilm Company of this city, announces that he has signed a contract with "Bumps" Adams, the well-known vaudeville clown. After successfully touring the United States several times on the vaudeville stage, Mr. Adams made his debut in motion pictures with Toto, another noted clown. Mr. Adams's vaudeville act may be recalled by his famous back fall from a chair sitting upon four tables, this, he also does in his first production, "The Fourteenth Chair."

Marian Dunlap, who has appeared in the Romayne comedies, has been selected to play opposite Mr. Adams, and Fred Jefferson is to direct.

Commencing September 1, the Romayne Superfilm Company will have three comedy companies producing.

Johnny Hayes, formerly production manager of the Florida Photoplay Company and recently with Max Linder and Marie Dressler, will have personal supervision over all the Romayne comedies in the future. Mr. Hayes expects to produce four one-reel and two two-reel comedies each month.

AUSTRALIAN IN WESTERNS.

Frank Braidwood, Australian actor who toured the Far East with Cyril Maude, has been engaged by Universal to support Marie Walcamp in her two-reel western melodramas. "Tempest Cody's Expose" is the title of the first picture in which he will appear. Braidwood will be remembered as having played one of the brothers in Allen Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity."

OPERA OF THE FUTURE.

BY JEANNE REDMAN.

Of late years there has been much criticism of the opera, per se, and perhaps justly, but like most criticisms, the critics have merely picked faults in the fabric and have offered no constructive suggestions for their remedy. To say simply that a form of composition is stupid and without value, which has stood the test of generations, as has the opera, is to try to wipe away, with one flourish, the accrued taste of millions of people and is, in itself, the limit of stupidity. Such things, which amuse, interest, instruct and form the taste of such a vast number of music lovers, must of a necessity have a fundamental value as art, for there are no mushroom growths on taste which last over a decade.

The fault lies, I believe, in the monotony of the operas, the subjugation of the music to literature, the subjecting of the whole to the personality of some singer or actor, the hackneyed quality of the scenes, the remoteness of the theme from the life of today, and the soft and invalid, the bathetic and vapid quality of the tunes with which it is interspersed. Besides, there is the monotony of foreign scenes and the regular costumes of the property room—Japanese kimonos, velvet Tam o' Shanters, brigands' sashes and bandanas, knee-trousers, flowing robes and togas—all of which have come only to mean the ridiculous to the man of modern emotions. The literature of such productions, combining as it does all the wild errors of the melodrama, the sentimental slush of the "ten-twent-thirt" shows is nevertheless that core of the opera's being around which the music is made to cling like a barnacle to a wharf, as closely as the genius of the musician can glue it, without ever making the audience feel the organic quality that all art-reactions demand. Even these separated parts are then presented to throw off one or two voices in a way that gives advantage to the voices but the coup de grace to the piece as a work of art, either on the part of the author or the composer.

OPERATIC NONSENSE.

After all, these voices could be heard to even greater advantage on the concert stage, so why spoil their effect in some part, when it means a total destruction of the music and the play. Furthermore, would anyone go to a play today where brigands came out, threw one leg over a table, while their cronies drew about them to hear them recite some utterly nonsensical drinking-song, while the chorus, filled with a look of surprise and attention to the last, broke in for several words of each stanza? I doubt it.

The mind of the man of our time is perhaps still as romantically inclined as previously, but he finds romance about his daily metropolitan life, and he knows that turbaned pirates saber-bearing cutthroats and spear-carrying men in armor do not abduct princesses in Chicago, London or Paris. Naturally he has only a smile for the memories of this nursery lore.

The opera of the future must be constructed by the minds which live about us and that take part in our daily life. It can no longer be laid among the hills of Spain or Italy, or the temples of Egypt. Its music must be music that can, by its virility and modernity, not only intrigue its first hearers and interest them, but it must be intense enough to set them thinking. It cannot be long-drawn out with only occasional flashes here and there to make us awake and sit up, but its very being must be instinct with the flying machine, automobile, paper presses and the vast noise and hurry of modern machines, for the noise of these machines, the rapidity of their actions, the immensely increased speed of locomotion have more to do than is commonly recognized with our tastes and desires and modes of life.

Where one person goes to "Aida," "Samson and Delilah" and "La Boheme" to see a fairy story wholly unrelated to his life or beliefs, there would be ten attending a theater where opera in which he could see himself and recognize his problems was being given. New York cannot support two operahouses; a city of 8,000,000, but count the theaters where modern plays are presented!

The theater is gaining in popularity in comparison with the opera because it is primarily modern. Secondarily it is more artistic because one mind produces its book, and such as it is, it is an ensemble of individuality. Its method of creation is what the artist calls "a unique gesture." This unique gesture must be followed out in the opera.

The composer must write the book in which he deals with everyday actions in drama. The actors and singers must be forced to realize that they are the conductors—in electrical parlance—which stand between the composer and the public; the ability personified, if you wish to read musical phrases. There will have to be many prides hurt, for the second-rate actors' vanities can spoil the best plays by their insistence on themselves.

There will have to be much of the ordinary talking voice, for this will give the audience a rest from the trills of the stars as well as a different variety of sounds, thus doing away with the almost unbearable monotony of two and a half hours of similar musical motives by the sound of the orchestra.

INTENSITY DESIRABLE.

We take our pleasures today in small and intense doses, hence our boredom of such a long period of musical reiteration. Let us not forget that the three-deck novel has disappeared for this very reason. Another great advance to be made is that of the sets. They must, absolutely must, be more decorative than realistic and they must change the light and color with the change of the opera's theme.

Gordon Craig has forseen the imperative necessity of this decorative background as well as the actors' incorporation into the play, but he has left a blank field for the changes of scene as the play progresses, and the importance of colored lights to enhance the emotional effect of the music.

The opera of the future will not be the simple musical illustration of a childish play that it has been heretofore, for the composer will have to know color and drama as well as music and he will have to be artist enough to conceive these three elements at one and the same time. Lacking these changes, these new-blood infusions, opera will die of inanition.

NAZIMOVA'S SALARY.

'Twas Small Stipend in Old Days in Russia.

Odd as it may seem, all screen stars are not suddenly discovered, pounced upon by an admiring manager and immediately besought to sign a life contract at a fabulous salary. Nazimova, the great Russian actress, now starring in "The Brat," which is to have its prerelease at the California Theater, Monday, receives a salary that would make a bank president envious. But according to her own statement, Nazimova began her great stage career by accepting an engagement for a season at a salary of $50 per month.

The tired business men of New York, who roll up the covers of their desks at 9 o'clock in the morning, spend from 1 to 3 in the afternoon at luncheon and call it a day's work at 4:45 really don't deserve the sympathy afforded by their wives and the producers of musical comedies.

Suppose they had worked as hard as Nasimova did when she began her stage career at the above figure. Her premier engagement was up in a town in the north of Russia, not far from the White Sea. She stayed there nearly a year, appearing each night in a new play. She had seen none of these plays before, and so had to learn a part every day, besides keeping in mind the one she was to enact that evening. During one season she played more than 300 parts.

UNIVERSAL HAS FLEET OF WATER JITNEYS.

A fleet of motor boats, as well as a squadron of motor cars, is now maintained by Universal to take players to and from location. Not that Universal City has suddenly become an island shut off by an ocean from the Hollywood mainland, but because Universal is sending so many companies on location in the San Bernardino mountains lake regions, the favorite haunt of directors making out-of-door productions.

Recently when Douglas Gerrard was producing "The Divorced Wife," with Monroe Salisbury, in the Bear Lake region of California, he found that he could save two hours' time each day by cutting across the lake instead of following the auto road around.

Every hour in the making of a picture means hundreds of dollars, so Gerrard tried to rent the necessary motor boats.

There was nothing doing, as the boatmen were making big profits at the mountain resorts. Undaunted, he bought them outright and wired to Carl Laemmle for his approval, and the check necessary to complete the transaction.

President Laemmle approved and the deal was closed, with the result that now Universal maintains its own fleet of high-powered maritime jitney busses ever ready to take companies on mountain location.

SINGS AT GAMUT CLUB.

Helen Brown Read was appreciatively received in her rendition of the Micaela's Song from "Carmen," and the "Doe-Skin Blanket," by Cadman, which she sang at the meeting of the Gamut Club, recently. Her voice possesses excellent range and quality, and she uses it with taste.

VACATION IN YELLOWSTONE.

POST HASTE.

The village of Muddleton was in a state of intense excitement. It now boasted a new fire engine, and the captain of the fire brigade was showing a visitor the latest acquisition to the village.

The engine resembled nothing so much as a street roast, potato oven and a village pump, with a bit of gas pipe thrown in.

Apparently the visitor was much impressed and surprised—perhaps the latter feeling predominated—and made a thorough examination of the fire station.

"But you don't seem to have either telephone or telegraph in the village," said the visitor, doubtfully. "How do you summon them in case of a fire?"

"Oh, that's simple enough, sir," replied the captain, with evident satisfaction; "we just sends 'em a postal card."—[Des Moines Capital.

John A. Van Pelt,

Formerly head of conservatory in State of Washington, who regards Los Angeles as city of musical opportunity, and has therefore settled here.

ARMY LIFE HELPED CAUSE OF MUSIC

CONSERVATORY HEAD FINDS BENEFIT DERIVED FROM TRAINING.

That army life did a vast service to the cause of music by stimulating the interest of the men of the country in singing is the belief of John A. Van Pelt, formerly president of the Bellingham Conservatory of Music, who having sold his interest in the institution, has come to Los Angeles to engage in recital work and instruction in dramatic and vocal studies. He is accompanied by his wife, who is a pianiste and organist.

Mr. Van Pelt spent a year in the army, having been commissioned a second lieutenant at the Central Officers' Training School at Camp Grant, Illinois. During his service he took an active interest in musical training of the soldiers, which through encouragement given by the government, was conducted in a systematic manner at the camp. The men were marched in formation to the assembly halls, and were trained in the singing of favorite musical numbers and national airs.

Mr. Van Pelt says that since he was mustered out of the service, many inquiries have come to him from returned soldiers who are anxious to pursue musical studies, especially voice, as a result of the interest awakened through their choral singing in the camps.

Mr. Van Pelt is an American trained musician. He took the musical course at the Northwestern University, graduating from the School of Music. His wife attended the same institution of learning. During the time spent at the university, he assisted in the teaching of music. After his graduation he devoted his attention to lyceum and Chautauqua work. He purchased the Bellingham Conservatory some five years ago, disposing of it just before coming to California to H. Goodell Boucher, a musician of Georgia.

Mr. Van Pelt regards the opportunities in Los Angeles as far away the best on the Pacific Coast. He believes the teacher in particular has an excellent field here. During the fall, he intends to give recitals with his wife assisting at the piano.

French are "Close" Traders.

David Harum wouldn't have a ghost of a show in a horse trade with a Frenchman, according to Col. M. C. Bristol of the American cavalry, who carried on the negotiations for selling 196,000 horses belonging to the army to the French government. Animals that the government bought for $400 from the French during the war are now being sold back for $250, Col. Bristol said, but he added that, of course, the Americans had their use during the war.

"We went to the French government with a proposition to sell them all our horses," said Col. Bristol, in telling of his experience. "We were told that about 6000 animals were all they could take. Then we opened negotiations with German civilians in occupied areas and were selling a few when the French government heard about it. It didn't take them long to snap up the whole lot at a higher price than we could have received before, and higher than the Germans were paying us."—[Philadelphia Ledger.

Egan School
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCING

Takes pleasure in presenting No. 16 of the series of successful students.

Miss Maryon Vadie, a Los Angeles girl, started her professional career after a course in the Egan School and dancing in Mr. Egan's production, "Wan o' the Wood." Miss Vadie was engaged to head a dancing act on the Orpheum circuit three years ago and is still traveling over Big Time as a feature act in Vaudeville.

The Egan School can present no less than 100 students whose names are known to the public, through their stage or screen prominence. While we are aware it is not wise to boast of past successes too freely, our object in publishing this series of pictures is the hope it might interest those who contemplate a career, and are undecided where to begin, or need encouragement to begin.

The Egan School has been established twenty years under the personal direction of Frank Egan. It now represents an investment of $250,000, having its own class A building, operating its own theater, numerous private studios, ballroom, and is beautifully furnished throughout.

The present faculty of well-known artists is the best and most congenial Mr. Egan has ever been fortunate enough to secure, embracing such well-known names as Roland Paul, Homer Grunn, Oscar Seiling, Marshal Stedman, Mlle. Prager, Lester Grauweiler, Gwendolyn Logan Hubbard, Bertha Winslow Vaughn and Winifred Hooke.

the entire fifth floor of the Realty Board Building. The pride of the Hollman Business College lies in the personnel of its faculty and it is to the faculty that Mr. Hollman attributes the success of the school. "The staff of teachers in our school," said Mr. Hollman, "has been carefully selected with a view to their experience, training and efficiency until, through the years, the management has succeeded in building up a corps of business training instructors that bring to the Hollman students the very best in the knowledge of subjects taught, in the methods of imparting instruction and in the thoroughness with which habits of accuracy, energy, loyalty and thoughtfulness are inculcated. It is to this policy that the Hollman college owes its great prestige and its present position as one of the largest and best business schools in Los Angeles." The faculty is composed of the following men and women: D. L. Hollman, manager; C. E. Cargill, principal; Miss Agatha Mockenhaupt, secretary; Misses Delia Kennard, Esther L. Lucas, Hulda Isaac, Effie Riley, Alice Mulcahy and Mrs. Henrietta Abrams.

The Hollman Business College aims at thoroughness of work rather than to have the greatest number of pupils. The rooms are cheerful, well ventilated and lighted, having been especially arranged for school purposes. The success and popularity of the school proves that it meets the wants of the business community. This school trains the student for entrance into the business world and for government civil service examination—this is its field of work.

"Our ideal," said Mr. Hollman, "is to educate men and women as individual units in the business management and control of their property, in order that their acts may be valid; to educate them in respect to their legal rights and liabilities and in the matter of their enforcement; in safeguarding their interests against unjust losses and imposters and in enlarging their scope of vision in all business affairs."

Commerce Training School.

The Commercial Experts' Training School, of which Mrs. Marie P. Brownlee is superintendent, is on the seventh floor of the Grosse Building, far above the noise and dust of the street. The slogan of this establishment is "The school of intensive training," and the courses in secretarial, stenographic, bookkeeping, civil service, commercial law and commercial Spanish include both theory and practice work. The actual teaching combines both class and individual instruction, the one stimulating to greater activity, the other bringing the teacher into close personal contact with the student. Every student is developed into a practical worker, an unusually high percentage are made expert workers and then placed, by the school, in the positions for which they have been prepared. Practically every one who completes a course secures a position through the school vocational bureau.

Chiropractic College.

In their search for the cure of physical and mental diseases, are the American people gradually getting away from the use of drugs? A great many Americans think so and the evidence is to be found in the various drugless schools of healing that are being established all over the country. In Los Angeles there is at least one such institution and its name is the American Chiropractic Drugless College, at Washington and Figueroa streets. "The clinic," declares the faculty, "is for the purpose of the construction of normal physical functions, the attendants being taught how to cure and throw off disease by creating greater resistance." Each teacher is said to be a specialist in his particular line, and five courses are taught, these being chiropractic, philosophy of chiropractic, post-graduate, drugless and practical nurse course.

Brownsberger College.

"The scheme of life consists in delivering things from where they are to where they are wanted. We are all delivering something, and if we could only impress upon the mind of each individual the importance of being able to deliver something worth while, what an advantage it would be to the individual and to all society." This shining bit of philosophy gives the reader a little insight into the character of its author, W. H. H. Garver, who for twenty years was teacher, principal, vice-president and assistant manager of the Brown chain of business colleges in four eastern States and who for the last six years has been president and manager of the California-Brownsberger Commercial College, 625 South Hope street. This is the only business college on the Pacific Coast that occupies an entire building with 20,000 square feet of floor space devoted exclusively to educational work. The faculty is composed of specially trained men and women and the school specializes in business training. For full particulars concerning the courses given in this splendid school, the reader should write to Prof. Garver for "The Victory Year Book," one of the neatest and most fascinating school catalogues of the year.

Egan School.

Indorsed and patronized by Oliver Morosco, John Cort, Edgar Selwyn, James K. Hackett, Thomas Ince, Jesse Lasky, David Wark Griffith, Holbrook Blinn, Marjorie Rambeau, Laurette Taylor and thousands of producers and managers throughout the United States, the Egan School of Music, Dancing and Drama, established in 1900, is today recognized as one of the most efficient theatrical institutions in America. The Egan School, located on Figueroa, near Pico street, has for its president Frank E. Egan, one of the best known promoters of dramatic art. Under his able tuition stage aspirants from all parts of the country have been molded into finished artists and more than 300 of his graduates now hold lucrative positions upon the operatic and dramatic stage. It is the boast of the Egan School that it stages more genuine dramatic performances than any other recognized school of drama. It has a thoroughly equipped class "A" school building (including the Little Theater) covering an investment of more than $200,000 with the added attraction of the school campus, directly across the street, which covers a space of 186x400 feet. Special attention is devoted to the children's class which meets every Saturday morning at 10 o'clock and every Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Mr. Egan, who has given much time and study to the needs of children, declares that it is the duty of every parent to give the child every possible advantage in the training of mind, voice and body.

Westlake School for Boys.

"We can't polish a brickbat nor manufacture gray matter, but if a boy has backbone and a reasonable amount of brains we can get him ready for the great government academies at Annapolis and West Point." That is the statement recently made by Prof. Holman Gardner, founder of the Westlake School for Boys, an institution which, established two years ago, at 612 South Alvarado street, is fast "making good" with, and for the boys of Los Angeles. Last year the school enrolled fifty pupils and this term is expected to break that record by a good majority. The history of the Westlake School for Boys is the old story of a man having an idea and pushing that idea forward, relentlessly and successfully. Feeling that there was need for a high-class preparatory school for boys and young men in Los Angeles, Mr. Gardner, a teacher of wide experience and executive ability, who for several years was head of a prominent eastern school, decided to establish the Westlake School for Boys along lines entirely different from those of the ordinary boys' school. Mr. Gardner attributes his success to two factors: hard work and more hard work. The beautiful location of this school, which is near Westlake Park, commends it to many patrons. With five trolley lines near the school, it is easily accessible to all parts of Los Angeles.

L. A. College of Chiropractic.

Evidently Harry Ellington Brook is not the only student of pathology in Los Angeles who believes in drugless healing. One of the chief exponents of the art of curing disease without the use of medicine is Dr. Charles A. Cale, president of the Los Angeles College of Chiropractic, 931 South Hill street. "In the Los Angeles College of Chiropractic we teach only specific, pure, unalloyed chiropractic," said Dr. Cale. "Each student is furnished enough patients so that he gives 500 adjustments before he is awarded a diploma. At the same time we also make our graduates able to diagnose and we make them proficient in the use of all natural agencies such as water, food, heat, electricity and manual and mechanical means and manipulations."

Y.M.C.A. School.

William H. Wallace, executive secretary of the Y.M.C.A., yesterday announced that Capt. Roscoe A. Goodcell, who lately has been attached to the office of Chief of Staff at Washington, will return to Los Angeles in September to take up his work as educational director of the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A., filling the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. A. Gillaspie. Capt. Goodcell is a graduate of the University of California, and has spent three years as an instructor in the public schools of China. Capt. Goodcell will complete the reorganization of the educational department of the Y.M.C.A., in preparation for what is expected to be the largest enrollment the association has enjoyed for a number of years. As soon as the period of demobilization began, the Y.M.C.A. offered half rates to returned service men, with the result that several hundred have been enrolled in the various business, trade and technical schools of the association. The automobile school of the association has had its largest influx of students from among enlisted men. Wide-spread interest is also being manifested in the vocational courses offered. In regard to the wireless school, Prof. McKinnon stated that during the last year 195 young men were graduated from this department, and that all of them are now employed at unusually large salaries. Similar opportunities have opened in many other lines, including accountancy, advertising, salesmanship, mining and commercial courses. Druing the coming year, Principal Bruce Boggs will have charge of the commercial school, assisted by E. E. Dickson and F. B. Bowley. Accountancy courses will be under direction of I. C. Louis, assisted by R. E. Blewett, W. M. Pargellis and W. B. Thompson.

St. Agnes School.

"All outdoor work and all teaching conducted along psychological lines." These are two of the prominent features of the St. Agnes School for Girls, 642 West Eighth street, of which Mrs. Mark Rice is principal. The lower school includes eight grades of grammar school work, with French, elementary drawing, penmanship, physical training, chorus singing and social etiquette. The curriculum of the upper school and college preparatory includes the regular high school course, with the special subjects mentioned above. The college preparatory more than meets the requirements. The music school consists of graded work, musical history and harmony. In the kindergarten school boys are admitted to the day classes. One hour each week is given over to physical training, which includes dancing. Only a limited number of resident students are accepted, and the greatest attention is given to their welfare and deportment.

McAdam School of Dancing.

A new and unusual system of instruction in the terpsichorean art is one of the principal features of Miss McAdam's Normal School of Dancing, located in Blanchard Hall, and under the direction of L. E. Behymer. The method referred to consists of scientific charts, which reveal in color and line a complete analysis of each dance to be performed. In this way the pupil is given a clear mental picture of the required steps before being called upon to execute them. To this ideal of visualization Miss McAdam attributes no little of her success with scores of her graduates, who have become famous in the professional field, many of whom are prominent in the local cinema world. Miss McAdam, who was formerly with the Russian Ballet School and the Duryea Normal, and who is a graduate of the Castle Normal School of New York City, takes pride in the fact that her school is the only normal school of dancing on the Pacific Coast. Her work among very young children and older pupils, who range in age from 15 to 75 years, covers a remarkably broad field. Aside from the art of dancing, great attention is given to deportment, namely entree, exit, seating, rising, walking, salutations, introductions, etc. It is the purpose of the McAdam School to acquaint its students with the underlying principles of dancing, these being music, time, rhythm, positions and figures. Miss McAdam arranges special courses for high school students and for colleges, lodges, hotels, churches, military academies and other organizations. That the science and art of dancing are closely connected, not only with physical health, but with mental and moral well-being, is the firm conviction of the principal of the McAdam School, and no effort is spared to develop in the student every noble trait inherent in all normal characters.

University of Southern California.

The University of Southern California is too well known, not only in this State, but throughout the United States, to require either introduction or advertisement. This great college was founded exactly forty years ago in response to a general feeling that the interests of Christian education demanded the establishment of such an institution. On July 29, 1879, the original deed of trust was executed by Ozro W. Childs, Isaias W. Hellman and John G. Downey, donors, to A. M. Hough, J. P. Widney, E. F. Spence, M. M. Bovard, G. D. Compton and R. M. Widney as trustees. Beginning its career in an humble way, the University of Southern California, because of the ideals upon which it was established and upon which it has ever been maintained, has risen to an enviable position among the great schools of America. Los Angeles is the metropolis of Southern California. Its population of more than half a million people represents every State in the Union and many foreign lands. Its importance as a political, business, industrial and art center gives the students of the university unusual opportunities for observation and investigation along many lines, cultural and professional. Not the least factor in the success of the university has been the climate of the Southland, and history proves that the world's greatest schools have ever been established and longest maintained in those countries in which the elements of nature are most kind. The president of the university is George Finley Bovard, A. M., D. D., LL.D., whose interest in the college and in the success of its students is too well

ONTARIO.

Galabrae, the beautiful ranch home of Mr. and Mrs. George G. Laidlaw in West A street, furnished the setting for a lovely garden wedding, Thursday evening, just at twilight, when their only daughter, Miss Katherin Gray Laidlaw, became the bride of Hobart Romig Alter. The garden had been transformed into a veritable bower of beauty for the occasion and the spacious lawn, where 150 guests were seated for the ceremony, was inclosed in a great screen of fernery and blossoms. Just before the nuptials, Mrs. Louella Seapy, lyric soprano, sang a group of four songs, accompanied by Miss Ala Claire Ballou, who also rendered the "Wedding March" from "Lohengrin," while members of the bridal party took their places beneath a bower of fernery, from which was suspended a great wedding bell of pink Enchantress carnations and hanging baskets of the same blossoms. Strewing fragrant rose petals in her wake, little Miss Harriet Reeder of Pasadena, as flower girl, led the procession. Miss Gertrude Hoar of Azusa, college chum of the bride at Pomona College, as maid of honor, wore a pink gown of pink georgette crepe with large pink hat and carried pink rosebuds and asparagus plumosis fern. As bridesmaid, Miss Mabel Hillman, a cousin of the bride, was attired in pale green satin and wore a pink picture hat. She carried pink rosebuds. The bride approached the improvised altar on the arm of her father, who gave her away. She was gowned in creamy white satin, made in draped effect, and trimmed with pearl and irridescent beads. The veil of tulle was caught to the coiffure with pearls and orange blossoms, and the bride's bouquet was a shower of bride's roses and maidenhair fern. Harry Alter attended his brother as best man, and the Rev. Clifford Nott Hand, member of the Pomona College faculty, was the officiant. The ceremony was followed by a reception and elaborate wedding supper, after which Mr. and Mrs. Alter left for a motor honeymoon to Lake Tahoe. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and costly gifts, including a motor car from her father and a ten-acre orange grove from the father of the bridegroom, former Mayor E. R. Alter. After September 15, Mr. and Mrs. Alter will be at home at 425 West A street.

Before a group of some forty admiring relatives and friends, Miss Elizabeth Hayden Taylor and Ralph Rutledge Howell were united in marriage, Wednesday evening, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson Taylor, 419 West E street. The Rev. Lorenzo Dow Van Arnum, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, officiated. Huge hydrangeas and asparagus fern adorned the house and the attractive garden was lighted by myriad incandescent electric light bulbs, Japanese lantern-shaded. The approach of the bridal party was heralded by the strains of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," with Miss Mary Van Wie at the piano. Preceding the bride, who entered on the arm of her father, were her two little nieces, Ruth Elizabeth Reid and Marjorie Taylor, as flower girls. Miss Taylor wore a gown of embroidered net with a tulle veil, caught with pearls and carried a shower bouquet of Cecil Brunner buds and maidenhair fern. During the ceremony Miss Van Wie played the "Traumerei" softly on the piano. An informal reception and collation followed the ceremony, and assisting with the serving were Miss Margaret Swan, Miss Bessie Sheppard, Miss Helen Harding, Miss Ruth Ledig, Miss Marjorie Harris and Miss Ida Hubbell. The bride's going-away gown was a blue crepe silk sport suit with white silk sport hat. Mr. and Mrs. Howell left after the reception for their honeymoon, which will include a motor trip to San Francisco and Yosemite Valley. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick J. Is Your Blood Starving For Want of Iron?

Modern Methods of Cooking and Living Have Made an Alarming Increase in Iron Deficiency in Blood of American Men and Women

Why Nuxated Iron so Quickly Builds Up Weak, Nervous, Run-down Folks—Over 3,000,000 People Annually Taking It in This Country Alone to Increase Their Strength, Power, Energy and Endurance.

"Is your blood starving for want of iron? If you were to go without eating until you became weak, thin and emaciated, you could not do a more serious harm to yourself than when you let your blood literally starve for want of iron—iron that gives it strength and power to change food into living tissue," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital.

"Modern methods of cooking and the rapid pace at which people of this country live has made such an alarming increase in iron deficiency in the blood of American men and women that I have often marveled at the large number of people who lack iron in the blood, and who never suspect the cause of their weak, nervous, run-down state. Lack of iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable.

Which kind of man are you?
Which kind of woman are you?

"I have strongly emphasized the great necessity of physicians making blood examinations of the weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on year after year suffering from physical weakness and a highly nervous condition due to lack of sufficient iron in their red blood corpuscles without ever realizing the real and true cause of their trouble. Without iron in your blood your food merely passes through the body, something like corn through an old mill with rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind.

"For want of iron you may be an old man at thirty, dull of intellect, poor in memory, nervous, irritable and all 'run-down,' while at 50 or 60 with plenty of iron in your blood you may still be young in feeling, full of life, your whole being brimming over with vim and energy.

"As proof of this take the case of Former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee Charles A. Towne, who at past 58 is still a veritable mountain of tireless energy. Senator Towne says: 'I have found Nuxated Iron of the greatest benefit as a tonic and regulative. Henceforth I shall not be without it. I am in a position to testify for the benefit of others to the remarkable and immediate helpfulness of this remedy, and I unhesitatingly recommend Nuxated Iron to those who feel the need of renewed energy and the regularity of bodily functions.'

"But in my opinion you can't make strong, keen, forceful men and healthy, rosy-cheeked women by feeding them on metallic iron. The old forms of metallic iron must go through a digestive process to transform them into organic iron—Nuxated Iron—before they are ready to be taken up and assimilated by the human system. Notwithstanding all that has been said and written on this subject by well-known physicians, thousands of people still insist on dosing themselves with metallic iron simply, I suppose, because it costs a few cents less. I strongly advise readers in all cases to get a physician's prescription for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—or if you don't want to go to this trouble, then purchase only Nuxated Iron in its original packages and see that this particular name (Nuxated Iron) appears on the package. If you have taken preparations such as Nux and Iron and other similar iron products and failed to get results, remember that such products are an entirely different thing from Nuxated Iron."

In commenting upon the value of Nuxated Iron as a means for creating red blood, strength and endurance, Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York Physician and Medical Author says:

"Scarcely a day goes by but that I see women whose careworn faces, dragging steps and generally weak, tired appearance shows unmistakable signs of that anaemic, run-down condition usually brought on by lack of iron in the blood.

"There can be no strong, healthy, beautiful women without iron and inasmuch as refining processes and modern cooking methods remove the iron of Mother Earth from so many of our most common foods this iron deficiency should be supplied by using some form of organic iron just as we use salt when our food has not enough salt.

"Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it no matter how much or what you eat your food merely passes through you without doing you good, and as a consequence you become weak, pale and sickly-looking just like a plant trying to grow in a soil deficient in iron. Pallor means anaemia. The skin of an anaemic woman is pale, the flesh flabby. The memory fails, and often they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. Give such a woman a short course of Nuxated Iron and she often quickly becomes an entirely different individual—strong, healthy and rosy-cheeked. I have used Nuxated Iron widely in my own practice in most severe, aggravated conditions with unfailing results. I have induced many other physicians to give it a trial, all of whom have given me most surprising reports in regard to its great power as a health and strength builder."

MANUFACTURERS' NOTE: Nuxated Iron, which is used by Dr. Sullivan and others with such surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians, is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed in this city bythe Dickinson Drug Co., B. & B. Drug Co., Boswell & Noyes, Sun Drug Co., Chambers Drug Co., and all other druggists.

In the Enchanted Land of Fashions Where Everything is New

Ready to Wear

Authentic interpretations of Parisienne modes are here to foretell the long anticipated, much debated and now decided—AUTUMN SILHOUETTE.

Youthful lines and a certain luxury are the keynote of the Autumn Styles.

Creations of the season's finest fabrics and furs—from the simplicity of the College Miss to the subtlety lure of the grande toilette are now being shown.

Frocks

Dinner Gowns and Frocks for dance, afternoon and street wear show the subtleness of the Parisienne and the quality and refinement that characterize Robinson's.

The new Silhouette, flat at the back and front with suggested or actual fullness about the hips, is developed in the Kittens' Ear Crepe, Satins, Duvetyn, Georgette Crepe, Tulle, Taffeta, Tricotine, Poiret Twill, Oxford Cloth, Tricolette and Paulette.

—and Coats

Autumn Coats resolve themselves into distinct groups for Motor, Afternoon, Evening and general Day Wear.

All of the favored materials for Autumn and Winter lend themselves to loose, luxurious wraps that may lose milady's form, but clearly define the fashionable silhouette.

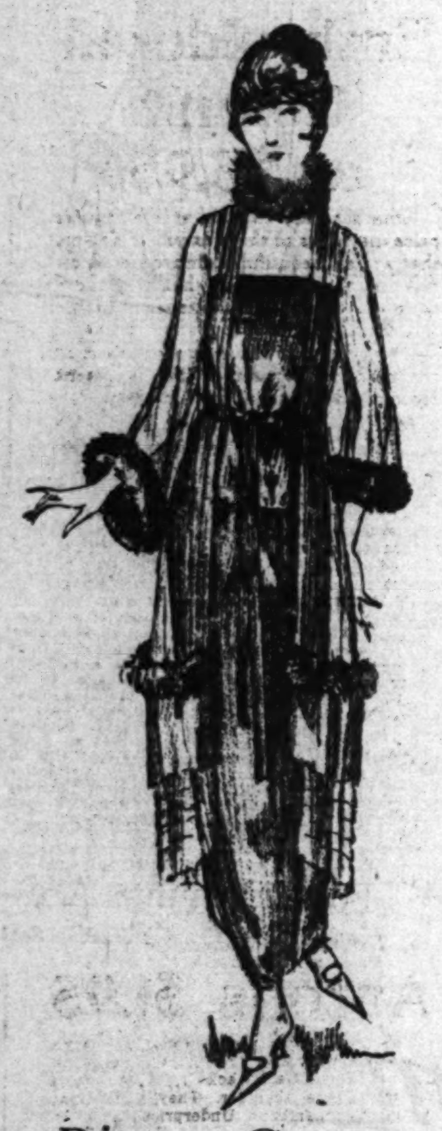
—and Suits

Tailleur Suits are so large a factor in the wardrobe of all well-dressed women that designers seem to have united to make them lovely.

Proof that they really planned apart, however, is found in the decided individuality of the season's modes.

Two traits, unique in combination, are characteristic of all of them—Luxury and Youthfulness.

THIRD FLOOR



Dinner Gown

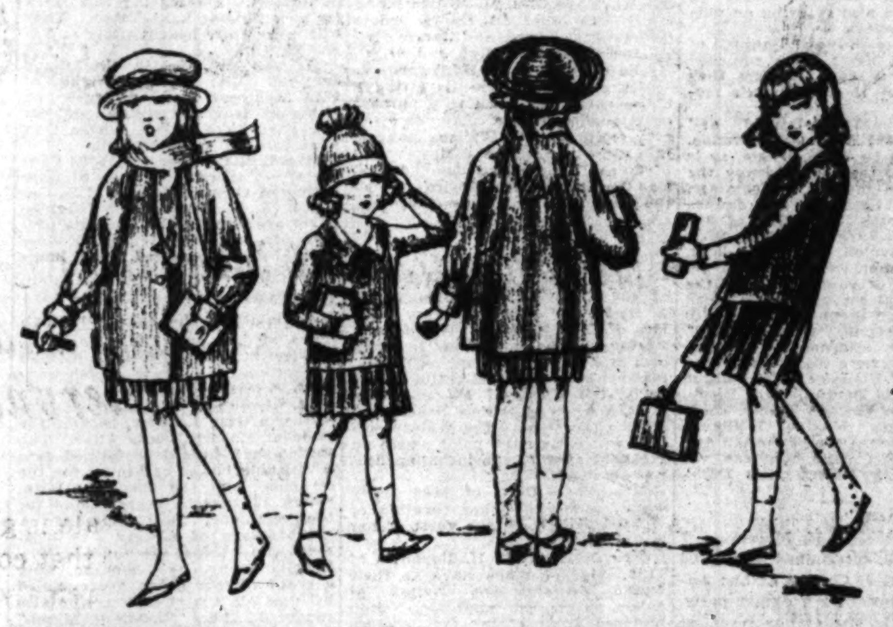
Silk Chiffon Velvet in Algiers shade is the foundation of this Dinner Gown.

Tulle in self-tone fashions the graceful tunic that adds transparent lure over the shoulders and the fullness at the hips, prescribed by Paris.

The throat band, cuffs and wide band about the overskirt are of Lynx fur.

Deep bands of velvet and tucked tulle finish the bottom of the tunic, while narrow velvet ribbon holds it softly to the waist and falls in long, front sash ends.

THIRD FLOOR



Wool Jersey Kilties for Children

Introduced by Robinson's

While Jersey Cloth has won the affection of the feminine world, the grown-ups have monopolized it.

NOW the Younger Miss is to have her day.

For JERSEY KILTIES,—Frocks that go confidently forth to meet the needs of Autumn,—are hereby introduced by Robinson's. They come in Navy, Sand, Pekin, Rose, Copen, Reindeer and White.

—Or for travel, motor and town wear, NOW—and for school wear—everywhere—the JERSEY KILTIE is THE THING.

The Jersey Kiltie has a long, straight French bodice with lower edge finished with a deep tuck to cover the attachment of the short full-plaited skirt.

—There is a clever little turn-over collar and short front opening, fastened with two harmonizing buttons.

Bloomers of the same superior quality of Jersey may be had, if desired, to complete the costume.

A Coat in full length is sure to be wanted both because it matches the rest of the set and because of its own individual charm.

—It has unusual lines in dolman effect with back hanging in circular ripples.

—Just like a grown-up Parisian model—this is a garment to bring lasting joy to the fastidious, little girl.

—These models may be had for all sizes from 6 to 12 years, inclusive.

—Moderately priced, according to size.

THIRD FLOOR

New Trimmings

Trimmings in almost lavish effects predominate in the dress of a Paris come-back to vivacity.

We are now showing all of them.

Tunics and Flouncing of Net with wide braided borders and Bands to match; Net with braided and Chenille designs; Georgette with braided and embroidered borders and all-overs to match; and Chiffons with oriental metallic effects.

Bands that are elaborate with Chenille, silk embroidery, sequins, beads and metallic designs.

French Millinery

The versatility of the French mind is exhibited in the Pattern Hats for Autumn.

The new models feature the season's shades of Algiers, Souci, Brun and Capucine.

Materials used are Melusine and shaggy Velours, Felts and Velvets.

And the Trimmings and the Shapes!

Exclusiveness prevails—which makes seeing these creations quite essential.

FOR THE INDUSTRIOUS NEEDLEWOMAN

BY ADELAIDE BYRD

YOUR QUILT IN GLORIFIED PATCHWORK

WHAT'S a four-poster without a patchwork quilt? Well, it isn't distinctly colonial, for one thing. Nor is it true to type. The four-poster suggests the colorful mosaic-like covering of yesterday quite as much as it suggests the day itself. However, the incongruity of an up-to-date quilt on an antique bed of the type is due not so much to the lack of a sense of fitness, as to the supposedly irremediable lack of the proper quilt in the first place.

Of course, if you were fortunate in the possession of a dear grandmother-lady who lovingly put bits of exquisitely colored calico together and turned out a wonderfully kaleidoscopic square to put upon her bed, then your bed is appropriately dressed and you have no further worries there—all of which is presupposing, tho, that you are the favorite granddaughter.

And then again, you might have come upon a little colony of ye olde quilters and bought yourself one of their wares—which is presupposing again, that you have from $80 to $150 to expend on the raiment of your bed.

But if you are neither the favorite granddaughter nor affluent enough to afford $150 coverlets, and yet want your four-poster to really look its part, then by all means take advantage of the design pictured today. Which is tremendously effective and a wonderfully simplified example of patchwork as compared with the despairingly tedious things of the past.

No present-day woman would take the infinite pains and the appalling lengths of time that her sisters of other generations took to make a quilt. Fancy any one in this era of speed—speed that doesn't hesitate at including hand work—turning out a mosaic in calico, a whole mosaic surface made up of tiny circles, ellipses, squares, every variety of triangle, trapezoids, parallelograms, pentagons, hexagons, the whole dictionary of geometry, in fact.

Contrast the difficulty of that jig-saw puzzle with the ease of fashioning the square motif suggested here and appliqueing it checkerboard wise to a foundation, and then quilting around this. Use an unbleached muslin, or plain colored silk, challis or calico for the foundation. Then cut the appliques from either a matching or a contrasting stuff and in any of the color schemes suggested. The two following are particular fetching:

1. Yellowish tan or lavender.
2. Dull blue.
3. White.
4. Tan.
5. Green (soft).
6. Lavender.
7. Green.

BLUE BORDER

1. Orange (dull).
2. Green.
3. Dull blue.
4. Yellow or tan.
5. Green.
6. Orange.
7. Green.

GREEN BORDER

Now when it comes to the actual cutting of the patches, make a tracing of each section of the square separately, and enlarge it enough to allow for turning in. Be quite sure that all the enlarging is uniform, tho, so that the pieces go smoothly together. The conventional posies in the corners are true appliques posed upon the geometric patches, and slight failings in accurate cutting won't mean very much there.

The next step is to block the foundation, or background, into 9½-inch squares leaving "over" enough room for a 7-inch band of background all round and after that a 5-inch appliqued border. You may, if you prefer the square quilt, omit two rows of blocks. Then to expedite the piecing, make a transfer of the motif on each square, which will make the basting of your jig-saw comparatively easy. And that much accomplished you will proceed to make a lining for this much of the quilt, give it a light filling of cotton, and finally do the actual quilting.

Stitch all about the squares following the edges of the cut-outs either in stitchery of a matching color or in black, which can always be depended on to do the striking thing no matter what the color scheme be to begin with. The finer your stitches, remember, the more lovely to look upon will be the finished quilt.

So, you see, it isn't so difficult, after all, is it, making a patchwork quilt in this day and generation of [illegible]. And it's going to mean just that much more "atmosphere" to the colonial chamber. Also, it's going to mean a most wholesome change from the sort of needlework that has been more or less compulsory during the past year.

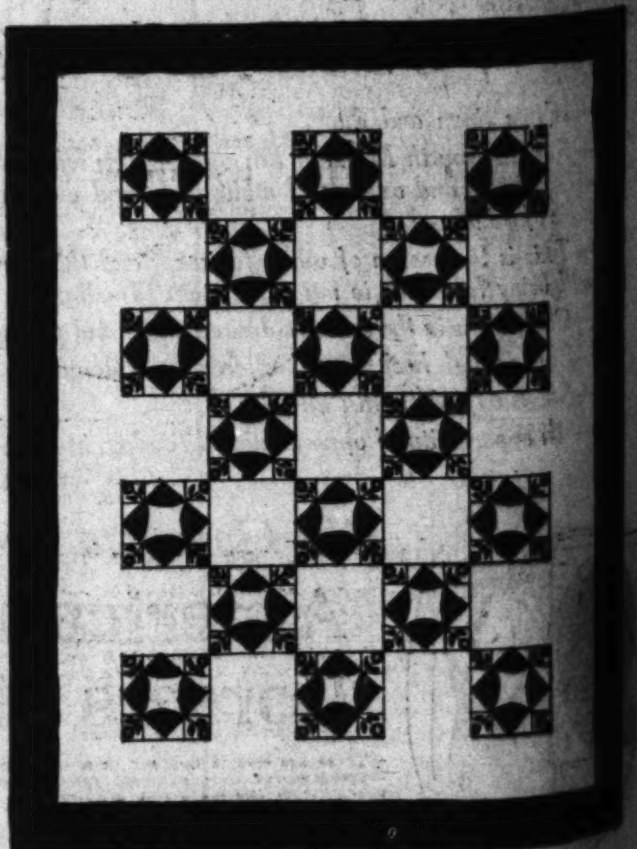
Fine Points in Bed Dressing

Do you still use shams upon your bed? If you do, you are not calculated to go on doing so very long after you have acquainted yourself with the day slip, and more particularly when you see the especial day slip, with its dainty bit of decoration, coming on this page next Sunday.



This Way You Will Apply the Motif

SMART SWEATER SUGGESTION

A SWEATER which is very modishly attractive is the purled one which reaches only to the waist line in front, has a peplum back and a sash falling over it. The sleeves are flaring and trimmed, as is the full peplum, with plain knitting.

The back is made first. Cast on the needle twice the number of stitches required to exactly fit your waist line, plain-knit eight rows and then purl about two inches. Next plain-knit eight more rows. Next take off half the number of stitches. In other words, knit two stitches together straight across. This will make the flaring peplum and now that you have taken off half the number of stitches, you will have remaining exactly enough stitches to just fit into the waist line.

Purl up as far as where the base of your sleeve should begin and then add on enough stitches for the length of your sleeve. Within five inches of the bottom of the sleeve, plain-knit eight rows, adding on one stitch the first row and one more on the fourth and one more on the seventh rows. Then purl for three inches, adding on one stitch the first row and about five more stitches in the course of the three inches. Then there are eight more rows of plain-knitting, three more stitches being added on in the course of these eight stitches.

This will make a flaring sleeve with a row of plain-knitting five inches from the bottom, then a space of purling, and then a finishing eight rows of purling for around the bottom of the sleeve. This corresponds with the peplum, of course.

A V-neck is best, since collars of blouses are most attractively worn with this cut of neck, and blouse collars are worn out over sweaters now more generally than are collars knitted on sweaters.

The front of the sweater reaches to the waist line, the last eight rows of it being plain-knitted while the rest of it is purled, of course. On the first of the eight plain-knit stitches which are to form the eight-row border, add on about eighty stitches on either side, these to form the sash ends which tie in the back.

If you are thinking of making a sweater for vacation wear which will be just a bit original and at the same time very good-looking, why not use this idea?

Painted Tin Things Anyone Can Make

THERE are ever so many painted tin things now, and one cannot help wishing one could paint when one sees them. Most of them have a generous background of black and then brilliantly colored flowers strewn about over them, carelessly or conventionally, but nevertheless there, and in a profusion of color! It lends a very quaint air of old-fashionedness.

You may not be able to draw or paint designs, but do not let this stand in your way. Give the tin article to be decorated a coat of black paint. Then scatter confetti over it either carelessly or with some view to design. Then over all goes a coat of shellac. A gayer decoration you could hardly wish, and you have not had the work of painting it on!

For your house beautiful or for gifts this way of decorating can be used on a number of articles. You can get little candlesticks with a bowl at small cost. Then there are sprinkling cans—you know a small attractive one to water the flowers on your front porch would never need to be hidden. Bonbon boxes, trays, book-ends and match boxes are among the things which could be effectively decorated thus. A little tray with a candlestick and match box upon it would make an attractive little bedside set for the old-fashioned room.

Of course, you can use the same idea on flower pots also, even tho they are not tin as are all the other things mentioned above. They are very popular, the black ones with splurges of color. The doing of them is quite as fascinating as the result afterward.

FILET AS DRESS TRIMMING

FILET first made its debut on dainty things for milady's house. Her guest towels with their filet insertion, were the envy of all her friends. Her tray covers were things of beauty, while the innumerable throws and spreads she made were beyond description.

At last she turned to her lingerie. With bands of filet, she made camisoles, exquisitely feminine. Nightdresses with filet yokes became the rage. Then she decided that filet bags could be most attractive. There was no pattern under the sun that was not available to her. Now it's her dress she trims.

A dress seen not long ago was of white linen trimmed with a band of filet. The filet was about four inches in width and used as a band on the lower part of the blouse. The collar of the dress was finished with a narrow crocheted edging.

A child's dress using filet trimming can be most effective. A yoke as if for a nightdress is made having sleeves crocheted into it. The popular butterfly pattern worked in very fine cotton is very attractive. Set on a skirt of some soft summer material it forms a dainty little dress for a young child's wardrobe.

MAKING ATTRACTIVE SPACES FOR THINGS

THE comfortably-sized house of our parents' days has given way to a house still called comfortable sized, but—well, there's a difference! Perhaps you've never tried finding space for the million and one things fond friends have wished on you in the guise of presents, wedding and otherwise—not to mention the really necessary things that every house must have! Oh, no, the statue of Psyche, that Aunt Martha sent with her love, needs must have the space that you really need for the armchair, now standing idle in the middle of the floor.

One woman solved her problem very nicely. She lived in a modern apartment and every available space counted. Her extra dining room table leaves were her worst worry. They didn't fit in anywhere. Finally in despair, she thrust them into a bedroom closet. Here they took up most of the room, and every time she needed them it meant delving into the closet to bring them forth.

In her dining room was a space that could be filled very well had she something low enough. It was just below the window and she had often considered making a window seat when both time and money were available. At last she saw the light! She flew to the bedroom and brought forth the case of extra leaves. She turned it on its side like a box and then put casters on the four corners. A cushion and valance in bright colored cretonne soon proved it a window seat of charm as well as utility. How much easier it was to get at the leaves, to say nothing of the closet space saved!

Perhaps the greatest miracle in this saving of space was wrought by a woman who conceived the idea of making two rooms of one. The crisis came when the sewing room of the household had to be converted into a bedroom. What was to be done for a sewing room, an absolute necessity in a family of moderate means? Some one suggested the guest room which was really rarely used.

So the transformation was begun. A shelf large enough to cover the cabinet sewing machine took the place of the dressing table which filled a more urgent need in another room. A mirror was hung over it and then a valance to match the curtains and spread was added. The sewing machine seemed not to be! The little Martha Washington sewing table took its place at the head of the bed, and was the receptacle for needle, pins, [illegible] foot of the bed was placed a [illegible] waist box into which [illegible] rive, were put all the [illegible] of the workroom. Many a [illegible] expressed admiration for the [illegible] room would have been [illegible] that it was the workroom of the mistress of the house.

MAINLY ABOUT PEOPLE.

A Weekly News Letter From London.

BY T. P. O'CONNOR.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—Now that the labor troubles have brought to a head the long slumbering hostility to Lloyd George, to the ministry, to everything in the present social order; now that we are entering on a welter of parliamentary strife, the outcome of which nobody can foresee, I will give from week to week portraits of personalities bound to play leading parts in the transformation of parties and administrations.

If Lloyd George goes under in the House of Commons owing to the split-up of the artificial fabric of the present coalition, either he will force a dissolution or a new administration will carry on the present Parliament. This brings at once the difficult problem of who will lead the Tory party.

Bonar Law, the present leader, has many things in his favor. He has facility, dexterity of speech, perfect temper, modesty, straightforwardness, a candor at once disarming and perilous in parliamentary conflicts where every word ought to be weighed. Another wonderful gift is perfect memory. He never takes a note, can fling out long rows of figures without looking at a single document and his speech goes easily from point to point without any aid even from the big headlines most practiced speakers have to employ. His method of preparing a speech is to sit down in a comfortable armchair for a couple of hours. When that is over he rises utterly exhausted by the mental effort but quite prepared to start out saying all he has arranged to say. This method of preparation partly accounts for his main defect of too candid utterance, for he speaks as a man thinking aloud and a parliamentarian can never safely think aloud.

LACKS IRON IN TEMPERAMENT.

He also lacks that iron in his temperament which lies at the core of most great leaders of men. Parnell had it, Gladstone had it, Lloyd George has it. Bonar Law, intensely emotional, extremely modest, lacks self-confidence and shrinks from responsibility. His emotionalism is augmented by bitter personal sorrows. He lost the wife he adored several years ago. He has been heard to say in private that genuine interest in life had never been inspired since and on top of this came the death of two boys in war. The latter loss cannot be mentioned by or to him without risking an outburst. In a speech celebrating the victory of the Allies he happened to mention the immense sacrifices victory cost and then had to pause several minutes before he could continue his speech.

One of these two sons was killed in the remote fighting in Mesopotamia. An Irish Catholic chaplain told Joe Devlin innumerable stories of the poor boy's bravery, unselfishness and universal popularity with all comrades. Joe, though a most belligerent politician publicly, is notoriously kind-hearted in private, and thought it his duty to go to Bonar Law and repeat these encomiums as a salve for the father's wounded heart, and as Joe spoke he saw great tears streaming down Law's cheeks—a strangly touching scene between two men who represent the poles of opinion on Irish self-government.

As to Law's self-distrust, the proof is that he was offered the Premiership on Asquith's fall, but proffered the position to that terrible little Welshman, who knows fear neither of God nor man nor himself.

CECIL MAY GAIN CONTROL.

Finally Law has the great difficulty of no roots in the party which still largely represents the old order, the Established Church and broad acres. He is a Presbyterian Scotch-Irish-Canadian, and before he entered politics was a Glasgow metal merchant. Arrogant Torries used to speak of him in private as a Scottish ironmonger. He has none of the commanding appearance that magnetizes men, is tall, raw-boned, high-cheekboned, very like the typical Scotch professional golfer, and finally he got the leadership as a compromise man between the rival claims of Walter Long, the best survival of the old Tory squirearchy once omnipotent in the Tory party, and Austen Chamberlain, the representative of the modern commercial Tory democracy, and these compromise candidates always bear the scar of these internal struggles as Abraham Lincoln did when he ousted Seward and Chase. Finally Law has no private weaknesses except love of a cigar and game of bridge; his strongest drink is ginger beer.

These are reasons why people behind the scenes begin to discuss seriously the chances of Tory leadership passing to the hands of Lord Robert Cecil. It is an extraordinary example of continuity in English life that the Cecil family should still help to govern England three centuries after the original Cecil directed the foreign policy of Queen Elizabeth. Generations of undistinguished Cecils in the interval had held great posts, but once more the old family glories were revived when the late Lord Salisbury guided for years as Premier and Foreign Minister both the domestic and foreign policy of England. A great journalist before he was a great politician, one of the founders of the Saturday Review, once the most powerful weekly in England, and its most mordant writer, a poor younger son, who made a love match with the daughter of a judge, then considered the last word almost in a mesalliance, Lord Salisbury had the struggles of a young journalist until the death of his elder brother brought him in direct succession to a great title and huge family estates, mainly consisting of big ground rents in the most central parts of London off the big street known as the Strand.

SONS ARE DISTINGUISHED.

His sons are all distinguished. One is a bishop. The present Lord Salisbury is a prominent though not powerful figure in the House of Lords. The chief brains, however, are divided between two sons in the House of Commons, Lord Hugh and Lord Robert. Lord Hugh is one of the true orators of his time, with an extraordinary wealth of beautiful diction, capable of "sob stuff" as you call it in America, on occasion, and of lifting the whole House of Commons into that deadly stillness which is the greatest demonstration of an orator's omnipotence over the emotions of an audience. But he is eccentric, impracticable, supersubtle and so pronounced and narrow an adherent of the established church as to be regarded with hatred by nonconformists and distrust by that middle class commercial element which has entered into the modern Tory party, an element, besides, which has that distrust of sacerdotalism which is at the roots of the overwhelming majority of rationalistic Englishmen.

Lord Robert has not the great gifts or great defects of his brother, though he also suffers from the taint of sacerdotalism. He resigned his appointment in the ministry some months ago because his views on the Welsh church disestablishment act, a measure about which all classes feel absolute indifference with the exception of bitter high churchmen in England and perfervid nonconformists in Wales.

But Lord Robert, as a practicing barrister for many years, is a husband and father, while Lord Hugh remains an obstinate bachelor. He has mixed more with men and realities than Lord Hugh and thus unlearned something of the narrow, Tory, high church squirearchical creed in which he was brought up in the old Elizabethan mansion called Hatfield, where his great progenitor invested some of the big plunder Henry VIII practiced on the lands of the great monasteries at the time of the Reformation. He has not a particle of the resounding, inspired oratory of his brother, but practice in the law courts has given him considerable debating powers and he knows the technique of Houre of Commons work. He enhanced his reputation enormously by his work on the League of Nations in Paris, and surprised and delighted old-time radical opponents by democratic, humanitarian instincts entirely denied him in former epochs of his career.

He has a striking, rather than handsome, personal appearance. His height, though great, is diminished by a heavy stoop in the shoulders; the face is thin and sallow, and he is lanky with the thin, long legs characteristic of all the present Cecil family, while their father was huge to obesity.

His traditions are all with the old Tory party and he shares some of their prejudices with a certain admixture of modernity learned in the law courts and Parliament. In the old days, when he was in opposition to Lloyd George and the Irish Nationalists, he was extraordinarily excitable for an Englishman, interrupting constantly, sometimes almost shrieking, revealing a certain neurotic tendency in keeping with his physique. I would compare him with Claude Frolau, the unhappy priest, who loved Esmeralda in Victor Hugo's romance, "Notre Dame," and was thrown by Quasimodo from the parapets of the great cathedral.

BITS OF VERSE.

Homecoming.

We have sent the deadly shrapnel,
 We have flung the hand grenade,
We have been at Chateau Thierry,
 In death's volley unafraid.

We have hung like tireless bulldogs
 On the routed German flanks,
We have penetrated, singing,
 In the vanguard of the tanks.

We have aimed our blow for freedom—
 Yonder lie our strength and blood—
We have crossed the fields of Flanders,
 Tasted daily fire and flood.

Now we're coming home to battle
 On the Golden Field of Life,
Find us places, find us places—
 We with hearts inured to strife!
—[Will Thompson in Everybody's Magazine.

Be Thou a Dreamer?

Be thou a dreamer, tho' the way be long,
And somber shadows cloud the forward path;
Nor lose the gladsome hope and vision fair
Of brighted scenes and happier hours to come.
In each day's stir and strain, oh, live thy best,
Nor spurn the duty that is thine to do;
However lowly, it is service still.
Yet dream thou on, and never close thy sight
To visions of some sweeter, holier time,
When battle cries shall change to songs of joy
As hatreds vanish that embitter all,
While human hearts in every clime and creed
Shall realize at last their brotherhood.
—[Abram S. Isaacs in New York Times.

About Fishing.

(Inspired by a girl on a street car who praised the impossibly good qualities of her fiance.)

Myrt, the likeness seems to strike,
Maids and men are much alike.

Both go fishing now and then,
Men for fish and maids for men.

Hours do they fish and wait
Trying every sort of bait.

Now and then one gets away—
(Type won't print the things you say.)

Some are "short" (in size or tin,)
With regrets you cast them in.

Then you catch one—luck again!
Land him with a gaffhook, then.

Throw him on the bank and flout him,
Then, O, how you lie about him!
—[John D. Wells in the Buffalo News.

"Somewhere in France!"

"Somewhere in France" I think there springs
A lovlier leafage, and it brings
 A fairer flowering, sweet and low,
 Than that torn sod before could show
Among the Springtide's offerings.

And there a bird in rapture sings,
With fuller, sweeter carolings
 Than ever earlier Springs could know,
 "Somewhere in France!"

For there, where Spring her largesse flings,
He flung a largesse, more than kings,
 In kingliest mood, could e'er bestow—
 His blossoming, singing life! And oh,
Forever in my heart there rings,
 "Somewhere in France!"
—[Minnie Leona Upton in Leslie's.

WHAT CONSULS SAY.

The unanimous opinion of the Barcelona exporters of dried fruits is that the better quality of dried figs, known locally as the "higo blanco" (white fig,) with a light-colored skin, can not profitably be exported to the United States. These figs gather a mold en route and in that climate, which often makes them unmarketable. The fig which seems to stand shipment best is the one raised in the Province of Huelva and known as the "higo de Lepe." This fig has a much darker skin and meat and is not so attractive in appearance, nor is it of the same quality as the "higo blanco." These exporters state that they do not believe that the Spanish fig can compete with the California fig in the markets of the United States, at least until some better method of packing is found.

Co-operation in Australia is of comparatively recent growth, and has been in the past mainly confined in the dairying industry. Recently however, the fruit growers in the Murray River districts, along the South Australian and Victorian border, who represent 95 per cent. of the dried-fruit producers of Australia, have formed a co-operative company under the name of the Australian Dried Fruits Association. As is the case in most co-operative concerns, the association is solely financed by and in the interests of the growers themselves, and marketing conditions and administration are entirely in the hands of the members.

Italy has lost approximately 40 per cent. of its cattle. During the war it became necessary to sacrifice a large percentage of its breeding and dairy animals because of the great need of meat for army and civilian consumption. This destructive policy was further augmented during the trying period of the influenza epidemic, when all restrictions were removed in order to combat the malady. In the invaded district of Venice many thousands of the best dairy and breeding animals were lost.

The plan of the University of London to grant degrees in commerce is attracting much attention. Under this scheme it is proposed to grant the degree of bachelor of commerce to candidates who pass the necessary examinations after a three years' course of study. Those who so desire may later proceed to the degree of master of commerce, after a minimum of two years, practical experience in the particular trade or industry taken up.

The Acting President of Brazil has authorized one credit of 2,500,000 milreis ($687,500) and another of 500,000 milreis ($137,500) to the Ministry of Public Works to be used in combating the effects of a drought which has ravaged sections of northeast Brazil, especially in the State of Ceara. The inhabitants in these sections have no means at hand to protect themselves against the drought, and crops and herds of cattle have been completely lost. Comparatively little appears to be known concerning modern irrigation projects, construction of railroads and telegraphic communication.

In 1918 the United Kingdom imported 490 complete motor cars, valued at $1,344,945, and 2915 chassis, valued at $9,500,210; exported 2647 cars of British manufacture, value $8,826,780, and 65 British-made chassis, value $188,606; and re-exported 103 foreign and colonial-made cars, value $106,498, and six chassis, value $5669.

Some of the dwarfed trees of Japan have been known to live for 200 years.

The notice: "Ladies are requested to remove their combs," appears now on theater programmes in London, because of the vogue of the huge Spanish comb among smart women. Some of the combs are of enormous size. The tortoise shell vogue is an expensive one. A light tortoise shell dressing set costs $1000 or more.

Some birds are curious and wish to know what is going on. So if they see a human being in their neighborhood they will come close to investigate, and perhaps to scold, and one of these birds is the Kentucky warbler. This bird has a preference for woods that are low and damp, and ordinarily keeps well within the depths of tangled thickets. This bird, which ranges throughout the Eastern United States, spends its winter in Northern South America.

EDUCATIONAL.

A book recently from the press, "The American College," contains a chapter on the present status and probable future of colleges in the West, in which the statement is made that there are certain colleges holding a vantage ground of strategic importance, which are doing effective work, rank with the best in the country and are admirably and wisely located so as to be centers of commanding influence. Of the eight such institutions specifically named, Pomona College is one.

As a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, a forest biological station, devoted mainly to the study of wild-animal life, has been established at the New York State College of Forestry, Syracuse University. This station is believed, says the August Popular Mechanics Magazine, to be the first of its kind to be established in the world. It is considered to be of great importance to foresters and zoologists, though it is a project in which many simply interested in the conservation of wild life feel concerned. A better knowledge of all kinds of wild animals, birds, and fish is necessary, according to authorities, to enable lawmakers to pass suitable legislation for the protection and conservation of game. The idea of the biological station received the indorsement of the ex-President before his death.

One of the advantages of American participation in the war is the greater knowledge of American institutions by our European associates. For instance, a Columbia professor over there in talking to an unusually well-informed Englishman about education said: "I wonder which American university is best known in England." The Englishman replied: "Oh, we know both of them, Yale and Harvard!"—[Independent.

When the University of Arizona opens next fall a number of new business courses will be offered to those interested in the commercial side of education

THE SUN AND THE WEATHER.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) Aug. 10.—The sun is a variable star. The light and heat which it gives off vary in amount not only from year to year, but from day to day.

This fact has been established by observations made at the station which the Smithsonian Institution maintains for the purpose at Calama, Chile. Dr. C. G. Abbot, the well-known astro-physicist, who has just returned from a trip to Calama and other points in South America for the Smithsonian, believes that most important scientific and practical results will follow from the work in the study of solar radiation which is being done at Calama.

Although this observatory was only established in July, 1918, remarkable use has already been made of its observations by the weather department of the Argentine. The head forecaster of this department is an American, H. H. Clayton, who formerly was connected with the Blue Hill Observatory in Massachusetts, and was a pioneer in the study of the atmosphere by means of balloons and kites.

Mr. Clayton has been getting telegraphic reports of the observations made at Calama, and has been using them in forecasting the weather. Not only has he succeeded in predicting weather changes with an accuracy which has seldom been attained before, but he claims that these fluctuations in solar radiation really control the weather, and that in order to predict it with perfect accuracy we have only to study the variations of sun heat.

This conclusion, when it is officially offered to the scientific world with Mr. Clayton's evidence in support of it, promises to create something of a furor. Every important nation in the world maintains an elaborate scientific organization, like our Weather Bureau, for the sole purpose of predicting changes in the weather. The business of the world waits upon these weather predictions. Ships do not sail when storm warnings are displayed. Farmers depend upon the Weather Bureau in harvesting their crops, and in protecting them against frost and flood. Railroads time their shipments of perishables in accordance with what the weather is predicted to be. And millions of persons who are planning to spend the day outdoors, look at the weather forecast the first thing in the morning.

As everyone has noticed, weather forecasts are frequently in error. About 20 per cent. of the time a rainstorm arrives when it was not expected or a frost appears where the forecasters said it would be warm.

In making their forecasts, the meteorologists use every scrap of evidence available. They study the winds and the clouds and the amount of moisture in the air.

Mr. Clayton believes that the variation of the amount of heat which the sun gives off is the master key to the situation. Study solar radiation, he says, and you can predict the weather with an accuracy which is impossible by present methods.

Dr. Abbot examined all of Mr. Clayton's records and read a paper, which the latter has prepared, setting forth his discovery and his proofs. Dr. Abbot admits that he was at first skeptical about Mr. Clayton's claim, but says that he is now convinced "there may be a great deal in it."

If Mr. Clayton's method is all that he claims, its importance can scarcely be exaggerated, for perfect foreknowledge of the weather would enormously increase man's control over nature.

At all events a true and thorough knowledge of solar variation is the first step. The Smithsonian is perfecting at its Calama station the means for making these studies of solar radiation upon which Clayton's method is based. During his stay there Dr. Abbot introduced a method which reduces the time necessary for making the daily observation from about fifteen hours to about three hours. The instrument used for this purpose is known as a pyranometer.

The problem of measuring the sun's heat is a difficult one. It has engaged scientists for a long time. Of course, the very existence of life on the surface of the earth depends upon the heat of the sun. So far, there is no reliable evidence that the sun's heat has diminished within historic times, but the Calama observations show that it does vary, somewhat unaccountably, and often the variation amounts to several per cent. within a few days.

It is easy enough to measure the amount of heat which reaches the surface of the earth from the sun. But when the sunbeams reach the surface of the earth they have passed through the atmosphere, and this is never a perfect medium. It is filled with varying amounts of dust, moisture, clouds and other things which impede or refract the sunbeams.

Heretofore it has been necessary to pass the sunbeam through a prism, breaking the beam up into its component waves of light, to measure each wave length separately, and to estimate which ones had been partly absorbed in the atmosphere, and to what extent. This process required several hours, and the results were often spoiled by clouds springing up meanwhile.

When there is much cloudiness or dirt or other obstruction in the air, the sky is bright, because of the large amount of light which has been deflected from the main beam. On the other hand, when the atmosphere is clear, the sky is a much darker blue, as anyone may observe. The brightness of the sky, therefore, at a given distance from the sun is an index to the amount of impurities in the atmosphere which tend to obstruct light. Dr. Abbot's pyranometer is a mechanism for measuring this degree of brightness of the sky, and thus determining at one operation just what percentage of the sun's heat is reaching the earth. The amount of the heat reaching the earth is then measured with a pyrheliometer, and this reading being corrected by the reading of the pyranometer, it is possible to determine just how much heat the sun is giving off at a certain time. By comparing their readings at Calama with readings which have occasionally been made at other points, the scientists have reached the conclusion that they are reading the heat of the sun within 1 per cent. of perfect accuracy. They know how the sun is functioning just as well as an engineer knows how the boiler of his engine is working.

An incidental part of Dr. Abbot's trip was the witnessing of a total eclipse of the sun at La Paz, Bolivia. It occurred about twenty minutes after sunrise on May 29, and was a remarkable spectacle, as described by Dr. Abbot.

When the sun rose it was not completely eclipsed, but showed as a crescent of fire, with the outline of the moon above it. This crescent of fire was quickly swallowed by the black mass of the moon, and it became as dark as twilight. From the hidden sun radiated in all directions broad rays of light, known as the coronas, while a long, crooked tail of brilliant crimson light, scientifically called a "prominence," hung from its lower edge.

To the scientists the eclipse was a rare and beautiful spectacle, but is was a terrifying one to the natives of Peru, who are descended from sun-worshiping barbarians, and the strength of the ancient faith was shown in their terror at the disappearance of the sun. Many fires were lighted to coax the sun back and an epidemic of typhoid, which occurred about that time, was ascribed by them to the anger of the sun god, who had hidden his face.

BLOOD-RITE DANCE OF THE HAMADCHAS.

The dancers were all dressed in white caftans or in the blue skirts of the lowest classes. In the sunlight something that looked like fresh red paint glistened on their shaved black or yellow skulls and made dark blotches on their garments. At first these stripes and stains suggested only a gaudy ritual ornament like the pattern on the drums; then one saw that the paint, or whatever it was, kept dripping down from the whirling caftans and forming fresh pools among the stones; that as one of the pools dried up another formed, redder and more glistening, and that these pools were fed from great gashes which the dancers hacked in their own skulls and breasts with hatchets and sharpened stones. The dance was a blood-rite, a great sacrificial symbol, in which blood flowed so freely that all the rocking feet were splashed with it.

Gradually, however, it became evident that many of the dancers simply rocked and howled, without hacking themselves, and that most of the bleeding skulls and breasts belonged to negroes. Every now and then the circle widened to let in another figure, black or dark yellow, the figure of some humble blue-shirted spectator suddenly "getting religion" and rushing forward to snatch a weapon and baptize himself with his own blood; and as each new recruit joined the dancers the music shrieked louder and the devotees howled more wolfishly. And still, in the center, the mad marabout spun, and the children bobbed and mimicked him and rolled their diamond eyes.

Such is the dance of the Hamadchas, of the confraternity of the marabout Hamadch, a powerful saint of the seventeenth century, whose tomb is in the Zerhoun above Moulay Idriss. Hamadch, it appears, had a faithful slave, who, when his master died, killed himself in despair, and the self-inflicted wounds of the brotherhood are supposed to symbolize the slave's suicide; though, no doubt, the origin of the ceremony might be traced back to the depths of that ensanguined grove where Mr. Fraser plucked the golden bough.—[Edith Wharton, in the August Scribner's.

THE PEOPLE WHO RULE MUST BE FIT.

BY WILLIAM E. PERRY.

Go make the world safe for the people to rule,
And blazon the failure of kings;
Mock loud at their fear when the earthquake awakes,
An old throne to the rubbish heap flings;
Let the splendor and pomp of the long founded line,
Like a candle be blown at a breath—
But the hope of the world is not a glib tongue,
That clamors for "freedom or death."

It is well if no more a mere subject, shall man,
Who was made for the friendship of God,
Cringe low at the rod of the head 'neath a crown,
At the sweep of a scepter be awed.
All hail to the citizen, raise the cry,
Let the world be made safe for his rule—
But the people who rule must be fit for the task,
Why make the world safe for a fool?

The clamor of crowds that are swayed by a wind,
The voice of Jehovah is not,
Can a mob follow right when it knows but to move
At the turn of some demagogue plot?
The man who would rule must be trained for the task,
Linked firm to the Sinai Code,
When majorities hate what is just, true and right,
What availeth a law's yoke and goad?

Go point in your pride to the ballot box laid,
As the new world's sure cornerstone,
And say that the wish of the voter is law
In place of the word from the throne—
But woe to the world if it pass to the sway,
Of an ignorant, unmoral clan,
If the voter be king let him show himself fit,
Let the ruler of men be a man.

To the ends of the earth there is turmoil and grief,
And wild storms of some peoples' unrest,
While the impulse of liberty leaps to full flame,
In the depths of the untutored breast;
But the passion for freedom by law unrefined,
Shall be like a forest fire lit,
And earth shall consume in a holocaust red,
If the freeman remaineth unfit.

HOW'S BUSINESS?

It happened in the county criminal court room the other day. The prosecutor was examining a witness for the defense, who manifested a very unfriendly feeling for the State's attorney. The usual questions were asked the man and finally the prosecutor asked:

"My man, you drink rather heavily, don't you?"

"That's my business," was the fiery retort.

"Well, business has been rather brisk lately, hasn't it?" calmly continued the State's attorney.—[Columbus Dispatch.

The Times Literary Page Books and Their Makers

CONDUCTED BY GORDON RAY YOUNG

CLEVER BOOK BY MANGHAM.

"The Moon and Sixpence," Spirited, Epigrammatical and Sardonic.

BY GORDON RAY YOUNG.

"The Moon and Sixpence."

W. Somerset Maugham has, so far as I know, written but two novels. Two novels—and I stake what is left of my reputation on it that he is a great novelist. No, I don't know whether he will "live" or not. He is not, and never will be, popular—as a novelist. He knows too much about human nature.

Strange, that this young Englishman who is famed east, west, north and south, as the writer of clever farces and comedies, should, apparently effortlessly, write some of the greatest novels of his day. They are not pleasant novels—and women do not like them. But "Of Human Bondage" is a great book, though Mr. Doran, the publisher, did not seem quite to know what to do with it and printed its whole two hundred thousand words in one fat, almost incredibly, tedious type. One has to be an ardent lover of good literature to read it.

The London Times once printed this of Mr. Maugham: "A number of years ago W. Somerset Maugham outshone all dramatists, from Aristophanes to Hall Caine [But why Hall Caine?—Lit. Ed.] by having three or four new plays concurrent in London."

Aristophanes could hardly have been expected to compete in London rivalries, but the distinction of Mr. Maugham is exceptional. He is marvelously gifted as an author. "The Moon and Sixpence" (George H. Doran Company) is a clever book as well as something more. It is epigrammatical and spirited in parts, sardonic in its wit, and also big with purpose and vivid in its tragedy.

There is one thing in particular about "The Moon and Sixpence" that will antagonize most people who have ideas on art. Strickland, the hero, who is a most diabolical villain—a Nietzschean artist—is a commonplace stock broker until 40; then the urge seizes him to paint, and though beginning at that late date, he becomes one of the world's greatest artists. Very few people are willing to allow a novelist the liberty of making—no matter his intensity of purpose and ability at work—a stock broker of 40 into an artist of distinguished value. Overlooking that point, which though not greatly convincing, is purely controversial, there is nothing else that can be grasped for forcible denunciation excepting the fearful character of Charles Strickland.

That an author should have conceived such a character is astonishing; that he should have created him, made him real, is something beyond mere tribute. Strickland and this book belong to the finer arts of criticism. It is at once a terrible and beautiful story, written by one who is a master of revealment, suggestion, irony and tragedy. I doubt that reflection would bring to my mind a more original and distinctive modern book. And women will hate it. Three women figure in the story of Strickland. He is ruthless toward them all, though something of the half-breed's sacrificial loyalty and love seems to have touched him. But perhaps it was only because eaten out with a loathsome disease, more distressed than ever in his pinched, deprived life, he had at last accomplished the work for which he fought so brutally, with such intensive heedlessness.

These paragraphs are from Strickland, spoken after a woman has killed herself for love of him—and she was not merely his slave, she had been the wife of one to whom Strickland owed every debt that can rest on a "decent" man. Strickland said:

"I don't want love. I haven't time for it. It's weakness. I am a man, and sometimes I want a woman. When I've satisfied my passion I'm ready for other things. I can't overcome my desire, but I hate it; it imprisons my spirit; I look forward to the time when I shall be free from all desire and can give myself without hindrance to my work. Because women can do nothing except love, they've given it a ridiculous importance. They want to persuade us that it's the whole of life. It's an insignificant part. I know lust. That's normal and healthy. Love is a disease. Women are the instruments of my pleasure; I have no patience with their claim to be helpmates, partners, companions. . . . When a woman loves you she's not satisfied until she possesses your soul. Because she's weak she has a rage for domination, and nothing less will satisfy her. She has a small mind, and she resents the abstract which she is unable to grasp. . . . With infinite patience she prepared to snare me and bind me. She wanted to bring me down to her level; she cared nothing for me, she only wanted me to be hers. She was willing to do everything in the world for me except the one thing I wanted: to leave me alone."

My quoting those passages does not express approval—nor do I intend to express disapproval. Any one who quarrels with anything presented between quotation marks in a novel, anything that is true to the character speaking and assists in an understanding of that character, is wholly unqualified to speak of literary values, if not indeed to appreciate them.

The book is written in the first person. At one point the narrator says: "Strickland was an odious man, but I still think he was a great one." The character is odious, but it is a great one.

Strickland leaving his "good" wife—who would not forgive him when she discovered that he had not left her because of another woman—ignoring the discomforts and starvation of a Parisian garret, mocking the people who were kind to him, insulting the people who praised him, wandering from place to place, fighting in dives, at last making his way as a deck hand to the South Seas, and working only until he had money for paint and canvas, caring for nothing else, fighting on and on as though possessed by the devil—that character, I say, is the nearest personification of the creative, the artistic-creative urge that makes men mad that may be found perhaps in all literature.

Strickland isn't the whole book by any means. Every character in it is drawn with unflinching care, vigorously expressed. They are exceedingly well delineated, practically all of them marked with subtleties of revealment such as are found only in the acceptably great books. "The Moon and Sixpence"—for which Strickland went to his earthly hell—is one of them.

"The Passionate Pilgrim."

Samuel Merwin has never written a book that I liked, possibly excepting "The Honey Bee." Among the reasons for that dislike is the fact that I can't get interested over the trials and tribulations of his characters—I know in reading many books that it will all come out all right. But someway Mr. Merwin seems to be fondling his characters. This is curious because no author of a romantic turn draws the men with such caddish eccentricities, and makes them generally so unattractive.

He has done somewhat differently with "The Passionate Pilgrim" (Bobbs-Merrill & Co.) Though the reappearance of Henry Calverly, the ridiculous ass with a streak of genius, as a suffering, tragic hero is not at the beginning very impressive upon those familiar with "Temperamental Henry" and "Henry is Twenty." This is perhaps the best written of Mr. Merwin's books. It has excellent material—and Henry does become an appealing character, though, to use an extremely harsh word, he remains pretty much of a simp.

In "Henry is Twenty" we left him on the high road to fame as an author and approaching marriage with a lovely girl. In the interval between that and this book, Henry has had tragedies—a murder and scandal occurred in his wife's family, and for gallantly kidnaping his wife by carrying her from the witness stand he has been thrown into prison for a time. He returns to a city where he is known and begins work again on a newspaper. All of the women characters are extremely sympathetic toward him, and a millionaire's daughter—soon to come into her father's vast holdings—loves him. Henry has an unfortunate knack of writing the truth—so his newspaper career is not a happy one. He more or less casually starts an expose of the crooked politicians in the city, they convey to the million-heiress that he is a jail bird, and Henry's future takes on a very dismal hue. But Henry's future is in Mr. Merwin's competent hands—he, Henry, hasn't lost his amazing gift for writing classics and that sort of thing. Regrettably, Mr. Merwin does not quote from any of those wonderful pages that this wonderful man dashes off with wonderful rapidity.

There are many good characters in the book—that is, interesting characters—and the invention and situations are good. But Samuel Merwin is at best a third-rate author. He is an adept at all the kinks and tricks of the professional author. He seems to think in terms of situations like, not a playwright, but a scenario editor; and mixes his pathos, humor, tragedy, sentiment with the cunning measurements of a drug clerk.

"An Adopted Husband."

The slip-cover says that "An Adopted Husband," by Futabatei is probably the first modern Japanese novel to be translated into English. The translation is by B. Mitsiu and Gregg M. Sinclair (Alfred A. Knopf.) The introduction states that Futabatei came under the influence of Dostoevski, and translated many of his books. With that suggestion, anyone can see that there is a decided resemblance of attitude between this book and the powerful Russian pessimist.

"An Adopted Husband" is a story that one cannot classify readily. The elements of strangeness are in. One must disassociate it from preconceived ideas about Japan, without, however, losing sight of Japan; and Japanese realism is something altogether new to English readers.

In a certain Japanese family where the male issue seems dying out, young men are adopted and raised as husbands for the daughters. The lot of these men seems to be proverbially unpleasant, and the experience of Tetsuya appears to have been rather worse than usual. Being a poor student he accepted the arrangement in order to go on with his studies, and after the father's death found himself living with a cantankerous old mother-in-law, a headstrong wife, and for a time with his wife's half-sister. The beautiful character is the half-sister, Sayo-ko, who alone has respect for Tetsuya and is perhaps the only one who has real affection for him. The best part of the book, I think, is the first part—the first half—dealing with Tetsuya's unconscious love for Sayo-ko, a love that he conceals from no one but himself, and his rather bungling efforts to shield her from the lecherous wealthy man into whose home mother and sister are willing to thrust her. The last half of the book deals with Tetsuya after his awakening to love for Sayo-ko ;and her love for him is such that it seems best she should leave him, with results quite strongly reminding one of Dostoevski.

The characterizations in this book are excellent. One who knows nothing of intimate Japan may be pardoned for not saying they are lifelike; but they are convincing, and each one stands out with individuality.

"You Never Saw Such a Girl."

One of the misfortunes of being a reviewer is such books as "You Never Saw Such a Girl," by George Weston (Dodd, Mead & Co.) It was published serially in the Saturday Evening Post or the Ladies' Home Journal, I don't know which. But such books usually are.

It is easy enough to say that a reviewer doesn't have to read them. He does. It is easy enough to say he ought to read good books. There are usually many of them left unread—books that he would much prefer to read. And all that explanation about being fair with the publishers and reading this book and that, doesn't apply. The reason that I have to read such books as "You Never Saw Such a Girl" is because it is easy to read; there is nothing to it. When Zangwill or Wells or Somerset Maugham, or Mrs. Watts, or whoever else writes good books, writes one it is sure to be fat; also one is likely to enjoy it and read slowly. And to make this page look businesslike it must have many reviews. So I have to pick on things like this.

It is utterly empty, pretentiously snappy and breezy, deliberately sentimental, venerable of plot, and downright silly. It is one of a hundred, a hundred thousand maybe, just like it. It has one original situation—original, as far as I know—that some motion picture scenario department ought to pay a million dollars for if some other scenario department doesn't steal it first: a girl falls in love with her uncle and there is no moral or legal reason why she shouldn't marry him.

"The Blooming Angel."

Wallace Irwin is one of those authors usually spoken of as "good" because he frankly writes nonsense. He has written a lot of it. Of recent years he has been imitating others who do much the same, and has written novels. Still with the difference that his nonsense is frank.

"The Blooming Angel" (George H. Doran Company) is in spots symptomatic of a severe strain. In these spots Mr. Irwin is likely to resemble his less favored brothers.

As a matter of fact Mr. Irwin seems to have realized that he didn't quite have enough material in his original idea for a novel—as he did have in the previous book, "Venus in the East"—and he rummaged about rather desperately for some manner and means to go on, with the result that snap and sparkle diminished.

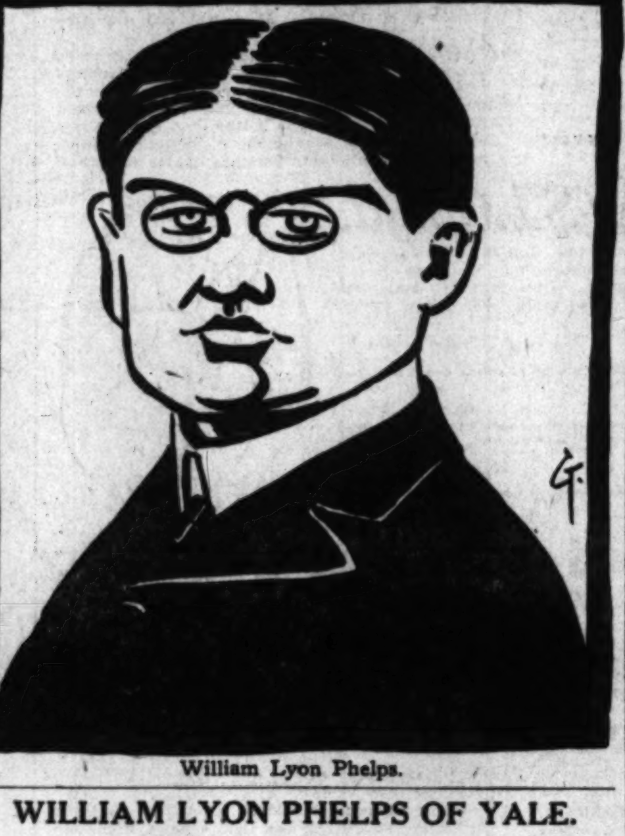
The book starts off gloriously. A Minervaesque creature of a jerkwater college takes a poor boy under her wings with the obvious purpose of making him into a forensic giant, and the femininely veiled purpose of also making him a husband. But the college flirt sees him first. Floss is a girl with a most wonderful complexion and sense enough to know that men do not coquette with brainy women. So she hides her brains. She never reveals them to the public. At the height of his success, not even the husband plucked from under Charlotta's nose, realizes that Floss has made him. It came about this way: Floss was ousted from college because it was too much of a bore to read certain books in which the faculty were interested, so she proposes to the boob, Chester, and takes him out of college. They are happy but hungry. Floss hits upon the idea of selling her complexion secret, and the cosmetic grows and grows until there are millions of young ladies—and others—using it to defeat the intentions of nature. They grow rich, the boob and the flirt, and their story from that time on is largely about their business success and domestic quarrels. It is entertaining, but there are also indications that in one or two places Mr. Irwin must have busted a suspender or pulled loose some buttons in a vital spot. The straining at times is severe.

SHORT STORIES.

FLESH AND PHANTASY. By Newton A. Fuessle. The Cornhill Company, Boston.

It took me scarcely longer than two minutes to decide that Newton A. Fuessle was an affectedly impudent young man, straining past the breaking point for grotesque effects. It would have been all very simple and easy if I had retired at the end of those two minutes, but I continued to nose about through the little book and—well, frankly, I scarcely know what to think now. He is somewhat affected and he does strain for the grotesque—frequently. But he can write, and that is more than most people can do who get their names into books. The short stories are bizarre, but not necessarily what the good people mean by "unwholesome." He has ideas, too, this fellow; and he puts them across in a way one may not like, but cannot evade.

Mr. Fuessle covers a wide range of themes, ranging from love of the more or less conventional type, to the efforts of a farmer to reform—with no love in it, and none missed. Some of the stories are unusually imaginative and, as "The Million Heir," have a queer, humorous "kick" without getting away from human nature.



William Lyon Phelps.

WILLIAM LYON PHELPS OF YALE.

I.

William Lyon Phelps, professor of English literature at Yale, held a course of lectures this summer in Los Angeles.

He is a curious fellow. He is gone now, so one can be frank about him. Unless somebody tipped you off, you would never know that he was a college professor. He looks about forty, is tanned, and without being big of build has a suggestion of huskiness about him, and a good deal more than a suggestion of alertness. He is quick without being at all nervous; brim full of pep—nothing like the college professor, or at least the college professor of tradition. One might reasonably suspect him of being a construction engineer, one of those that bob in and out of jungles, throw bridges across unexplored rivers, and have a lot of fights with savages. He looks adventurous. And he is the professor of English literature at Yale. Colleges have done a lot of harm in the world. They spoiled a good soldier of fortune when a cap and gown was put onto him.

In a way he is adventurous. Critics are very nearly as adventurous as explorers. I mean critics of so much importance that everything they say is listened to by other critics of importance—and others of no importance, reviewers and such; and everything they say is pretty likely to be challenged. Put a man in as professor of English literature of any famous college or university, and the only way he can keep out of trouble is to keep his opinions to himself, like any other mummy or dummy.

Prof. Phelps—the inclination is to forget that he is a professor—gives a lot of lectures, and, worse, writes a lot of books. There is nobody else a reviewer dislikes so much as one who writes many books, that is, one right after another. It puts him in the position of Mrs. Partington with her mop trying to clean up the on-coming tide. Besides, college professors as a matter of principle—or lack of it—are unpopular with reviewers. Many of them are fellows who got run out of college because some professor didn't have a sense of humor. Moreover the younger generation resents the ideas, opinions and presence of the elder. And Prof. Phelps has opinions on current literature, and expresses them. Now a professor isn't supposed to know anything about current literature: his domain is the classical mausoleum where abide the great dead. Prof. Phelps isn't content with mortuary appraisals. He has ideas on books before they even get out to this Coast. He writes of current drama, novelists, poets. He throws his influence into contemporary quarrels and seems to prefer Vachel Lindsay to Amy Lowell. Miss Lowell objects—and so do I. He thinks Archibald Marshall is about as fine a novelist as Anthony Trollope—and the Boston Transcript upholds him, which may do something toward causing him to waver in his opinion. He has no use for Hall Caine—ah, Sir Hall Caine, it now is for some mysterious reason. But then no one else has excepting among those who confer British knighthood. Prof. Phelps says that in reading Harold Bell Wright's books the illustrations at times rather pleased him. But he thinks that Gene Stratton Porter's "A Daughter of the Land" is an amazingly fine novel—and says so publicly, though Mrs. Porter's name is pretty much anathema to the hack reviewers. All that is just a glimmering of the way that Prof. Phelps refuses to keep out of current affairs.

II.

He is probably the busiest man outside of that party which at this season of the year is frantically engaged in plugging up war scandals and making the country "safe" for democracy. I imagine that Prof. Phelps at times feels a little irritated because the Lord made days only twenty-four hours long. He keeps up an enormous correspondence without secretarial aid. He does it by taking a large sheet of paper and writing about three lines in a large, obviously swiftly-written hand, across the page. Each line will perhaps contain two, sometimes three words. But in that handful of words he has said everything. These people who lament the decay of letter writing as an art, and bother because they don't have Walpolean epistles to wander through, would shed tears over his correspondence.

In much the same way he cuts corners when he talks, that is conversationally. No doubt in his lectures he repeats the same thing three or four times, changing the wording around a bit, but patiently driving the points into heads much as the Germans in the early and more prideful days of the war drove nails into the statue of Hindenburg.

III.

My encounter with Prof. Phelps was an interview all right, but it was largely on the wrong side. In the course of a wandering career as a reporter I have interviewed wife-beaters, Presidential candidates, pickpockets and robber barons, all kinds and conditions of men and women, but this professor of English literature at Yale, if he keeps a diary, no doubt recorded on that day something like this: "Met a book reviewer. Found out his opinions on numerous authors, on war, Bolshevism, the salaries paid teachers, why English are more graceful writers than Americans, which team will win the pennant," et cetera.

Ask Prof. Phelps a question and the chances are that he will sit up alertly, and repeat the question, snap out eagerly: "Tell me about it," sit back with an air of alert interest—and listen.

Out on the street I stood by the curb and in something like a daze thought it over. If there was anything that he didn't know about me it was whether my parents came from Ireland or Scotland. He had found out everything else. About all I had was the pleasant memories of an alert auditor.

IV.

But a reviewer is not so easily baffled, for though Prof. Phelps took an early train out of the city the next morning, I am not to be evaded. I am still in a position to put words into his mouth. I have read his books. I have heard what he has told to other people who didn't lay notebooks on their knees and flourish pencils—that is, figuratively anyway.

"People in an indoor climate—one that keeps them indoors," he has said, "read more than people in a climate like this. Perfectly obvious. So I was amazed to find the interest in and familiarity with books shown here. Why, Los Angeles has one of the best bookstores I have ever seen. I mean that—one of the best I have ever seen. . . .

"I like individuality in work. I like to have an author to say what he thinks. His individuality is all he has to give. He may make an ass of himself at times. We all do. But in letting his personality into his work he is putting into it the essence of creation. Conventional, routine work becomes mechanical, inefficient, destroys initiative, personality. . . .

"I never lose an opportunity to slam the magazines. They have done much harm to literature, printing serials that end each installment with a thrill to attract the reader to get the next number. You can't have a really fine book if you must put a 'punch' into it every ten or fifteen thousand words. . . .

"I wish the publishers would quit putting jackets on their books. The first thing I do when I get a book is to throw the jacket away without reading it. It has no business there. I wish they wouldn't use the favorable things I may say about a book on the jacket, but they will do it. To find laudation and praise on a slip-cover often antagonizes intelligent readers. The slip-cover should have the name of the book and author, and a sober statement of the purpose of the book. It helps to know what purpose the author had in mind—whether it is merely to entertain, to present a certain group, or to bring out a certain trait in a certain character. Then one can tell how much of the author's success has been design and how well he has succeeded. . . .

"Gene Stratton Porter, I understand, has sold over seven million copies of her books. The publishers tell me that they have found that at least five people read every book sold. That is, it will average up to that number. I told Mrs. Porter if I could reach thirty-five million people, I wouldn't consider myself an author, but an institution. I know that literary people smile when I praise Mrs. Porter's 'A Daughter of the Land.' But it is astonishingly good. But don't stop with the first fifty pages—read on. They are not so good. . . ."

(Gene Stratton Porter is not to be associated with Eleanor Portër of "Pollyanna" notoriety.)

V.

I don't care much about going to college anyplace—never did. But if I was going on a little wandering trip off some place in search of what is really "higher education," knocking about where there were some discomforts and a lot of fun, I am pretty sure that I would like to be in a party headed by Prof. Phelps. A fine soldier of fortune was surely spoiled when he got a sheepskin.

BOOK NOTES.

Arthur Symons's New Book.

Arthur Symons's new book, "Studies in the Elizabethan Drama," was published August 11 by E. P. Dutton & Co. The volume opens with a study of "Antony and Cleopatra," which he calls "the most wonderful of all Shakespearean plays" and which he thinks is so "mainly because the figure of Cleopatra is the most wonderful of Shakespeare's women—and not of Shakespeare's women only, but perhaps the most wonderful of women." In fascinating charm of style, sanity of judgment, penetrating insight and wide knowledge of literature, no English writing critic surpasses, and it is doubtful if any equals, Arthur Symons. His many American admirers will find in this new volume his ripest work and will welcome it for its illuminating exposition of the Elizabethan drama. Ten of the thirteen chapters deal with as many of Shakespeare's plays and the remaining three with the Elizabethan dramatists, Massinger, Day, Middleton and Rowley. The chapters on "The Question of Henry VIII" make a judicial study of all the obtainable evidence concerning the authorship of that play. The conclusion to which Mr. Symons comes is that "Shakespeare wrote neither the whole nor a part of the play, and that Fletcher did write certain portions of it."

Dirt and Happiness.

In "Mother Love in Action," Prudence Bradish's practical book on child training, she has some very plain things to say about dirt and its relation to a child's well-being. And by dirt she means the homely, wholesome soil of good old Mother Earth. "Mothers are always asking, 'What shall I give or do for my nervous boy or girl?' she says, and continues:

"Give them dirt—'back to the soil'—plenty of it. Let them dig, dig, dig; make mud-pies, build or play with pebbles and stones, and do not nag! Do not bother them about their clothes; let them forget themselves and every one else for a time in playing in real earth.

"How I do pity the dressed-up child who parades in the park with the nurse, who never has a real good, hearty playtime out of doors in the dirt! Out of doors is the place for children to play, just as much and as long as possible."

Harold Bell Wright.

Mr. Mitchell, secretary to Harold Bell Wright, writes:

"I presume you are aware of the coming-out, August 21, of Mr. Wright's latest, "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent." It is an Ozark story. There will be 800,000 in the first run. Before the manuscript was half finished, orders were in for almost 400,000. The publishers' order for paper was about sixty carloads. It takes seven cars to carry 100,000 books. I shall not attempt to figure the pounds of ink used in printing the first edition; nor the gold-leaf for the covers; nor the canvas required; nor the gold-leaf for titling. You do it! By the holidays the run will be 1,000,000."

More Censorships Threatened.

An injunction to restrain the publishers from further printing and distributing Thomas F. Millard's "Democracy and the Eastern Question" is threatened by the United States government, according to a letter received last week from the office of the United States District Attorney in New York by the Century Company, who issued the book a month or so ago. It appears that someone at Washington thinks Mr. Millard has revealed private and confidential matters, though no charge is made that he broke faith with any official. He is not himself an official of the United States government; he is the editor and owner of a periodical published in China, where he has lived for a number of years. He is an American, the author of a number of books, formerly a newspaper man of large reputation.

Mr. Millard's book, "Democracy and the Eastern Question," considers the present economic and political conditions of China, especially with reference to Japan and the Treaty of Versailles. He believes that Japan is not to be trusted, and that she means practically to take possession of China. And naturally he thinks the Shantung affair at Paris and Versailles was—well, not something for Americans to be proud of.

COMPTON LEITH'S "DOMUS DOLOR

BY LEWIS GALANTIERE.

Elsewhere, Mr. Compton Leith has spoken of the "dear wilderness of imagination." In his present book, "Domus Doloris" (Lane,) we find him corporeally reclining in a hospital while his mind treads lightly his beloved wilderness.

For the House of Pain which he is pressed to inhabit, for the ministrants who move about him, doctors and nurses, he has golden words of paean and gratitude. "This service," he beautifully says, "with its humanity and its hold on coming time, needed no common praise. For such high exemplar, the commendation must be lofty and sustained; for a valiance fighting out on all sides toward the future there must be praise of large embrace. . . . For such desert there must be nothing short of panegyric, the praise that the whole people hears. And since it should be a praise sung clear and echoing, some lord of music should begin it, one who should have known the house of pain, and himself lying in the wards, have heard in the time of his own suffering the deep note haunting there, unseizable of the common ear, but of his haply to be captured."

So uncommon an ear is the brave possession of Compton Leith, and if he fail of being lord of music his pen is yet guided in the path of high and reticent beauty, his pages are unmarred by any setting down of common tunes.

Mr. Leith (as has already been variously remarked) is of all men of letters most completely in the school of Pater. His thought does not enfold the world, knowing it everywhere, but follows a tangential trend, touching it only in certain latitudes. In the Grecian Isles it finds a station; it settles itself beneath mediaeval windows in the cool shadow of Gothic walls, an Oxford cloister might tempt this mind into meditation. It finds contentment in the contemplation only of those things that are far from here and now.

His tone, too, as that of his master, is low and well-bred. His style is the perfect spiritual union of thought and word. All the rocks of his verbal landscape have been rounded and tended to save from any shock the retina of the mind.

The hospital ward, however, proves less monastical than the study. In the space of his convalescence his thoughts turn, strangely enough, more upon those about him than upon the varying beauty that has filled the fleeting years of history. And it must have been (he does not say) a novel sensation to this scholar to find himself preoccupied thus constantly with the moving forms of nurses, of chambermaids, of surgeons, of humans, in brief, and not in pondering the Eleusinian mysteries or an interpretation of the sirens' songs Odysseus feared to hear. The man of letters, most properly (most tritely, if you like,) the student of life knowing less rest than the soldier, is here at peace. Echoes come to him of the outer world, of the great war; in great or lesser seriousness he holds open his ears; but his total interest is in the divorce from himself of his ego, in the lesson of service taught in his ward.

I cannot forbear to quote from this book an example of the verbal wizardry by which is created the illusion of reality, of the realism of the spirit, first in the reception of an anaesthetic and later in the emergence of the mind from a state of coma.

"The visible world was gone; sounds followed. The voices which but now were loud in the ears, grew faint as whispers, or as tones of men shouting far away; they were importunate in their faintness; they kept thought strained after a meaning. There had been hope to glide out of consciousness, to float around some bend of time, as a straw on a meadow brook, from the bright light to the dim and thence on into a darkness; but there was slow escape, as it might be through briers, from which, again and again, the caught garment must be freed."

And later:

"Silence had now a presage of some divine approach. Oblivion flowed up like evening gloom. Life moved with it to the edge of a deep; it was drawn over; down and down, wound in the of Sleep."

Emerging from its influence "A faint awareness ing, like the gray of morning; a sense of movement; but it was a coming up and forth, declining. there was no tell. Slowly light increased was resurgence then, a into the embrace of space and It was the most suave and issue from one state to another may be conceived, a cate that had there been wish, the heart would have last forever. It passed.

This book is for the Leith's thought is tive for his state of ness rather than ideas are ripe with a dom, his style, sionally the pellucid highly sustained in is of great purity, and achieved in "Domus Doloris" other distinguished reflection esthetic temperament.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS—
WARTS AND MOLES.

Pulling a few stiff hairs from the face may start a serious growth. Let me demonstrate free of charge how pulling, cutting, using wax depilatories and the so-called hair removers promote growth of hair on the face. My electric machine is the only known method of killing superfluous hair, fuzz warts and moles, without destroying the surrounding tissue. This machine destroys 360 hairs an hour. I have had 19 years' experience and devote all my time to the work. A binding guarantee that any hairs or moles I treat will never return. Many L. A. satisfied customers will testify to my skill as an expert.

Open all day Saturday.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS,
WARTS, MOLES AND BIRTH MARKS
Removed by the Electric Needle.

The only safe and permanent way when done by an expert operator, which means years of practical experience. It makes no difference to me who or what you have tried, I guarantee any hair I treat will never return.

Money and time saved by my method, which is painless and will leave no scars.

ANNA M. BERGERON, 1219-20-21 HAAS BLDG.

MY KEY TO BEAUTY.

Witch Hazel cream will keep your skin clean, really clean, and positively will not encourage the growth of hair. The astringent bleach and powder are guaranteed chemically pure. For sale at H. Jevne Co., or my office.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR—

HUMILIATING AND UNSIGHTLY.

There is only one method known today of permanently removing superfluous hair, and that is Electrolysis (electric needle.) This process in the hands of a reliable and expert operator insures absolute satisfaction. I stand back of my work, and guarantee any hair treated by me will be permanently destroyed, leaving no scars.

MABEL BRENTWOOD SMITH,
With Weaver-Jackson Co.,

LOOK, LISTEN! SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS.

Do not pull hairs or use depilators, as it will start a large growth.

The electric needle is the only sure and safe way of removing hairs permanently.

Have been doing electrolysis many years, and will give written guarantee that hairs will not come back. Can give many references.

If you will call I will gladly demonstrate my method of removing superfluous hair. Miss Gladys Leighton is now at the De Teo Modern Hair Rejuvenating and Beauty Parlors, 608 Broadway Central Bldg., 424 S. BROADWAY.

SAVE THIS ADV.
KINDLY READ THROUGH.

It is our object to master all of the elements that are necessary for a singing artist to know, including diction, phrasing, and interpretation. Only the best music is used. Not a song is learned that could not be used at a dignified concert.

I am giving a special rate in voice culture and singing. Daily lessons may be secured at reasonable tuition where home practice is inconvenient. Voices tried free of charge, and will tell you frankly if it is worth your time and money to study.

I am especially interested in young people's voices, and give a special rate to high-school students or public school teachers.

We have monthly recitals for the benefit of the students, also a sight singing class, to which students are admitted free. Come and talk it over. You will not regret it, and it may mean much to you.

I can be seen today after 9 o'clock.

OPINIONS VARY.

As to the rights of working men but added incentive to motor car buying is found in the inconvenience to which we of L. A. are now subjected. The right of every man to own a car is unquestioned; there remains to the individual only the minor problem of choice and ways and means.

NATASCO means to a used car what Sterling does to silver.

NATASCO reconstructed (rebuilt) cars are good used cars, made new by skilled, cheerful, well-paid mechanics. They are sold to you under guarantee, on most convenient terms and at prices as consistently low as a fair margin of profit permits.

STUTZ—
1918 16-valve touring in Stutz red, black trim., Spanish leather and fitted with new bearings. The practical equivalent of a new car at ....$2550.

HAYNES—
A 1918 man-size chummy roadster, lineal descendant of America's first car. A club a-wheel. The kind of a car that cooks a good fellowship, impossible in the over-spaciousness of a larger one............$1450.

LEXINGTON—
A 1918 Sedan model for the family seeking motor car privacy and distinction. The competence of they who fought and made our early history reflected in the fine workmanship of modern machinery ..$1450.

HUPMOBILE—
The "N" model in America's most rugged car. NATASCO reconstructed (rebuilt) vintaged in 17 when better material was available than at any other time in the history of the automobile industry. A car of long life and utmost satisfaction ..$1450.

GRANT SEDAN—
A lighter, inexpensive type of closed car; built in 1917, engineered by men who believed in overhead valve motor design and whose faith in their product is fully supported by its performance ....$1200.

PAIGE—
The men who first turned this "Paige" in motordom's history, dubbed their product "The most beautiful car in America." We have a 7-pass., sired in 1917. NATASCO reconstructed (rebuilt) at ..$1000.

OVERLAND—
Nearing the half million mark in cars, actually in use, the stamp of public approval, caps the climax to its producers' claims. Here's a 1918 "country club" in perfect condition at ....$890.
In the next week or two we will have many additional cars of all makes and at prices most attractive to prospective car buyers. It might pay you to drop in today or in the next few days and see what we have and how you may, under the NATASCO plan, realize your desire to own a car.

"SAVE THE CONSTITUTION."

Six Fundamental Principles Now Being Undermined, Says Lawyer.

BY JAMES M. BECK.

(Mr. Beck is a former Assistant Attorney-General of the United States and one of the leading lawyers of the country. He was the author of "The Evidence in the Case" and wrote the following article for circulation by the National Security League in its great nation-wide educational propaganda against the menace of Bolshevism.)

How far does public opinion still accept the fundamental principles of the Constitution? This question is of vital importance; for there is no greater error than to suppose that the Constitution has some inherent vitality to insure its perpeutity. The breath of its life is public opinion, and, when that public opinion ceases to support any or all of its fundamental principles, they will perish. Its continued vitality must depend upon the continued and intelligent acceptance of its political philosophy by the people. Human institutions gather no strength from pieces of parchment or red seals. In a democracy, the living soul of any human institution must be the belief of the people in its wisdom and justice. It is true of all human institutions ecclesiastical or political, that the form may often survive the substance of the faith, and while the government which the Constitution brought into being might for a time survive the destruction of its vital spirit, even as a dead oak stands for a while after the sap has failed, yet if the fundament principles of the Constitution ceased to receive popular support, the who edifice will slowly crumble, even though the corporeal entity remains.

The American commonweaith is something more than the mere machinery of government. It is a great spirit, whose principal purpose is to reconcile the authority of law with the rights of the individual as a responsible moral being. The Constitution is not static. It changes from generation to generation, sometimes by formal amendment, more frequently by judicial interpretation, and sometimes by mere usage, and the grave concern of all true Americans must be whether its vital spirit, which should be eternal, shall be slowly destroyed. If so, the best hope of man will perish.

The essential principles of the Constitution of the United States, which together forms its political philosophy, and which, at least at one time, constituted the American doctrine of free government, may be summarized as follows:

The first is representative government. In the discussions before the constitutional convention, all speakers made a distinction between that which they called "democracy" and that which they called "republicanism." By the former they meant direct legislative action by the people, or, as we would say, a pure democracy. By "republicanism" they meant representative government. However much the fathers disagreed upon other questions, they were substantially of one accord in the opinion that direct legislative action by the people was impracticable. They believed that no wise legislative action was possible without conference, and that, in a commonwealth of many scattered communities, such a conference was impracticable, especially in cities where the size of the population made a town meeting impossible.

"GENERAL DISTRUST."

Representative government no longer has the complete acquiesence of the American people. Our constitutional system consists, not only in the Federal Constitution, but also in the organic laws of the forty-eight States of the Union. Together, they comprise the organic law of the American commonwealth. It is to be noted that, in twenty-two States of the Union, the principles of the initiative and referendum, which is clearly antagonistic to the doctrine of representative government, is a part of the organic law of those States, and clearly indicates a very general distrust of the representative principle. It cannot be questioned that if the principle of the initiative and referendum continues to gain faith and is ultimately made a part of the Federal Constitution, representative government will be greatly impaired, and, as a principle, wholly destroyed. For those who solace themselves with the thought that this gives more effective expression to the will of the people, it is well to remember that, in many referendums, it is a minority of the people — generally the proponents of some startling innovation—who triumph at the polls through the failure of the opposition to exercise the right of franchise.

THE DUAL SYSTEM.

The second principle of the Constitution was our dual form of government—and this may be said to have been the basic principle of our system of government. The thirteen colonies were most reluctant to surrender even a portion of their sovereignty to the Federal government. They were widely scattered communities and varied greatly in racial origin and local habits and customs. They were tenacious of the great principle of home rule, and, even when our country did not extend beyond the Alleghenies, there was, on the part of the local communities, a deep-rooted objection to being governed by a central power. Only the immense influence of George Washington triumphed over this feeling of opposition, and his triumph could only be secured by confining the Federal Constitution to those matters of general concern which required of necessity a common rule and which each State was incompetent to determine for itself. For this reason, the tenth amendment, without which the Constitution would not have been adopted, was formulated, providing that all rights not expressly delegated to the Federal government should be reserved forever to the States and the people thereof.

Today there is imperative necessity of adapting, by judicial interpretation or amendment, a rigid constitution to the growing necessities of the most progressive people in the world. But, in doing this, it is not necessary to sacrifice wholly the basic principles of home rule; for, if the principles of home rule be very seriously impinged upon, it will inevitably lead to a spirit of civil strife and possible ultimate disunity.

PROHIBITION.

Whatever opinion one may hold with respect to statutory prohibition, no fair-minded man can question that, in the adoption of the eighteenth amendment—if, indeed, it has been legally adopted—the principle of home rule has suffered a serious, if not fatal, impairment. Nowhere in the Constitution is the slightest trace of a purpose on the part of the fathers to determine questions of individual morality or personal habit. In a country of one hundred millions of people, inhabiting a vast continent, which begins with the edge of the Arctic and ends with the edge of the tropics, and which is inhabited by men of many races and varying social standards, it is, in my judgment, a hazardous experiment to impose by a rigid Constitutional amendment a doubtful principle of morality, which justly offends the pride of individual liberty. Whatever the merits of prohibition may be as a local measure, its adoption as an unbending national principle destroys the symmetery of the Constitution and invades the sacred rights of the States and of the people thereof which the Tenth Amendment was designed to preserve inviolate. I regard the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment as a fatal impairment of the principle of home rule, and, as such, the deadliest menace to the perpetuity of the republic that has risen in the last half century.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY.

The third principle was the guarantee of individual liberty through Constitutional limitations. This marked the great contribution of America to the science of government. In all previous government building, the state was regarded as a sovereign which would grant to individuals or closses, out of its plenary power, certain privileges or exemptions, which were called "liberties."

Thus, the liberties which the barons wrung from King John at Runnymede were virtually exemptions from the power of government Our fathers did not believe in the sovereignty of the state in the sense of absolute power; nor did they believe in the sovereignty of the people in that sense. The word "Sovereignty" will not be found in the Constitution or the Declaration of Independence. They believe that each individual, as a responsible moral being, had certain "inalienable rights" which neither the State nor the people could rightfully take from him. This conception of individualism was wholly new and is the distinguishing characteristic of American Constitutionalism. As to such reserved rights, guaranteed by constitutional limitations and largely by the first ten Amendments to the Constitution, a man, by virtue of his inherent and God-given dignity as a human soul, had rights, such as freedom of the press, liberty of speech and religious freedom, which even one hundred millions of people could not rightfully take from him. The fathers did not believe that the oil of anointing that was supposed to sanctify the monarch and give him infallibility had fallen upon the multitudinous tongue of the people to give it either infallibility or omnipotence. Even the pilgrims on the "Mayflower" had this noble conception of individual liberty; for, while in the famous compact they agreed to abide by the rule of the majority, it was with the qualification that the laws to be passed by the majority should be "just and equal." This theory of government gave a new dignity to manhood. It exalted the human soul as no previous governmental institution had ever done. It said to the State: "There is a limit to your power. This far and no further and here shall thy proud waves be stayed."

This principle has been challenged by the recall of judicial decisions; which, if ever generally adopted, would mean the potential destruction of all constitutional limitations.

The only method of guaranteeing to the individual his reserved rights as against the power of the State or the people was in making the judiciary a city of refuge for the man against whom the destruction of his inalienable rights was sought to be inflicted. In vain, however, would be such decisions and impotent and helpless would be the individual if, when the judiciary had decided that a given law which unduly trespassed upon individual rights and thereby violated the Constitution, the people, by a mere majority vote could nullify the decision is a fatal negation of constitutional government and might make of it little less than "a scrap of paper."

THE JUDICIARY.

Closely allied to this doctrine of limited governmental powers even by a majority, is the fourth principle of an independent judiciary. It is the balance wheel of the Constitution, and, to function, it must be beyond the possibility of attack and destruction. The recall of judges is obviously fatal to such independence. Judges are at best human and are already swayed to some extent by the tides of popular opinion; but it is obvious that, if a judge in protecting the reserved rights of an individual by a decision, could by popular vote be dragged from the bench and the ermine soiled in the mire of popular disgrace, then the court would be as little able to defend popular rights as though an armed mob were in the court room and exercised its duress. Indeed, there are many judges who would fearlessly face mob violence in a court room; but who would be influenced by the far greater duress of personal disgrace.

These principles are of inestimable value in preserving property rights against socialistic or Bolshevist attacks. Our country was founded upon the rock of property rights and the sanctity of contracts. Both the nation and the several States are forbidden to take away life, liberty or property "without due process of law." This is the very palladium of our liberties. It is as old as Magna Charta; for "due process of law" is but a paraphrase of "the law of the land," without which no freeman could be deprived of his liberties or possessions.

"DUE PROCESS OF LAW."

"Due process of law" means that there are certain fundamental principles of liberty, not defined or even enumerated in the Constitution, but having their sanction in the free and enlightened conscience of just men, and that no man can be deprived of life, liberty or property, or of his right to the pursuit of happiness, except in conformity with the fundamental decencies of liberty. It is the contradiction of Bolshevism, which means the unrestrained rule of the majority.

In vain, however, the fifth and fourteenth amendments, each guaranteeing the individual from ruin "without due process of law," if the principle of Constitutional limitations shall be destroyed by the recall of judicial decisions and the independence of the judiciary shall be impaired by the recall of judges. It is no answer that such departures from our system of government have not yet had serious effects; for the old spirit of ordered liberty, supported by an intelligent public opinion, still prevents the exercise of these potential instruments of oppression.

More than half a century ago, Macaulay wrote to Randall, the biographer of Thomas Jefferson, that our system of government would prove effective as long as we had vast areas of unoccupied land. But he added that when all available land was occupied, when our cities became congested, when we had our Manchesters, Birminghams, Liverpools and Londons, then "spoliation would follow spoliation." The voice of the few pleading for property rights and the sanctity of contract would be submerged in the angry demands of the majority, intent upon a new distribution of property through the forms of law. He added: "Your Constitution is all sail and no anchor." Time was when the prediction seemed an idle one; but when the spirit of the referendum and the recall becomes the true doctrine of America, then in truth it will come to pass, as the great essayist predicted, that our Constitution will be "all sail and no anchor." When it thus drifts from its ancient moorings, it will be little better than a derelict, moving hither and thither on a stormy sea of class passion and without chart, compass or anchor.

"CHECKS AND BALANCES."

The fifth fundamental principle was a system of governmental checks and balances whereby it was sought so to divide official authority and responsibility that power should never be concentrated in one man, or even in one branch of the government. The founders of the republic were not enamoured of power. They had just thrown off the tyranny of a king. As they viewed human history, the worst evils of government were due to undue concentration of power. Undoubtedly their belief in the policy of dividing power was due to Montesquieu's philosophy as set forth in his "The Spirit of the Laws," and his doctrine was written with the experience of France, where all legislative and executive power had been centered in a monarch who could say: "L'etat, c'est moi." Undoubtedly such concentration made for efficiency, but it also made for tyranny.

Here again, the fathers, living in a simpler age, did not adequately realize that no arbitrary division can be too rigidly made between the executive, the legislative and the judicial branches of the government; nor indeed, did they attempt to draw an absolute line of demarkation. For instance, the executive, with the veto, was given an important legislative function; but the legislative branch, and especially the Senate, was vested with important executive powers.

Moreover, the governmental machinery, with the increasing complexity of life, became so intricate that many important delegations of legislative power to executive bureaus became inevitable to make the different parts of the machine function with efficiency. No one can now say that we have yet reached the final adaptation of our system of checks and balances to the imperative needs of an efficient government.

During the present war, the concentration of authority in the executive branch of the government has been inevitable. The principle, however, remains, but it is subject to ever-increasing and more successful challenge. The fathers intended the legislative department of the government to be the most important. The development of the Constitution has made the executive the preodminant influence. It is idle to quarrel with this tendency, for it is a part of the evolution of the Constitution; but the protest of the Constitution against one-man power still remains, and should not be disregarded.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The sixth fundamental principle was a concurrent power of the Senate and the Executive over the foreign relations of the government. Nothing, excepting the principle of home rule, was of deeper concern to the framers of the Constitution, and in nothing did they make a more radical departure from all existing forms of government. When the Constitution was framed, every government of Europe, except Switzerland, was a monarchy, and it was the accepted principle that whatever control Parliaments or other legislative bodies had over domestic concerns, the right to determine the foreign relations of the government, including the issues of peace and war, was the exclusive prerogative of the sovereign. In England, the freest of all government at that time, the only check on the power of the King to select the diplomatic representatives of the government, to make treaties, and generally to determine the issues of peace and war, was the power which the House of Commons had over the purse of the nation. If the King had the necessary means to make war without a Parliamentary grant, he was free to do so. But, as he rarely had sufficient means, he was generally dependent upon Parliament for the necessary grants. Many of the greatest struggles for English liberty concerned the rights of the King to exact money without Parliamentary grant, in order to carry on wars in which his dynasty was engaged.

The colonies were not willing to grant such a power to the old confederation, except with the consent of nine States, and, when the Constitutional Convention, it was at first resolved that the power to appoint ambassadors, ministers and consuls, and to make treaties, should be vested exclusively in the Senate, as the body that most directly and equally represented the constituent States. It was, however, recognized by these practical men that the Senate was not always in session, and in any event that it was not so easy for a body consisting originally of twenty-six men to negotiate treaties with advantage; and therefore it was finally resolved that the President should, "with the advice and consent of the Senate," appoint ambassadors, ministers and consuls, and make treaties; but that, if a declaration of war was contemplated, only the concurrence of both houses of Congress could authorize such a declaration.

MODEL OF STYLE.

The language of the Constitution was drawn with the greatest precision. It is a model of literary style. In it, there is no tautology, not even a wasted word, and when, therefore, the Constitution made necessary the "advice and consent of the Senate," something more than a mere ratification of an appointment or of a treaty was in contemplation. The word "advice" clearly meant co-operation with the executive in an advisory capacity before a conclusion was reached and the nation, to some extent, morally committed.

It was the undoubted intention of the fathers to make the Senate the final treaty-making power, and, as such, to enable it, at any stage of the negotiations, either to propose a treaty in contemplation, to determine the suitability of those who were appointed to negotiate a treaty, to advise with the President at any stage of the negotiations, and, finally, to consent to, or reject, or to amend, any tentative draft. The President was thus the agent of the Senate in negotiating a treaty; but, through usage, which may have some justification, he has been freely given in practice the initiative to such an extent that precedent no longer requires him to discuss preliminarily with the Senate the terms of a treaty before he tentatively offers it to another nation. Nevertheless, some co-operation between the executive and Congress is necessary, lest an unseemly deadlock should arise to the embarrassment of the nation if it is called upon to reject that which was tentatively offered in its name by the Executive, and to avoid this unfortunate result, it has been the practice of the Executive for many years, in all important foreign questions, to consult with the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate, so that he could be reasonably satisfied that the Senate would ratify that which the Executive offers to another nation in the name of America.

AN INCORRECT VIEW.

There are students of the Constitution who have held that in its development the Senate's function in the treay-making power is little more than to ratify that which the executive has negotiated. The most forceful statement of this theory is found in President Wilson's "Constitutional Government in the United States," which reads as follows:

"The President cannot conclude a treaty with a foreign power without the consent of the Senate, but he may guide every step of diplomacy; and to guide diplomacy is to determine what treaties must be made if the faith and prestige of the He need disclose no step of a negotiation until it is complete; and, when in any critical matter it is completed, the government is virtually committed. Whatever its disself committed also."

That this view cannot be correct and was not so intended is plainly shown by the fact that no treaty can be entered into unless two thirds of the Senate concur in its wisdom. To our fathers, the chief inclination, the Senate may feel itdifference between a monarchy and a republic, was that in a republic a treaty-making power required the assent of representatives of all sections and parties. Hence the refusal to vast authority even in a majority of the Senate.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Current events show that the Senate has not abdicated its great duty under the express language of the Constitution. Let us hope that the Senate, in its consideration of the far-reaching proposal of a League of Nations, will take such action, either in its acceptance, rejection or amendment, as it thinks best without dividing on party lines, for the question is infinitely above party. If it failed to exercise its own judgment, it would set a precedent which in the future would go far to put the destinies of this mighty nation in its foreign relations in the exclusive control of one man. Nothing was farther from the intention of the fathers, and as America is now the first power of the world and is destined to play the most potential part in shaping its destinies, it is vitally important that any decision which affects the future relations of this government with the rest of the world should have the consideration and approval, not merely of the Chief Magistrate, but of that body of Congress which, in a peculiar way, represents the forty-eight sovereign commonwealths of the Federal Union. Our foreign relations should rise above party politics, and the best method of bringing this about is to have the Senate resume its full authority as the final treaty-making power.

These are the six fundamental principles of the Constitution. It may be suggested that the challenge to these six fundamental principles is not a very serious one, and that no real concern need be felt as to their continued efficacy. This quite ignores the fact that there are important bodies of men, numbering hundreds of thousands of voters, who challenge some or all of these principles.

Indeed, in the period from 1914 to 1917, seventy-nine amendments to the Constitution were proposed, relating to twenty-four different subjects, most of them being subversive of one or more of the principles of the Constitution.

"ETERNAL VERITIES."

I do not claim that the Constitution is a perfect instrument. The fathers themselves recognized their own fallibility or they would not have made provision for its amendment; but I do contend that its fundamental principles are eternal verities, and cannot be impaired or destroyed without reducing the noble fabric to a cureless ruin.

Unless the present tendency to change the Constitution by amendment, interpretation or usage, is checked by a sound public opinion, it will one day become a noble and splendid ruin, like the Parthenon, but, like the Parthenon, useless for practical purposes, and only an object of melancholy interest. It is sadly true that the Constitution is being slowly undermined by forces which, if not checked, will result in its subversion. Let all patriotic Americans take up the cry, "Save the Constitution!"

The Constitution rests upon public opinion. When that ceases to support it the end will be at hand. While the scarcely-veiled antagonism to its principles is serious, a graver aspect is the profound ignorance and indifference of even educated Americans with respect to America's greatest contribution to the science of government. Even in our higher institutions of learning it is amazing how few of their graduates have a real knowledge of either the history or the provisions of the Constitution. They may know its most important provisions in a perfunctory way, as they know the rules of parliamentary law, but the profound political philosophy which brought it into being and the basic principles which underlie it are not familiar to our college graduates. For my part, I would make it a rule in every college and university that no man shall graduate or receive a degree, no matter how elective the course may be or what specialty he is studying, unless he can pass a real examination, with respect to the history and provisions of the Federal Constitution.

"DANGER NEVER GREATER."

The danger was never greater than in this hour, when in every country there is a revolt against accepted principles of government. Indeed, the future historian may say that the first quarter of the twentieth century was marked by a revolt against the past in all departments of human life. One can see this tendency in literature, art, music, sociology and political government. Everywhere there is a craze for innovation; everywhere hostility to that which has the sanction of the past.

This nation has spent its treasure like water, and, what is infinitely more, the blood of its gallant youth, to make "the world safe for democracy." The task is accomplished; but, in the mighty reaction from the supreme exertions of the war, it is now apparent to thoughtful men that a new problem confronts mankind—and that is, to make democracy safe for the world. Kaiserism has been haled to the bar of civilization and has been convicted and sentence of execution pronounced. And now the world is slowly perceiving that democracy is also on trial, charged by its foes with unduly restraining the will of the majority to inflict their will upon the inalienable rights of the individual, and, by its friends, with inefficiency.

In this period of popular fermentation, the end of which no man can predict, the Constitution of the United States, with its fine equilibrium between efficient power and individual liberty, still remains the best hope of the world. If it should perish, the cause of true democracy would receive a fatal wound and the best hopes of mankind would be irreparably disappointed.

TRANSYLVANIANS GIVE WELCOME TO ROYALTY

KING AND QUEEN OF RUMANIA MAKE TRIUMPHAL PROGRESS THROUGH COUNTRY.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

HERMANNSTADT (Transylvania) June 20.—Enthnographic parades in which the people were dressed in clothing of a thousand varieties were some of the picturesque features of the recent visit of King Ferdinand and Queen Marie to Transylvania, formerly part of Hungary, but lately conquered by Rumanian troops.

Four million Rumanians of Transylvania had looked forward for years for this time to come when the country in which they lived would again be reunited to Rumania and they saw in the coming of the King and Queen evidence that this was accomplished.

In quaintness, originality and color the parades held in many cities and towns for the benefit of the King and Queen could hardly be exceeded. The clothing worn by the peasants had changed, but little with the passing centuries. Some looked as though they had stepped out of the Bible. They wore sackcloth, homespun, leather, wooden shoes, the loose shirt with flowing sleeves worn by the old Romans, leather girdles for carrying weapons, highly colored sashes and shawls, beaded aprons, and buckskin moccasins.

Queen Marie, radiant and happy was the idol of all. Beside her stood her favorite child, the little Princess Ileyana, a prototype of her beautiful mother. King Ferdinand was dressed in the uniform of a general.

To the Associated Press correspondent, who was the only newspaper man accompanying the royal party, he said the cheers of the thousands as they marched past compensated him for the trials of the war.

In addition to the parades there were numerous displays resembling the county fairs of America. The farmers and their wives showered the King, Queen and Princess with gifts. Those of the Queen included rugs, towels, tablecloths, cushions, sashes, shawls, ornaments and crucifixes.

Princess Ileyana received all kinds of gifts including live lambs and rabbits.

MEXICO THREATENING DRY ZONE ON BORDER.

THIRSTY CITIZENS OF UNITED STATES MAY HAVE TO TRAVEL FAR FOR OASIS.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

MEXICO CITY, July 20.—Thirsty residents of the United States who hope to find an oasis in Mexico may be disappointed. A Cabinet member whose influence will be felt in the drafting of "dry" regulations was recently quoted in the Excelsior as saying that it may be necessary for the Mexican government to establish a "dry" zone at least ten kilometers deep along the entire length of the United States boundary.

Intimation was also given that the government is prepared to move immediately against persons who are reported to be selling liquor to Americans, using Mexican territory as their base of operations.

A question which is said to be giving officials here much concern is whether United States brewers and distillers shall be allowed to transport their plants, together with their stocks of goods, to Mexico. No official action has been taken on that phase of the question.

Prohibition as a nation-wide measure is commencing to attract attention. Gen. P. Elias Calles, Governor of the State of Sonora, recently revived several "dry" laws and announced they would be enforced. These regulations provide severe punishment for persons convicted of the illegal sale of liquor. The Legislature of the State of Campeche has discussed "dry" measures for some time, but it is improbable drastic action will be taken inasmuch as Gov. Joaquin Mucel has asked that instead of a "bone dry" law there be enacted measures regulating the manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

UNITE TO FIGHT LANDLORDS.

The war that is being waged by more than 25,000 householders throughout the city against landlords and constables to prevent ejectment from their homes because of refusal to pay alleged exorbitant increase in rents resulted in the Tenants' Protective Association of Pennsylvania filing a petition in the Common Pleas Court asking for a charter.

This is the first legal step of its kind for judicial sanction to an organization to fight alleged rent profiteering, and from the papers filed members will be sought from all quarters of the city and possibly throughout the State. The legal move indicates bitter opposition to the actions of some landlords and their attempts to evict when their demands are not met.

According to the papers filed, the association was formed to "secure the betterment of rental conditions, particularly in Philadelphia and throughout the State; of aiding its members and encouraging the same to build their own homes, and to obtain for the members an increased strength and solidarity in negotiating and moving for the betterment of rental and housing conditions."—[Philadelphia Ledger.

ITALY WILL EXCHANGE IDEAS WITH AMERICA.

EDUCATORS WILL EXCHANGE VIEWS ON SOCIAL HYGIENE FOR RACE BETTERMENT.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

ROME, July 8.—International exchange in the form of the newest and most practical ideas in social hygiene and education as a means of arriving at the greatest good for both Italy and America is the object of a plan projected by Dr. William C. White, of Pittsburgh, head of the American Red Cross Commission on Tuberculosis for Italy. Dr. White believes that what America could give to Italy in the way of constructive social welfare suggestions would be offset by Italy's successful adventures in the realm of industrial training.

"There is no doubt that Italy could furnish enough ideas for American assimilation to more than provide for the 'balance of trade' in this exchange," said Dr. White to The Associated Press correspondent. "We have found that Italy has made immense progress in education and can truly teach us many lessons. On the other hand she can learn from us methods of social hygiene, sanitation and social welfare which at present she has hardly developed.

"There could be established between the two countries a real exchange of these factors which mean so much in the happiness of the lives of the industrial groups. Before the war, America received over 500,000 Italians a year. If they had come to America with American standards of housing, sanitation and all the innumerable things which American workmen enjoy, America would have been spared the money and effort of having to educate the Italians in these ideas in America.

"The whole thing is a reasonable business proposition. If we expect to draw a vast labor supply from Italy, then it is to our interest to see that we handle our human element in a human and economic way. We would save money by organizing in Italy American methods for social ills. The Italians would do it themselves and need only to be shown the way. Besides the missionary side of it, the sacrifice side of it, there is truly a business side and it is truly American business. America is in the potential position to carry on this work in Italy and to get in return its vast trade and its own experiences in successful industrial training schools."

Y.W.C.A. CARES FOR YANKS' FRENCH WIVES

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

ST. NAZAIRE (France) July 8.—French brides of American soldiers on their way from France to their new homes in America are entertained in the hostess house until they and their husbands are ready to go on board a steamer. Thus far, eighty-one of these newly made American wives have been taken care of in this temporary home for brides.

The work of caring for them is conducted by the Young Women's Christian Association, with [illegible] workers, under the charge of Miss Mary Fay. The house was opened May 1, and is located in a grove of trees outside the limits of the men's camp.

The wives, many of whom have never been more than twenty miles from their homes before, are met at the station with an automobile and taken to the Hostess House, where they are given a thorough physical inspection, teeth examined and any necessary work to be done on them is here done. After this they are given the opportunity to bathe, change their clothing and are assigned a bed in one of the spick-and-span dormatories. Their time from then on until the time they board the boat is chiefly occupied in learning the English language, sewing and exercises and recreations of various kinds in the mornings and with their husbands in the afternoons.

Ten days is the average time each girl spends in this camp. From here she is taken directly to the boat where she again meets her husband, he having been transferred from his organization to a casual company so that they can take the same boat back. That the government is doing everything in its power to make their life while still in the army a happy one is very evident.

A month ago it was estimated that accommodations for fifty-five would be ample for this camp. That was less than a month ago. Today there are accommodations for 150 and more barracks are being built. The Fifteenth Cavalry alone brought thirty-one newly-married men and their wives. And now that the service of supply troops are going through here so fast it is suspected that the Hostess House may be swamped, for these troops, unlike the combat troops, have been stationed in one place most of their time over here and have had the opportunity to woo and wed some dainty French girls.

COAST SHIP TONNAGE WILL REACH 3,721,524

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—The three Pacific Coast States of Washington, Oregon and California will have contributed 3,721,524 deadweight tons of ships at the close of the 1919 building programme, according to the approximate figures given out here today by the United States Shipping Board. In all, 681 ships will have been added to the American merchant marine since the intensive war-time shipbuilding began to "bridge the Atlantic" in the battle waged against the German submarines.

Steel and wooden ships to the number of 315, with a tonnage of 2,336,986, is the estimated production of Washington and Oregon shipyards from the beginning of the 1919 programme to the completion of the 1919 programme. Of these, 245 are wood and seventy-three of wood.

In California the total tonnage of steel vessels to be constructed to the end of 1919 is 1,192,838. Of wooden vessels, constructed or under construction, California's contribution is twenty-eight, with a total deadweight tonnage of 177,666. Concrete ships are represented by 15,000 tons.

The first move by the United States authorities here to seize foodstuffs was made today. Francis M. Wilson, United States attorney, issued a libel to permit the seizure of 75,000 pounds of beans stored in the West Bottoms. It was reported at the Federal Building that other seizures will be made.

Mayor Cowgill's statement yesterday that he would appoint a commission to investigate high rent profiteering, brought a great many complaints to the Mayor's office today. DEPOSED PRESIDENT OF COSTA RICA TO EUROPE

TINOCO AND ENTIRE HOUSEHOLD ARRIVE AT KINGSTON VERY MUCH DEPRESSED.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

KINGSTON, (Jamaica) Aug. 16.—Federico Tinoco, who recently abandoned the Presidency of Costa Rica and fled the country, arrived here today on board the steamer Zacapa, en route to Europe. He said several attempts had been made to assassinate him and that his brother, Jose, Minister of War, was shot in the back of the head the night before the President left and died later.

The entire household of the former President accompanied him, and the widow of his brother was in the party. All were much depressed.

Senor Tinoco expressed chagrin at the failure of the United States to recognize Costa Rica.

Frank Jiminez, Costa Rican Minister to France, who was in the party, said that the Nicaraguan government was responsible for the assassination of the Minister of War and for repeated attempts on the latter's life. He added that Nicaragua was likewise responsible for the successive revolutions to overthrow the Costa Rican government, which in the past had been successfully put down.

Costa Rica, according to Senor Jiminez, was in a state of great unrest, business was at a standstill and American investments were unsettled.

MANAGUA (Nicaragua) Aug. 16.—Revolutionists in Costa Rica, according to information received here, are insisting upon the reestablishment of the constitutional government as it existed prior to the coup d'etat that overthrew the government of Alfredo Gonzalez in January, 1917.

YANK ARMY TO LEAVE KRUPP HUNTING LODGE

CARETAKER SHYLY ADMITS TOW-HEADED CHILDREN LOVE AMERICANS.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

COBLENZ, Friday, Aug. 15.—The hunting lodge of Bertha Krupp, the palace of the Prince of Wied and many castles of note will be vacated in the next few days by the First Division of the American army, which today began entraining for Brest, being the last division to leave the Rhine for the United States.

The territory on the east bank of the Rhine held by the Americans since December is rich in history, having been occupied at various times by the Romans, French, Spanish, Swedes and again by the French and by the Americans. Half the American bridgehead area will once more be turned over to the French.

All American civilians who visited the occupied area have been taken to the Krupp lodge and to the palace of the Prince of Wied, near Neuwied, as the two most interesting bridgehead sights.

The lodge caretaker began preparing for Frau Krupp's visit as soon as the soldiers left, and the faithful servants had no hesitancy in saying they were glad the Americans had gone and hoped they would never come back. The caretaker, however, shyly admitted that his tow-headed children loved the Americans and the first night after their departure cried themselves to sleep because the doughboys had gone away.

DAYLIGHT SAVING REPEAL UP AGAIN.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Republican Leader Mondell announced today that the House would vote next Tuesday on the passage of the daylight saving repeal over President Wilson's veto.

Proponents of the repeal, while in a majority, are doubtful whether they can obtain the two-thirds majority necessary to override the veto.

RADICALS' THREATS WORRY PUBLIC MEN.

BOMB IN WASHINGTON GROCERY KEEPS NEWSPAPER PHONES BUSY.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—That the threats of radicals to destroy the government by force, as illustrated by the attempt on the life of Atty.-Gen. Palmer and other officials some weeks ago has not been forgotten in official circles in Washington was evident early this morning.

Soon after midnight a bomb explosion wrecked a grocery store owned by L. Bailey, at Twenty-fourth and I streets, N.W. The noise of the explosion could be heard throughout the residential section of Washington.

Newspaper offices were soon being bombarded by inquiries over the telephone, made by officials, including several Senators and Congressmen who asked anxiously if the anarchists had begun their reign of terror again.

One newspaper office reported that it had a telephone call for one official every three minutes during the half hour following the explosion.

The police report that no one was injured. They say that the explosion was not the work of radicals but probably was due to a personal quarrel of some kind.

OAKLAND SHOPMEN'S VOTES FAVOR STRIKE.

OFFICIALS CLAIM MAJORITY INSISTS ON WALKOUT AUGUST 24TH.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

OAKLAND, Aug. 16.—Sentiment overwhelming in favor of a general strike is reported by officials of the railroad shopcrafts, voting today on the walkout, scheduled for August 24 unless international officials at Washington come to an agreement with Director-General Hines.

Local unions of the crafts involved began voting last night, and, according to George Parsons, in charge of this district during the absence of President H. A. Jones in Portland, the men favor a strike unless their wage demands are granted. Feeling is general, however, that recourse to the strike will not have to be made and that the international officers will gain their points before midnight, August 24, when the general walkout is scheduled.

REACH CRISIS IN SAN FRANCISCO TAX FIGHT.

FAILURE TO FIX LEVY HALTS ALL STREET REPAIRS; 600 MEN OUT OF WORK.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—As the result of a deadlock in the San Francisco Board of Supervisors over the fixing of the tax levy, the City Board of Public Works today ordered more than 600 employees laid off tonight. The street repair department will be entirely suspended by today's action.

Three rates, $3.08, $2.99 and $2.34 have been proposed. If "the very small minority" force adoption of the $2.34 rate, according to Ralph McLeran, chairman of the Board of Supervisors' Finance Committee, "the city will have to abandon every improvement that has been planned in response to public demand."

PORTLAND GETS BID FROM HAMBURG FIRM.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Aug. 16. — A bid from a large import firm in Hamburg, Germany, for immediate resumption of trade relations with Portland export firms, was received yesterday by the Portland Chamber of Commerce. The communication declares that Germany is desirous of receiving imports of certain raw materials that her home industries may be put on a producing basis.

"The past war," reads the communication, "having caused the greatest changes and revolutions in foreign and in home trade, has also shown much influence on the import and export of Germany. We intend to take up the importation from America as soon as possible and to get good agencies of American factories of all industries. Up to now we have not had the right business relations."

CZECHO-SLAVS CAPTURE AUSTRIAN BORDER POST

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

VIENNA, Thursday, Aug. 14.—Czecho-Slovak forces today occupied the bridgehead at Pressburg, about 33 miles east of Vienna on the border between Austria and Hungary. No resistance was offered.

Sigmund Kunifi, who was Minister of Education under the Bela Kun dictatorship, has been arrested at Pressburg with a false passport in his possession.

FAIL TO AVERT BIG NEW YORK CAR STRIKE.

FOURTEEN THOUSAND MEN ON SUBWAYS AND ELEVATED WILL WALK OUT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Eleventh-hour efforts made at a conference late today to avert a strike at 4 o'clock tomorrow morning on the subway and elevated lines of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company in Manhattan and the Bronx proved futile.

At 4 o'clock, the hour set by the Interborough Brotherhood for a satisfactory reply to its ultimatum demanding a 50 per cent. wage increase, the representatives of the organization walked out of the conference room at the City Hall, shouting, "Good-by. The roads will be tied up in the morning."

Corporation Counsel Burr and attorneys of the Interborough tonight were seeking a Supreme Court Justice who would sign an order enjoining union officials from making the strike order effective, but, even if such an order were obtained, it was admitted, there was little hope of blocking the walkout.

Frank Hedley, general manager of the Interborough, said every effort would be made to give service, but added that the best possible service would be very "slim," as fully 95 per cent. of the company's employees are members of the union.

This would leave about 700 men loyal to the company, which number, Mr. Hedley said, would not be augmented by nonunion workers.

Mayor Hylan has ordered Police Commissioner Enright to furnish the company with full protection in its efforts to run trains, and Corporation Counsel Furr, in a statement, declared trains would be run "if it takes the entire police force of New York and the military and naval forces of the State to do it."

The injunction suit by which it is hoped to end the strike, or to make it less effective, will allege that the brotherhood violated a contract calling for arbitration of all differences.

Strike orders calling out 14,000 men belonging to fifty-two local unions of the Brotherhood of Interborough Rapid Transit Employees were issued tonight by P. J. Connolly, acting president of the organization. The orders will go into effect at 4 a.m. tomorrow, he said, completely tying up subway and elevated railway service in Manhattan, the Bronx, Queens and a part of Brooklyn.

The men rejected an offer of a 10 per cent. increase in wages, demanding a flat increase of 50 per cent.

HUNS REFUSE RECALL OF GENERAL GOLTZ.

GERMAN NOTE TELLS ALLIES NOT TO INTERFERE IN LETVIAN POLICY.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BERLIN, Friday, Aug. 15.—Germany in its note refusing the Allied demand to recall Gen. Von der Goltz, the German commander in the Baltic, denies the charge that the German evacuation of Letvia has been delayed purposely and says that it is being proceeded in accordance with the plan arranged at a conference between the German commander and the British general, Gough, the Allied commander on July 19.

Germany, the note adds, cannot meet any demands going beyond Article XII of the armistice. The demand for the recall of Gen. Von der Goltz, it is asserted, is an encroachment on the authority of Germany which reserves the right to recall the general when the evacuation of Letvia is sufficiently advanced. The note adds that great bitterness has been caused among the German volunteers in the Baltic region by the failure of the Ullman government in Letvia to grant Lettish citizenship to soldiers who desire it.

The German government warns the Allies against increasing the present possibilities of friction in Letvia by an overhasty withdrawal of the German troops.

The German government has addressed a note to the Peace Conference, it was learned here today, asking that negotiations on certain questions affecting the internationalization of Danzig be commenced as soon as possible.

The people of Danzig, the note says, are anxious that its new constitution be drafted as soon as possible and that the city's relations with Poland be determined.

WIFE CONFIDENT OF NEW MOONEY TRIAL

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Mrs. Rena Mooney, having returned from a four months' speaking tour of the country, left today for San Quentin, where her husband, Thomas J. Mooney, is serving a life term in the State prison for murder growing out of the Preparedness Day bomb explosion here in July, 1916.

Mrs. Mooney said she was confident the proposed Congressional investigation of the inquiry made by John B. Wensmore, director of employment for the Department of Labor, would bring a new trial for Mooney.

SUES ON PATENT.

Willis J. [BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Records made public today show war contracts awaiting liquidation amount to more than $2,000,000,000, although 80 per cent. of the emergency commitments of the government have been settled. It is estimated that payments of $326,000,000 will be required to settle the remainder.

Operations of the army reclamation service resulted in a clear saving to the government of $62,286,000, another report showed.

HOME-MADE WINE IS STILL WITHIN THE LAW.

PROHIBITION BILL REDRAFT IS ONLY CHANGED TO RING WAR BEER KNELL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The House prohibition enforcement bill as redrafted by a subcommittee was ordered favorably reported to the Senate today by the Judiciary Committee. It is planned to call the measure up for debate in the Senate late next week.

There was no record vote in the committee. Some members reserved the right to offer individual admendments, but a formal minority report is not expected.

No important change was made by the committee in the redraft, submitted recently by its subcommittee. The provision defining "intoxicating" beverages as these containing one-half or more per cent. of alcohol and all other major features of the subcommittee draft were adopted.

The only change of moment was a definition of a "dwelling," which under the bill would include residences, apartments, hotels or similar places of abode. The provision permitting individual storage and consumption of intoxicants was retained, as was the subcommittee amendment authorizing home manufacture of light wines and cider.

ALLEGE DEACON HAS STOLEN CITY FUNDS.

NOGALES AUTHORITIES SEEK MISSING TOWN CLERK IN SOUTH AMERICA.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NOGALES, Aug. 16.—W. H. Smith, deacon of the Baptist Church, former Town Clerk of Nogales and oil stock promoter, is being sought by members of the Town Council who today were informed by expert accountants auditing the books of the city that Smith is sixteen thousand five hundred and twenty-two dollars in arrears. Bracey Curtis, president of the First National Bank and Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Town Council, notified the bonding company of the shortage. An attachment suit was filed by the town of Nogales through City Attorney Purdum against Smith, who is said to have fled to South America.

It is alleged in the attachment suit complaint that Smith collected money. He is alleged to have embezzled and made no return of any part thereof to the Town Treasurer. Smith resigned from his office of Town Clerk under fire when the Sheriff and Town Marshall discovered a quantity of whisky in his house. At that time Smith was charged with being the head of a bootlegging gang of the Arizona border. When arrested as a bootlegger, the congregation of the Baptist Church, of which he was leading deacon, protested against the action of authorities. Many prominent citizens alleged to have signed notes for Smith have appealed to officers to locate him. John Schleimer, a business associate, filed an attachment for $8500 this afternoon, alleging Smith owed him that amount on promisory notes. A suit of attachment for $25,000 has been filed against Smith at Tucson on an oil deal. Smith was promoter of the Burke Leader Oil Company, lately taken over by William Moeur, State Land Commissioner, and others of Phoenix. It is stated that the stock of the Burke Leader Company was juggled by Smith.

The pioneer plane left yesterday to act as scout and send back information regarding landing places. Lieut. George T. Wise is pilot of the second machine.

Four more airplanes of the recruiting unit began their trans-continental flight a short time after the second machine left Hazelhurst Field. The planes got away only a few seconds apart. Their first stopping place, like that of the other machines, will be Bustleton Field, Philadelphia.

Two other pathfinder planes are expected to leave tomorrow.

FIRST WARSHIPS TO VISIT BALBOA.

ORANGE COUNTY ENTERTAINS MEN OF THE NAVY AT BANQUET.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

BALBOA, Aug. 16.—Today marked a new epoch in the history of Newport harbor. This evening saw the first government war vessel inside Newport Bay, the destroyer Tarbell commanded by Lieut. Commander Hoey.

The Tarbell, which, with the destroyer Yarnell is to be at Newport and Balboa until Monday, arrived early this afternoon, and this evening passed the jetty, dropping anchor inside the bay. The craft is 325 feet long, draws fifteen feet of water, and carries 120 men.

When the expenditure of $500,000, to be derived from Orange county harbor bonds, is made it will insure a channel sixteen feet deep at low tide for three miles inside the harbor entrance, permitting such vessels as the Tarbell and Yarnell to be frequent visitors in Orange county.

The only other government ships which have been inside the harbor were a revenue cutter and the two sub chasers, 307 and 308. A banquet was tendered the officers of the two war ships at Hotel Balboa tonight, attended by many Orange county dignitaries.

BURGLARIES ADMITTED BY LOS ANGELES GIRL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN JOSE, Aug. 16.—Marie Mason of Los Angeles, 24, confessed today to a number of burglaries here, according to J. N. Black Chief of the police department. The girl admitted traveling about in a limousine with a male consort committing burglaries, according to Black. Her confession is said to include three crimes here, in which loot totalling $200 was taken.

The police say her burglaries indicate she is an expert at opening doors with a screw driver.

HALF A MILLION BARRELS A DAY

Texas Looks for this Oil Production this Year.

Geologists Say that the Pools are Barely Touched.

New State Law Benefits Large and Small Producers.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

AUSTIN (Tex.) Aug. 12.—If the crude petroleum production of Texas continues to gradually increase at the rate it has been doing for the last eight months, the daily output by the end of the present year will have reached more than 500,000 barrels, or at the annual rate of about 182,000,000 barrels a year. That this possibility is not at all far fetched is shown by the fact that at present the State's production is approximately 320,000 barrels a day, or at the rate of about 117,000,000 barrels a year. Texas now ranks first of all the States in the matter of oil output, having taken that distinction away from California during the last three weeks. What is most significant, perhaps, in the wonderful advancement which this State is now making in this industry is that the increase of production is light crude, which has a market value of $2.25 a barrel. Although there has been much activity all along in the matter of drilling new wells in the heavy oil fields of the Gulf Coast region, the increase of production of this grade of the product has been very little.

Everything would seem to portend a rapid mounting up of light crude production during the next few months. Much depends on the providing of storage, pipe-line and tank-car facilities. If these necessary adjuncts of the industry are promptly supplied, it will not be surprising if the total daily average output of the Central West Texas fields reaches more than 600,000 barrels by the end of the year. It is asserted by well informed oil operators that the well drilling activities that are now in progress in the areas that are already proved justifies this optimistic prediction, to say nothing of the possibile discoveries of new pools.

FIELD IS BARELY TOUCHED.

No one ventures to predict or estimate the potentialities of Texas in the matter of crude petroleum resources. Some geologists are of the belief that the producing pools have been as yet barely touched, and that new discoveries will continue to be made in different parts of the State for many years to come. One of the remarkable features of development operations is that it often takes several years of patient drilling to determine the existence of oil in paying quantities in a given locality.

It is pointed out that the Texas and Pacific Coal Company, now called the Texas and Pacific Coal and Oil Company, drilled eighteen wells, covering a period of four years, in the vicinity of Ranger before the pay oil was struck. Several dry holes had been drilled in the very outskirts fo what is now the famous Burkburnett field before the great Fowler discovery well was brought in. In the Desdemona field, which is regarded as the greatest phenomenon known to the oil industry, several wells that afterwards became big producers were abandoned as dry holes when first drilled. It is this uncertainty as to where oil may be found that makes the game so interesting and alluring. At this time traces of oil, and in some instances considerable shallow production, are found in wells far removed from the recognized producing fields. Some of these localities may be the scenes of big strikes any day.

An illustration of this kind is that of an are of more than thirty square miles in Starr, Zapata and Jim Hogg counties, in the lower Rio Grande border region of this State. At this time there are about twenty shallow producing oil wells in that locality, which is more than 200 miles distant from any other producing field. Each of these shallow wells has a daily output of about twelve barrels of high-grade lubricating oil. Several deep test wells are being drilled by the Empire Oil and Gas Company and other of the larger operating concerns. It may be known within the next few months just what the border region has in store in the way of possible oil resources.

NEW LAW IN EFFECT.

The recent special session of the Legislature enacted a new statute pertaining to the development of oil and gas on the coast. The act also included the scraps of school land that have never been included in any other survey, and which were unsurveyed when the act became effective on July 23. Under this act the former surveys of islands, lakes, bays, inlets, marshes and reefs may be abandoned and the areas cut into more desirable tracts for oil and gas purposes.

The fixed payment to the State consists of one-eighth royalty upon the total production and 10 cents per acre for the first year, 25 cents per acre for the second year, 50 cents per acre for the third year and $1 per acre each year thereafter so long as the owners hold the land undeveloped. Development must be had in ten years, otherwise the area is forfeited. If oil should be developed the lease may run twenty-five years.

In addition to these conditions the area will be advertised and sold to the one who will pay the most cash. Ample publicity will be given so everyone will have a chance; also, the areas will be cut into reasonable size tracts so the small operator can have a chance with the larger one.

No filing can be made until the areas are advertised with and the time fixed for opening bids at the General Land Office. All bids will have to be sealed with the amount of money one offers in addition to the fixed charges.

The fact that Goose Creek, which for some time past has led all the other Gulf Coast fields in heavy crude petroleum production, is situated partly in the shallow water of the bay makes the possibilities of large production being obtained from the earth underneath the coast water well worth trying out, it is stated.

MAY CONNECT UP POOLS.

In some respect wildcatting in the territory extending from about the center of Comanche county south through Brown, Hamilton, Mills, McColloch and Lampasas counties has been disappointing, notwithstanding the reports of geologists that the structure in all that region

In connection with the general revival in real estate activity, no section of the city seems to be suffering from neglect, except those districts that have experienced physical changes that have marooned them from the tide of residence development and which are yet not ripe for any marked industrial demand. From the viewpoint of residence desirability, the whole west end—by which is meant almost any section west of Vermont avenue from Hollywood to the Mesa in the extreme southwest—is feeling the influence of home building and speculative selling. Sections of the southwest beyond Western avenue, which have been virtually dormant for five years, are today being sought by home and lot buyers in large numbers, and property there is beginning to move upward as the building development goes forward.

A New Hotel.

From sources considered reliable comes information to the Fact and Comment man that S. W. Straus & Co., the banking firm which has had a leading part in financing the new California Hotel and whose hotel investments are linked to several larger cities, is interested in another Los Angeles hotel project, in the business section. This is more than likely, as an active local realty dealer, purporting to represent Straus & Co., has recently been investigating available corners on Broadway and Spring street, and let it be known that he would soon be prepared to make an offer for that recently much-sought property, Mercantile place, owned by the Los Angeles Board of Education.

It seems inevitable that Mercantile place should pass into private ownership. That part of Broadway is growing in importance and with suitable improvements would greatly enhance in commercial value. A first-class hotel and a theater at that point would add materially to the tone of the neighborhood and open the way to improvements on both Broadway and Spring street, which seem warranted by the immensity of the traffic and the important relation of that district to the city's commercial center.

BUSINESS LEASES.

Dancing Academy and Piano Firm Take New Buildings.

The W. Ross Campbell Company, through O. S. Lair of its sales and leasing department, reports leasing for A. T. Welles to the Rutherford Dancing Academy, the second floor of the building at 1024-32 South Grand avenue, and to the Starr Piano Company, the ground floor at 1034 South Grand avenue.

The same firm also reports through F. B. Nellums, the lease for L. M. Davenport to the Harper-Reynolds Corporation, part of the two-story building at 1032 East First street, and through W. S. Johnson for J. J. Davis to A. J. Magassin, the storeroom at 737 South Los Angeles street.

PERRIS RANCH.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PERRIS, Aug. 16.—Harford and Greenleaf, local realty brokers, report the sale of the Woodward brothers alfalfa ranch of 100 acres near Perris to S. T. Levine, L. H. Solomon and Morris Solomon of San Juan Capistrano. The consideration given was near $500 an acre.

HARBOR HOTEL NOW NEARING COMPLETION.

"ROBAL INN" FOR WORKINGMEN COMBINES MANY FEATURES UNIQUE IN WEST.

Robal Inn, the model hotel for workmen at the harbor which is being built by the Harbor Housing Corporation, will be finished, according to the builders' announcement. The hotel group consists of four units and a community clubhouse. While the building construction is going forward rapidly, the recreation field, including a baseball diamond, tennis and handball courts and playgrounds, is being laid out under the supervision of Paul J. Howard, landscape expert.

The playground will be known as the "Mary Pickford" playground, her plan having been accepted by a contest committee and awarded a prize of $25. This prize she later donated to the Boy Scouts of San Pedro. Miss Pickford's plan included both handball and tennis courts, and Mr. Howard is laying them out in accordance with professional regulations.

The name "Robal Inn," which was suggested by Miss Hazel Dumas, was obtained spelling the word labor backwards. The builders say the inn will be unique among workingmen's hotels in America. They say that nothing like it has been attempted before on such a comprehensive scale. L. L. Horne, of Elliott and Horne, organizer of the Harbor Housing Corporation, is credited with having originated the plan. He expects that the "Robal Inn" idea will be used in other industrial districts of California, once its investment feasibility is demonstrated. The clubhouse feature is entirely new. It provides the recreational advantages of a clubhouse without extra cost to the hotel tenants.

AHEAD IN BUILDING.

Santa Ana Projects Many Times More Than Year Ago.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA ANA, Aug. 16.—Building operations in Santa Ana at the present time are nearly seven times ahead of the same period last year, according to permits issued by Building Inspector Thomas Ash, and new buildings are planned for erection within the next few months.

Already in August the building permits total approximately $50,000, as compared with $14,106 for the entire month of August, 1918. July showed a total of $63,299, as compared with $9266 for the corresponding month last year. August permits include an $18,000 building for the Orange County Garage Company; $6000 for remodeling business room for James's Confectionery, an $8000 building for W. A. Greenleaf to be occupied by John L. Wheeler, and $3500 residence for M. R. Heninger. Also included is a $2000 bungalow for P. A. Robinson, the first of fifteen he will erect in the near future. Projects scheduled for the next few months include a new $150,000 hotel, a five or six-story building for the First National Bank, a garage for Charles L. Davis at Sixth and Broadway, and a business block at Third and Bush by Aaron Buchheim and W. V. Whitson.

BANKER BUYS SITE.

Acquires Fine Wilshire Corner for an Elaborate Home.

W. O. Jenkins, wealthy mine owner and banker of Mexico City, will soon begin the erection of a home on a site at the northwest corner of Irving and Wilshire boulevards just purchased through R. A. Rowan & Co. The consideration is said to have been $50,000 for a site approximately 235 by 360 feet.

Mr. Jenkins has commissioned a local architect to prepare his house plans upon which, according to Rowan & Co., he expects to spend $150,00, or a total of $250,000 on the house, grounds and furnishings. The building site will be landscaped at an expense of $25,000, and planted with ornamental trees and shrubbery. Mr. Jenkins's aim will be to erect one of the most attractive homes in Southern California.

DELTA LAND SALE.

Arthur C. Parsons, sales manager of the California Delta Farms, Inc., reports the sale of 3400 acres of the company's land to a syndicate of San Francisco and Stockton investors for $935,000, or $275 an acre. The land comprises the entire McDonald Island tract, which was reclaimed by the developing company six years ago. The total sales, Mr. Parsons says, have reached $4,160,000.

BUILDERS NOTE FORWARD MOVE.

Big Projects Act as Spur to New Construction.

Many Commercial Buildings Under Way.

Three Garages Among Latest Downtown Jobs.

Conditions in Los Angeles point to a steady increase in general building operations, with the probability of more commercial structures being erected this fall than at any time in the last five years, according to the view of leading local builders and architects.

As the direct influence of such projects as those announced by the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company and the Central Business Properties, Inc., the Los Angeles Railway Company, A. Hamburger & Sons and Bullock's, all of which will soon start building operations of major size and importance, they expect a volume of construction work that will put this city in the front rank among Pacific Coast municipalities. These projects, together with the new California Hotel, the Goodyear rubber and cotton plant and miscelleanous industrial enterprises, as builders point out, are having the expected effect of stabilizing and stimulating building operations along all lines.

The new Pacific Mutual Building, adjoining the present structure on West Sixth street, will cost $2,500,000, while it is estimated that the improvements planned at the southwest corner of Sixth and Olive streets by the Central Business Properties, Inc., will cost in the neighborhood of $1,500,000. The Los Angeles Railway Company has said that the ten-story building which it will soon erect at the corner of Broadway and Eleventh street will cost $400,000. Bullock's will spend approximately $2,500,000 in the building improvements and new equipment contemplated by that firm at Seventh and Hill streets. While estimates for the four additional floors to be added to the present Hamburger Building have not been announced, it is understood that they will approximate $500,000. New buildings will be started immediately by the L. Harris Realty Company on the property just acquired at the northwest corner of Seventh and Hope streets.

Among the new projects just started in the downtown section are three commercial garage buildings for local investors. One is for the Whiting company on St. Paul street between Sixth and Orange streets, a brick and tile structure 58x164 feet; another for Mrs. Cameron E. Thom on Pico, between Flower and Hope streets, and a third for Harbert & Butterworth at 1334 South Flower street.

The plans have been prepared by Walker & Eisen, local architects. The building for Mrs. Thom will be 55x150 feet, and will have an exterior of lgazed brick, ornamented with terra cotta and tile. It will have a mezzaine floor across the rear over the shop. The building for Harbert & Butterworth, 50x155, will be of concrete and brick, with glazed brick and colored terra cotta trim. It will be of "sawtooth" skylight construction.

The same firm of architects has prepared plans for a fourth garage building to be erected for A. L. Binford on Philadelphia street, Whittier, adjoining the new building of the Southern Counties Gas Company, another structure planned by Walker & Eisen. The Binford Building will be of brick and concrete, faced in red ruffle brick and trimmed with terra cotta.

A CHANCE OF A LIFETIME.
NEAR BERKELEY SQUARE.

Extra large lot, 74x178—TWO BATHS. Surrounded by magnificent homes. An 80-foot paved Blvd.

When I built this magnificent home, costing me upwards of $25,000, just a few years ago, I had a good paying business. Little did I dream that over night the country would go dry and I would be forced to close out my business, and now sacrifice my beautiful home, which has been such a joy to me. The 200 rose bushes, numerous shrubs and flowers I planted and nursed along until now they are all in their full glory, and fate has destined that I must give it all up, and you, dear stranger, must get the benefit of my grave misfortune. It has been a constant stream of overflowing joy to me, and it cannot help but prove a great joy to you. Located on high ground with wonderful views of the mountains. Large front porch with massive granite pillars, cement floor and steps glassed in at each end. Entering large center hall with an artistic winding staircase, illuminated with immense art Tiffany windows at the top. Extra large bow windows, living-room and extra large den both southern exposures, letting in the sunshine all day. Woodwork piano finish; extra large dining-room, quarter-sawed oak with handsome brick fireplace, paneled walls, stately buffet, pass pantry, large kitchen, maids room and bath, extra large screen porch, cement basement, furnace and hot water heater. Second floor—6 large bedrooms, 2 open sleeping porches, large center hall. Third floor for billiard room and storage. An easterner will fully appreciate this grand home, because it is solidly built with heavy joist 18-inch brick foundation. Garage, 3 cars, with man's quarters above.

Phone 62261, my exclusive agent, ROLAND BOLGIANO, who will be delighted to make an appointment to show this magnificent home.

FOR SALE— LOTS.

Desirable building sites north of Hollywood blvd., suitable for residences costing $8000 up are very scarce and soon will all be gone. Here are two good ones:

$60 PER FRONT FOOT.

Very choice, west-front lot, 90x200, adjoins a beautiful home and in highly restricted neighborhood on Harvard blvd., between Hollywood and Franklin. There is nothing better in that part of Hollywood. See our sign on lot.

$7000.

Extra fine corner, 90x202, surrounded by fine homes; wonderful views of city and ocean; west of La Brea. We regard this as the best site to be had and the price is less than is asked for inside lots. Unobstructed views, high ground, without requiring unsightly retaining walls. Let us show it to you.

HOUSES.

$10,000.
BEAUTIFUL AND ARTISTIC.

Just listed by eastern owner, whose business prevents his return. A very attractive, modern, 2-story house "that is different"—a house that was pictured in the Ladies' Home Journal. Has 3 bedrooms downstairs and 1 up and a wonderful big sleeping porch; 2 baths; large living-room, dining-room, kitchen; beautiful court with fountain; fine, large celled garage; lots of fruit and ornamental trees. Corner lot 92x137, excellent neighborhood, central location, near car line.
You could not duplicate this place today for anywhere near the price asked. It's a decided bargain at $10,000.
Shown by appointment only.

$6850.
SACRIFICE PRICE FOR IMMEDIATE SALE.

Splendid bargain in 6-room modern bungalow, 3 bedrooms, very large living-room, extends across entire front; very large dining-room and kitchen, screen porch, wide front porch. The lot is south front, 52x272. Fine lot of big old trees in full bearing. Chicken houses at rear. Very central location. The house is not new, but is well built, and the price is considerably below actual value, owing to owner being compelled to move away. We can recommend this place as worthy of consideration to anyone wishing a good bungalow with large, well-improved grounds.
Better see us at once about this place if interested.

$20,000.
INCOME PROPERTY.

A brand new, up-to-date 4-family white stucco flat in fine location. Rents unfurnished at $240 per month. Four garages. This is absolutely the best buy in an income proposition to be found in Hollywood. See us Monday.

THREE FLAT SITES.
S. W. CORNER SUNSET BLVD. AND ALTA VISTA—ONLY $55 PER FRONT FOOT.

This splendid corner is 172 on Sunset blvd. and 150 on Alta Vista (also a 100-foot wide street.) There is a 10-foot alley at west side. Ample room for 3 good modern flats with garages.
There is scarcely anything to rent in Hollywood and the demand is constantly increasing. Rents are getting higher, so that it will pay to build even at present high cost.
If you are looking for a good income proposition it will pay you to see us about this superior location—only one block to 5c cars and very convenient to schools, stores, etc. An ideal site.
Our price is $5 per front foot less than other lots near by and they are not so good nor so deep and not on a double wide street. Price for all is $9400. No trades.
Buy this whole corner, use what you wish and sell the remainder at a handsome profit. It can easily be done in a very short time.

FOR SALE—

In the principal cities of this country the most desirable residence locations are provided with entrance gates and private streets, in the city, but protected from its noisy, dangerous traffic. In Los Angeles such places are Chester Place, Berkeley Square and Fremont Place. The latter, Fremont Place, is in the Wilshire district, extending from Wilshire boulevard to Country Club drive, the new hundred-foot boulevard being opened from Western avenue to a junction with Santa Monica blvd., at the Los Angeles Country Club. The two paved winding driveways are entered through handsome gateways, several blocks west of Western ave.; sidewalks seven feet wide, are in broad parkings, lined with St. John's bread trees and palms.

The building protection, insuring first-class residences only, continue until 1960. No car line will ever run in front of your home.

Fremont place contains some of the finest residences in Los Angeles. Others are being built and half a dozen are to be started promptly.

Three-fourths of the building sites have been sold, but some of the best, which have been reserved, are now available at special prices. They are not small, rectangular lots, but are 75 to 260 feet wide, and 140 to 250 feet deep. Prices now are little if any higher than in less desirable locations.

Telephone us for maps, interesting particulars and special prices.

FOR SALE—

$25,000.

ONE OF THE FINEST LITTLE RANCH PROPERTIES IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, FIFTEEN MILES FROM THE HEART OF LOS ANGELES, CORNERING ON A PAVED HIGHWAY, THIRTY ACRES IN ALL.

THE PRICE SOUND HIGH, DOES IT? LET US TELL YOU WHAT WE HAVE AND WHAT IT HAS DONE FOR THE OWNER WHO IS NOW ON THE RANCH AND HAS BEEN FOR SIX YEARS.

First, there are 30 acres of the finest sandy loam soil you ever saw. 800 feet on one paved road and 1600 feet on the other.

Second, there is a flowing well of 12-inch steel casing, 900 feet deep, that furnishes more water than can be used and there is a market for the surplus. This well is connected with 1600 feet of ten-inch cement pipe, running through the center of the ranch, with an outlet every 125 feet. To irrigate on each side of the main line there is 440 feet of 8-inch surface pipe. There is also a pipe line from the well to a 1000-gallon tank and tank house, which supplies the place with water for domestic use.

Third, there are about 15 acres in a good stand of fine alfalfa, 5 acres in corn 15 feet high, with 2 big ears on every stalk. The balance in beans, sweet potatoes and sugar beets and a good family orchard.

Fourth, there is a new, modern and right up-to-date bungalow of 3 bedrooms and bath, living-room of good size, dining-room, kitchen, screen porch and toilet, gas, electric lights and telephone. This house would cost to build today at least $3500. It is right up-to-the-minute and of large dimensions.

Fifth, there is a good barn, 32x32 feet, on a concrete foundation and with cement floor. Room for 8 horses, wagons, automobile, tools and implements, and all the hay you can raise on the place. Barn would cost today at least $1500.

Sixth, there are three good horses, fine ones, 7 years old, a good Holstein cow and heifer, and 2 good sows. All the farm implements, including a tractor that you need on a place of this size and character. They would cost today $2000. Also a new 5-ton set of scales.

Now that's about the layout and it looks good to us and we are sure it is, and that's why we are spending time and money in trying to present it to you.

Now about the income. That's up to you, but the owner took this place raw six years ago, with a $6000 mortgage on it, put down a real well and it cost him complete about $5000. He put up a new barn and has built a new house, put in a new set of scales, stocked and equipped the place with necessary implements, paid off the mortgage, bought an automobile, has had a good living for his family, and we know he has a good little bank balance now. Pretty good, don't you think? You can do it if you have a good, stiff spine and terms can be had.

THE RANCH IS CLEAR AND IS TWO AND A HALF MILES SOUTH OF NORWALK.

We are the exclusive agents.

Country and Ranch Property.

WANTED—SMALL ACRES REASONABLY CONvenient to Los Angeles and to transportation, either electric or boulevard.

I am looking for the man who really wants to get rid of his holdings, and will help out if he has a mortgage too big for him, or troubles too many for him.

I have CLEAR LOTS well located in Los Angeles, ripe for improvement which I wish to use as part, and can also turn in 20 acres clear in the Fresno district at prices you will agree are reasonable. I shall not tack on any H.C.L. on the original cost, but ask less than they cost me, because I really want a nice little country home wherein to end my days.

If other things are right I will either assume reasonable mortgage or put in some cash to sweeten up a deal.

MINES—
And Mining.

OIL SHORTAGE is INCREASING—

No better investment can be made now than test holes in new territory. The country needs all the oil you can find, and you have a safe and sure market.

But don't resort to old-fashioned methods of drilling, with large and expensive machinery; never forget the cost of a hole increases in the approximate proportion to the "square of its diameter."

So drill smaller diameter holes with the latest and most efficient portable machines ever built for territories from 800 to 2500 feet deep. Write us for particulars and circular.

ONE-FOURTH OF ALL THE AUTOMOBILES IN California are in Los Angeles county. The number is estimated in excess of one hundred thousand, valued at $500 each they represent an investment of FIFTY MILLION. To handle this business the most extensive experience is required together with a well-located and going used car business and adequate capital. I have been dealing in automobiles in Los Angeles for 15 years. TURKEY IN NEED OF OUTSIDE AID.

Former Ambassador to Washington Favors Mandate.

Prefers to Have America Act in that Capacity.

To Publish Book Based on the Fourteen Points.

BY LADISLAV CZAPSKI.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 6.—(Delayed.) A. Rustem Bey, former Turkish Ambassador to Washington, has his own ideas about the proposed American mandate for Turkey. In a book which he is to publish in French, and which he is busy putting into English for the benefit of the American public, he has developed his suggestions in detail, basing them, he said today, on President Wilson's fourteen points.

Like a majority of the thinking Turks, Rustem Bey said he had come to the conclusion Turkey must secure aid from some great outside power if she is to continue her existence as an independent state. Only Turks blind to the facts can still contend their country possesses the administrative capacity necessary, to hold together the empire. Under benevolent guidance the Turks can regain that capacity. It is for this reason the enlightened opinion of Turkey gradually has been swining around to the idea of inviting America to undertake the task.

NO REPLY FROM WILSON.

About two months ago through the intermediary of American officials here Rustem Bey sent a memorandum to President Wilson putting forth his proposal. This paper he fears received scant attention at the hands of the American peace delegates. At any rate he has had no reply to the covering letter he sent with the document.

What he has apparently failed to achieve by his memorandum, however, he hopes to accomplish by his book if he can find an American publisher for it. He counts on the publicity acquired as a result of his brush with the American government which culminated in his abrupt recall from Washington. Meanwhile he declined to give me a look-in at some chapters.

Nothing is further from Rustem Bey's mind than that Turkey had to be treated as a vanquished foe. He asserts under Mr. Wilson's programme his country must be granted the right of signifying its own free choice in the matter of a mandatory. Otherwise, he asks what will become of the fourteen points?

AMERICA IS CHOICE.

It is a foregone conclusion that if Rustem Bey declared his own and his countrymen's choice it would fall upon America. Even the simplest-minded Turk will easily understand, he said that America is the only power completely disinterested in the long conflict of political interests of the Near East. Besides, America is the only power offering a sure guarantee under her administration of all races and religions in the empire. When America was appealed to for help the Turkish Legislative Assembly would for the duration of the mandate divest itself of the vetoing power. In exercise of the mandate the Turkish Parliament would offer no hindrance. Only in possible instances of abuse would the Assembly have the right to demand satisfaction from the League of Nations.

No American troops would be needed under Rustem Bey's scheme. Reorganized by experienced American officials, the Turkish gendarmerie would police the country.

"You would soon learn our people desire nothing but a good administration and security of lives and property," Rustem Bey said. "Ours is a plain people, industrious and peaceful. There is need of modern schools. These no nation is more fitted to give than America. It wants to insure itself against corruption in the official class. Here again a grateful field opens itself for America. Another is agriculture. We have a country rich in natural resources and we want someone to help us in developing them.

TO PRESERVE SOVEREIGNTY.

"But with all this we hope to preserve not only our sovereignty but also our integrity. That's why we feel we ought to have the say in the determination of the scope and character of the mandate. We want to make sure that certain limits on the power of the mandatory are guaranteed. Among those is the time limit; in this respect we think twenty-five years ought to suffice. There is also a desire on our part to safeguard our sovereignty. We recognize under any mandate our treaty-making power would have to be curbed. But in domestic affairs we would like entire freedom to shape and carry out our own policies.

"Aside from limitations of this kind the mandatory would have full sway, subject to formal approval of its activities by our government. If America accepts the mandate all she will have to do is to send us a commission of experts to be attached to our various ministries in the capacity both of advisers and executives. We would like the heads of this commission to remain in close consultation with our government. Its work in the interior could be done through subcommittees established in the different provinces."

VILLA'S MEN HOLD UP MOTORIST IN MEXICO.

RELEASED ON BOND AFTER BEING THROWN IN JAIL BY FEDERAL OFFICIALS.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

EL PASO, Aug. 13.—Motoring through Northern Mexico is no pleasure jaunt under present conditions, an American business man with large interests in Mexico, declared upon his return here recently after being held up by Villa's men, arrested, thrown in jail and finally released on bond by the Carranza government officials.

Starting from El Paso with another American in a roadster, the American was held up by Villa's men near San Lorenzo. They escaped by speeding their car and driving through the Villa lines. This occurred after Villa had been driven from Juarez by American troops but, the American said, the men he encountered had been left behind to guard Villa's wounded and had not learned what had happened at Juarez.

Reaching Chihuahua city the American said he was threatened by the Carranza officials because of a business transaction he had had with a Mexican who had made false representations to the officials. After hiding from the police and escaping twice, he was finally arrested at Santa Rosalia, placed in jail there and, upon his return to Chihuahua city, was again arrested. He was forced to deposit a heavy bond for his release pending a hearing of the charges against him. He said these were only trumped up against him since he had them investigated by a civil court and his claims upheld.

On his trip through the north, during which he was away more than a month and covered more than 2200 miles in his automobile, the American said he found conditions very chaotic. He said commanders of Federal forces were making forced loans and seizing property.

MEXICANS LYNCH SHRINE VIOLATOR.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

MEXICO CITY, July 26.—Details of the lynching of Juan Galvan, a prominent resident of the village of Zaragoza in the State of San Luis Potosi, have just been received in the capital and El Democrata, in publishing the story, declares this is the first instance of lynching recorded in Mexico.

Galvan was publicly accused by the pastor of a church in Zaragoza of being the person who robbed the image of a Virgin in one of the churches of gold and jewels valued at 10,000 pesos. The words of the curate inflamed his hearers, who dragged Galvan from his home, built a funeral pyre and upon it tortured the unfortunate man until he died. The curate has been detained by the authorities as the author of the crime.

BELIEVE BRITAIN MUST RETAIN SEA'S CONTROL

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

SYDNEY (Australia) July 9.—"It would be crass stupidity on the part of the British people to relinquish any sea power they possess," recently declared Acting Naval Minister Poynton. "Situated as Britain is with all the trade routes converging on one point—London—it is absolutely necessary that she should have sufficient ships in her fleet to keep those trade routes open."

HONOR SYSTEM IS FAILING.

Prisoners Leave Disciplinary Barracks in Flocks.

Rigid Rules may be Put in Force at Ft. Leavenworth.

Chief of City Police Appeals to Commandant.

[From Kansas City Times.]

Time was when the honor system at the disciplinary barracks at Fort Leavenworth was the pride of the army and a model among penal institutions of the nation. But now all is changed. The system is still in use but the violations have been so frequent and discipline and morale so lax that it is possible that the innocent will suffer with the guilty and more rigid regulations enforced to restore order in the institution once more.

Wholesale escapes from the barracks have been reported in recent weeks, according to notices received by the Leavenworth police department. Officials at the barracks are not inclined to talk about the numerous escapes and other breaches of regulations, but it is known that men, honor men among them, have gone out in groups of eight and nine a day.

ESCAPES MENACE THE CITY.

So many men have been leaving the prison that Lewis Young, chief of police, felt that Leavenworth was in need of protection and appealed to Col. Sedgwick Rice, commandant of the barracks, to make a report of all escapes so that the police could keep on a lookout for them. That was late in May. Since then thirty-one escape notices have been received. May 24, nine prisoners escaped. Twelve have deserted from the institution in the last two days.

With the wholesale exodus from the barracks, police officers in Leavenworth are adding materially to their incomes. It pays to be an officer in Leavenworth now. A reward of $50 is paid for the apprehension of every escaped prisoner. Two merchant policemen realized $200 on escaped prisoners in one week.

THEY SIMPLY WALK AWAY.

The old-fashioned method of escape, that of climbing a wall, is a lost art. In fact, such procedure apparently is entirely too strenuous. It is said that many simply procure soldier uniforms and casually walk away from the barracks. It is said that recently a taxi cab drove up near the prison and half a dozen prisoners piled in and were driven away.

There apparently is an "underground railway" in operation. Several discharged members of the institution are reported to be living in Leavenworth and lending their assistance to their less fortunate comrades, giving them clothes and money and even going so far as to hide escapes from the authorities until they have an opportunity to leave town unmolested.

ACTION ON C. O.'S IS BLAMED.

And the present "honorless" honor system can all be traced to one cause, according to reported statements of prison guards and even officers of the institution. Before the war Col. Rice had so established the honor system that escapes were very few and regulations easily enforced. He had done much to give hopes to the imprisoned men by the organization of the Disciplinary Battalion, from which prisoners, when in the opinion of the authorities they had made good, had the chance to be restored to the colors and leave the prison without a black mark against them. Once two men escaped. Members of the battalion appealed to Col. Rice to let them hunt the violators of the honor system. The colonel gave his consent and the two men were caught.

But then came the conscientious objectors. All went well until they were given their freedom, plus back pay and everything, while other prisoners, who considered their petty crimes were incomparable with the greater crime of refusing to fight for their country, became aroused. A condition arose which Col. Rice and his assistants were powerless to cope with. Feeling grew. There were disturbances, a general riot, a fire and escapes by the wholesale. Morale is admittedly low.

Undoubtedly some of those who have escaped from the barracks recently have been clever criminals. The escape of Ralph Vasserberg, a former lieutenant, who is charged with engineering the counterfeiting of worthless treasury warrants in the institution, is among those called to attention.

SEVERAL BATTALIONS OF REDS WIPED OUT.

PEASANTS WHO ROSE AGAINST SOVIET GOVERNMENT JOIN COSSACK FORCES.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Several battalions of Bolshevik troops have been wiped out in the new counter-offensive of the Northwestern Russian army along the River Luga, southwest of Petrograd, according to dispatches from Helsingfors dated Wednesday. The soviet forces also lost large numbers of prisoners, machine guns and ammunition.

On the west bank of the Luga, in the region east of Narva, the anti-Bolsheviki troops occupied Alexandroffskaia Gorka.

East of Pskov, south of Narva, other anti-Bolshevik detachments made raids against the soviet front and captured 500 prisoners.

Near Podsevy, an entire soviet regiment is declared to have deserted to the Esthonians.

OMSK, Sunday, Aug. 10.—(Russian Telegraph Agency.) Bolshevik forces operating on the southern front of Russia are being aided by peasants' revolts, it was stated here today by military authorities of the all-Russian government.

Peasants who rose against the soviet government in the Tambov region, about 200 miles southeast of Moscow, joined the Don Cossack forces. On the left bank of the Volga River peasants also revolted against the Bolshevik rule and joined the Kuban Cossacks.

WARSAW, Aug. 15.—An official communication dealing with the operations of the Polish forces in the Minsk region in Russia says:

"We are pursuing on the whole front the enemy, who is retreating. We have reached a line twenty-five kilometers north of Minsk, where the population gave us an enthusiastic welcome."

DAILY TRADE TALK.

Food Prices Tumbling; Review of the Week; Commercial Paper.

BY CHAPIN HALL.

The events of the week were overshadowed by the climax in the food situation. The sudden tightening by the government in its campaign against profiteering, and the decided stand taken by local authorities brought the price question to an issue, and the cause of the People vs. the Buccaneers is now fairly joined and ready for trial.

The preliminary skirmish has been encouraging, effectively demonstrating that the smoke was not without its complement of fire and that the prices being charged in some quarters for food products had no basis upon the normal market or the law of supply and demand.

The profiteers are frightened and are taking to cover. They realize that they have overshot the mark, and that the hand of a retributive pursuer is upon them. There is a mighty squirming and a plethora of excuses, but during the past few days there has been a notable change in the spirit of their dreams.

This is noticeable, first in the halting of the advance in prices which for weeks had been upon an apparently prearranged ratio; second, in the actual lowering of prices for many articles; third, in the closing of the gap between the all-the-traffic-will-bear attitude of some dealers and the fair-profit reasonableness of others. It is not as easy now as it was a week ago to pay 12½ cents a pound for tomatoes at one stand and 5 cents per pound for the same quality at another.

Butter and eggs have fallen. Butter from 2 to 3 cents and eggs from 3 to 5 cents. It develops in the light of investigation that the real cause of the shortage and high prices of dairy produce was because so large a percentage of the daily output was going into storage to be offered to the public at big advances next winter.

Large stocks of hoarded food have been or will be seized by the government or State officials. The placing of this food upon the market will tend to depress prices, and the fact that such storage will no longer be permitted beyond a reasonable time and at a reasonable profit has had its effect.

Dealers are taking advantage of a condition resulting from the war and have made the most of it. They have found the public in possession of funds, and placed their goods upon a high level. They have argued apparently that so long as the public had the money and so long as the war had originally sent the prices up why should they not capitalize the situation. The public fell into the trap. The public is not keen in analysis. They paid the price. Paid even to the last straw. Now the last straw has been laid and the camel's back appears to be broken. Meat, vegetables and dairy products are several cents per unit cheaper this week than they were last. Fruit is about the same, but there is a heavy canning demand. The seizures and the government offerings are beginning to have an effect upon staples and canned goods.

The price advance has not been confined to the United States. It has been world wide. Rice, for instance, of which the United States imported about 400,000,000 pounds in 1918 costs in the country of production, 7.2 cents per pound as against 2.6 cents for that imported just before the war.

There have been dark days, but optimism is in order. The dealer has been charging what he thought he could get, but now the buyer's eyes have been opened. War is declared. We have come to realize that prosperity counts for nothing if the prosperity is to be more than absorbed by increased costs. The light is breaking.

The Street-car Strike.

Fortunately the street-car strike came upon the last business day of the week when many stores are closed, and there is a general letting down for the week-end. The public is not sympathetic toward the strikers. Men and women who have labored for years at work requiring brains and ingenuity, for less pay, are unable to see much justice in the demands of the platform men for a $180 a month minimum; more than double the pay received by the average school-teacher. Many professorships do not pay as much, and thousands of professional men would be glad to earn it regularly, plus transportation costs for their family, and plus two weeks' vacation every year on full pay. This condition is realized by many of the men. One of the conductors said to me: "This is the best job I ever had and I do not know where I could get another anywhere near as good. I am sorry that I have to go out." The strike is one of coercion on the part of paid agitators. It is foredoomed to failure. There was some inconvenience yesterday, but the public is taking the condition good naturedly, and there was no serious disturbance of business. The attempt to tie up the city lines was almost a complete fizzle. Many think that the episode will really be a good thing, for it will clarify the atmosphere, and the strikers may be able to see themselves as others see them. By just what mental process they figure that a company which is losing money at the rate of $2,000,000 a year should increase its operating expense by an equal sum is difficult to understand. The strike is a bone-headed and arbitrary attempt to display an imaginary power, and the misguided wage earners who have listened to the voice of the siren have an unhappy awakening coming to them.

CITRUS REVIEW FOR WEEK.

ORANGES.

The liberal receipts of fresh summer fruits in all markets has slowed up the demand for Valencia oranges and accumulations on tracks are heavier than ever before at this season of the year. It is estimated that there are in the neighborhood of 1200 cars out that are unsold as against around 300 cars at this time last season and until this supply is materially reduced, there is no immediate prospect for improvement in the market. The threatened strike of locomotive engineers has also had its effect on the situation and resulted in the placing of embargos on freight deliveries in some of the Atlantic seaboard markets. Brokers report practically no cash business in Valencias and are inclined to attribute the slowing down of cash sales to the present investigation by the Federal authorities on the high prices of foodstuffs.

It is estimated that there are about 5000 carloads of Valencias remaining for shipment.

A fairly good f.o.b. California business is reported on the basis of $4.25 to $4.50 per box.

LEMONS.

Best grade of California lemons continue in good demand on a basis of $6 per box f.o.b. California. On poor stock there is no quotable market.

The demand at this time is on a hand-to-mouth basis as brokers are not inclined to load up on supplies under present uncertain weather conditions.

Shipments for the balance of the month are expected to run between twelve and eighteen cars daily and will practically clean up the storage holdings early in September. Pickings in all districts are reported light and the prospects are for a shortage of lemons in September.

While the month of September is not looked upon as one of the best months for the consumption of lemons, the market usually settles down to a stable basis and a good steady demand prevails with the opening of the season on shellfish and oysters.

The year's lemon shipments will go down as the largest in the history of the industry and will come close to the 10,000-car mark.

ECONOMIC PROBLEMS INFLUENCE STOCKS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The stock market this week was perceptibly influenced by existing economic problems, especially the unsettled labor situation.

Growth of the campaign against high living costs, which had its most striking manifestations in food seizures and partial reduction of commodity prices, also served to undermine the list.

Public participation chilled in the previous week on publication of the claims of the railway brotherhoods, dwindled to slender proportions.

Although technical conditions were visibly improved by reason of the recent liquidation, shorts engaged in further aggressive movements, many active shares recording extreme declines of 5 to 15 points.

Several new corporate offerings were made by bankers and syndicates but the general investment situation as indicated by easier tone of the bond market was far from satisfactory.

INCREASE IN CLEARING HOUSE BANKS $1,958,140.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The actual condition of clearinghouse banks and trust companies for the week shows that they hold $53,685,710 reserve in excess of legal requirements. This is an increase of $1,958,140 from last week.

BREAK IN STOCKS DUE TO LABOR CONDITIONS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Labor conditions and other indications of social unrest, notably the nation-wide price agitation, accounted mainly for the further break in stock market prices this week.

The decline was not unwelcome in conservative financial circles, however, since it had the effect of correcting to a considerable extent the fictitious or unstable position of many of the more speculative issues.

Another factor which doubtless would have given a check to bullish operations on anything like the recent scale, was the complete collapse of foreign exchange, French and Italian rates fell to unprecedented discounts, with fresh weakness in sterling remittances.

Steps were taken during the week to ameliorate exchange conditions by the organization of a credit corporation, whose chief function will be the placing of funds to meet foreign obligations in this market. It is generally recognized, however, that readjustment of exchange is well nigh impossible without substantial aid from the foreign governments most concerned.

The money market was unusually easy as to call loans, supply most often exceeding demand, but this condition resulted more from reduced stock dealings than from any more important reason. Bankers realize that the money market will be put to its severest test in the impending domestic and foreign demands.

Apart from the unsettlement created by labor disturbances the industrial situation was rather mixed. Better conditions prevailed as to iron and steel, in which greater production was reported, while the leather and textile industries were measurably affected by the high-cost movement.

FARMERS SELLING DIRECT TO RETAILER.

HERETOFORE WHOLESALERS HAVE BOUGHT EARLY AND MADE GOOD PROFIT.

There was very little change in conditions on the floor of the local produce exchange yesterday and all varieties of fruits and vegetables moved readily on a steady market. Considerable competition was in evidence throughout the session between the wholesalers and farmers owing to the scarcity of most of the arrivals. During the past month the wholesalers have been buying the farmer out at the opening of the session and then selling later at a good profit, but owing to the fact that the farmers have been handling most of the fresh stock obtainable during the past three days they refused to sell the commodities early at a low level and held them until the retailers and shippers appeared on the floor and demanded good prices for all their products, which they received easily.

Further news on the low prices drive caused considerable excitement on the floor because at this time of the year when the local producing sections have passed the peak of their shipping season prices usually move sharp advances owing to the scarcity of all varieties of fruits and vegetables. The wholesalers place most of the blame on the local retailers for the high price the consuming public pays for perishable fruits and vegetables as they say they are making very little profit at this time of the year after figuring in shipping expenses and hand sorting.

The vegetable market was also active and prices made moderate advances due chiefly to the decreasing in volume of the majority of the arrivals.

Other fruits and vegetables closed about steady, despite the fact that a large percentage of the offerings were in poor shape.

Do You Value An Unbiased Opinion?

Mr. John Moody is generally considered the greatest analyst of Investment Securities in America. His reputation is nation wide, for his analyses are made on facts as he finds them. He cannot be unduly influenced. In a recent publication Mr. Moody says regarding the

PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY

"The Preferred Stock and the Bonds are high-grade investments, and their position is even more secure now than it was before the war.

"The high credit of this Company has now become so well established that comment upon this record would be superfluous.

"Business continues to show normal expansion; the management is showing its same old efficiency; the Company has made no war profits, and it has nothing to lose through the peace readjustment.

"Growth of Sales: This expansion is best shown by the record of the number of consumers. A striking feature of the record is the steadiness of the expansion, almost regardless of business conditions. California is growing in wealth more rapidly than other States, and this gives a large field for an efficient and vigorous public utility company. This Company's distributing lines cover the whole field about San Francisco, from a point 150 miles to the north to a point 100 miles to the south of the city. Consequently, the Company fully shares in the great natural growth of this metropolis of the Pacific Coast."

INSIDE PRICES ON GRAINS, PROVISIONS.

MARKET CLOSES WITH WEAK FEELING AND DECLINE ON CORN AND OATS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Inside prices on grains and provisions were made at the close with a weak feeling. There were net declines of 3 cents on September and 1⅛@1⅝ cents on the deferred futures of corn. Oats were off 1¼@1⅜ cents. Rye, however, advanced on export buying and closed 1⅜@3¼ cents higher while barley was unchanged to ⅜ cent higher.

Prices had a wide range during the week with the buying power weakened owing to the economic conditions and the break in foreign exchange. Corn closed with losses of 12 cents to 13⅞ cents, oats 2¼ to 3¼ cents, rye 1 to 2¼ cents, while barley was irregular, pork off 2.85, lard 2.15 to 2.25, and short ribs 1.45 for the week.

Local operators had the corn market to themselves, and with news and sentiment bearish it was easy to depress prices, although the action of the market was most erratic. A break of about 1 cent early was followed by a substantial upturn to above the previous day's finish, but toward the last week-end evening up on the long made a break of 2⅝@3¼ cents from the top with September leading the decline. Final trades were at the bottom to ⅛ cent above with September 1.82, December 1.44 and May 1.38⅛.

Demoralization in foreign exchange with sterling, francs and lire the lowest known had considerable influence on sentiment as the purchasing power of Europe is being gradually reduced, and the prospects for export business are much less bright than a while ago. Crop reports are also better than of late.

Efforts on the part of local bulls to advance oats prices met with fair success early. A drop of 1⅝@2¼ cents followed, with the finish about the bottom, with September 74⅜ cents, December 75⅝ cents and May 78⅜ cents.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Corn, No. 2 mixed, nominal; No. 2 yellow, 2.00. Rye, No. 2, 1.55⅞@1.56. Barley 1.23@1.40. Timothy, 9.00@1.75. Clover nominal.

Close: September, 1.82; December, 1.43⅞. Oats, September, 73¾; December, 75⅝. Pork, September, 44.65. Lard, September, 29.40; October, 29.65. Ribs, September, 24.90.

THE COTTON MARKET OPENING IS QUIET.

DUE TO ABSENCE OF WALL STREET INTERESTS AND BEARISH CROP ADVICES.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The cotton market opened quiet today in the absence of Wall street interests, prices starting 12 to 22 points lower under local selling on the favorable weather map, the bearish crop advices and a reduction of the short interests.

After the opening the tone improved a little on outside support, prices rallying to about previous closing levels.

The weakness of the foreign exchange market led to increased selling in the late forenoon, prices breaking about 40 points. The close was barely steady at a net decline of 28 to 34 points.

Closing prices were: August, 30 cents bid; September, 30.35 cents bid; October, 30.60 cents; November 30.72 cents bid; December, 30.80@30.85 cents; January, 30.70@30.75 cents; February, 30.73 cents bid; March, 30.73@30.76 cents; April, 30.79 cents bid; May, 30.81@30.86 cents; June, 30.72 cents bid; July, 30.67@30.71 cents.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The local market for spot cotton was quiet, 31.15 cents for middling upland, 35 points decline; sales nil.

Southern spot markets were: Galveston, 31 cents; New Orleans, 30.88 cents; Savannah, 31.25 cents; Augusta, 30.42 cents; Memphis, 33 cents; Houston, 13.25 cents.

FINANCIAL AND TRADE REVIEW

the newspapers are familiar it has been a week of many uncertainties, and rather more unrest than usual, but in spite of the untoward circumstances there has been a steady advance along the upward path. There has been no diminution in retail trade; more visitors than ever have flocked to Los Angeles and vicinity from neighboring States and from interior points of our own; the fleet came, saw and conquered, incidentally leaving many dollars in its wake; money has continued easy, and persons with funds for investment have continued to invest them without fear. The stock market has been disturbed, but the break in prices which sent listings tumbling in the East was scarcely felt here. There was some sympathetic weakness, and a little hesitancy, but the foundation was not disturbed. Bank clearings continued at record-breaking figures for August. Such troubles as Los Angeles have are superficial. We are not seriously hurt.

Commercial Paper.

The handling of commercial paper is a profession by itself, and which, up to a short time ago, was little practiced in Los Angeles, outside of the banks. In the East it is a great branch of the investment business. Eastern houses with a weather eye on the main chance and not unmindful of the tremendous resources of the Southwest have from time to time, opened branches on the Coast and secured some business. The profits invariably were returned to the East; there was little community of interest here. It was a convenient side line. Which is leadin' up and appertainin' to the announcement that Blyth, Witter & Co., a California house of wide repute, has entered the commercial paper field. A San Francisco division devoted to this school of finance was opened a few months ago and has proven very popular. Yesterday G. D. Roberts accompanied by S. W. Morris came to town and commenced preliminary work which will result in the early establishment of a Los Angeles commercial paper branch, separately capitalized, but operating under the guiding and protecting wing of the Blyth, Witter Company. Mr. Morris will be in charge and he is confident that a splendid field is ready to hand in this city and vicinity. Only high-class accounts will be considered, he says, and with the eastern outlet through the company's New York office its scope will have wide range. The feature most earnestly urged by the men back of the enterprise is that it is a home concern; that its development will be coincident with the growth of the community; that every dollar it earns will remain in this city; that its establishment is to be upon broad lines of permanency and that it will bring to the financial life of the community a new and needed element, infuse fresh blood into a neglected line, and remove us from a way station to the main track.

Hetch Hetchy Bonds.

Blyth, Witter & Co., the Bank of Italy and Carstens & Earles have made the largest single purchase of San Francisco municipals ever recorded by acquiring $5,570,000, 4½ per cent. city of San Francisco water bonds at par and accrued interest. No announcement has yet been made of the disposition of this big issue.

The Stock Market.

Business was light at the short session yesterday without material change in the price level. Oils furnished the bulk of the trading activity, Jade, National Pacific and United leading the others in volume. Each of these stocks were strong and closed higher than the opening. Jade opened at 19¾, and sold up to 21 cents. The close was ½ a cent below that price; the business in this stock totaled 18,500 shares. National Pacific was in good demand and advanced a point, from 14 to 15 cents in the face of heavy buying orders which approximated 68,000 shares. United Oil reflected the same market condition, going from an opening of 71½ cents to a close of 72½ cents for a total of 10,400 shares. Midway Northern was also a good trader around 43½ cents. In the mines United Eastern was weak and sold from an opening of $4.35 back to $4.23, while the closing bid was $4.25. Tom Reed was at $1.55, and Richmond Copper at 45½. Union Oil was in little demand at $166.62½ and $166.75. Industrials were inactive and bonds normal and quiet.

OILS

That we are entering an "OIL AGE" is a self-evident fact. Even on Wall Street oils have become the favorites, not only of speculators but conservative investors as well. Apparently those who knew nothing, and cared less, about the oil industries are now working overtime gathering statistics regarding its possibilities.

MINING

SILVER and COPPER are attracting considerable attention from speculators and, as war conditions adjust themselves and Europe starts its period of reconstruction, both these important metals are due to appreciate in value. Now is certainly the time to buy these stocks.

INDUSTRIALS

With an era of prosperity sweeping over this country and with plans for greater expansion in all lines of business, we look for considerable buying on the part of investors of good, substantial industrials.

CITY TO HAVE AUTO SPEEDWAY

Great Motor Course Planned at Beverly Hills.

Racing, Polo and Aviation to be Featured.

Plan Two International Meets Each Year.

With the idea of making Los Angeles the western center of automobile racing, combined with polo and aviation, the Los Angeles Speedway Association has been organized and has acquired a site of 200 acres at Beverly Hills adjacent to Wilshire boulevard, upon which a motor speedway and grand stand to seat 60,000 people will be built. This announcement was made yesterday by the backers of the enterprise, who say they will spend upwards of $400,000 on the project and will give this city the largest and finest sporting enterprise of the kind in the United States.

Those behind the venture include A. C. Robbins, S. M. Spalding, Jack Jevne, A. R. Peck, E. T. Stimson, J. M. Danziger, Cliff Durant, Cecil de Mille, Jesse Lasky, Al G. Faulkner, Neil S. McCarthy, all of whom are Los Angeles business men. A. M. Young will be secretary of the organization and will manage its activities.

According to the promoters, ground for the speedway will be broken next week, and the enterprise will be in readiness to hold the initial race meet on February 22, next. It is planned to give two race meets of international character each year and to give, Mr. Young says, the largest purses ever offered to racing drivers. The race meets will be held on Thanksgiving Day and Washington's Birthday of each year. If present plans are carried out, the opening meet will be an invitation affair to the world's premier drivers, and the number of entrants will be limited.

The intention is to construct the course one and one-quarter miles in length, after the "triple-radius" scheme designed by Jack Prince, who built several successful speedways in the East. This speedway, however, will be the first built with the triple-radius idea.

The property acquired for the new enterprise was formerly part of the holdings of the Rodeo Land and Water Company. It extends along Wilshire boulevard on the south side at a point just east of the Country Club station and the Pacific Electric tracks. When completed the speedway will have entrances from both Wilshire and Pico boulevards. Pico will be extended through to the western end of the course.

In addition to the speedway course, sufficient acreage will be developed into a polo and aviation field, several members of the promoting syndicate being interested in aeronautics. A meeting will be held later this week when permanent officers of the association will be elected.

Second Consignment from the Government Taken by Early Buyers.

Mayor Snyder yesterday mailed a check for $18,611.60 to the War Department to pay for the 54,000 pounds of surplus bacon which was sold in this city last week. The second carload of the bacon was placed on sale here yesterday morning and was all sold by 11 o'clock.

NEW WILSHIRE HOME.

The Milwaukee Building Company (Myer and Holler) prepared the plans and has the contract for the erection of a residence for Henry W. Louis, of the Brownstein-Louis Company, at the corner of Fifth street and Plymouth boulevard. It is estimated that the improvements will cost in excess of $40,000. The house will have fourteen rooms.

ARMY BEANS ON HAND FOR SALE.

Government Sends Carloads to Help Lower Prices.

Public Soon may Buy Freely Through Postoffice.

Prices of Food Stores are Officially Quoted.

The Federal government's plan to reduce living costs by selling surplus army stores to the public will soon be in operation in Los Angeles. Col. G. H. Penrose, in charge of the Los Angeles Quartermasters' Depot, received a consignment of two carloads of stringless beans and baked beans yesterday, and expects other consignments of a wide variety of canned meats, fruits and vegetables to arrive daily.

According to the plan of distribution worked out by the government, says Col. Penrose, sales will be made to municipalities, counties, States, charitable institutions, representatives of the Boy Scouts, and to the general public through the medium of the parcel post. The postmaster will take the orders and make requisition on the Quartermaster Depot, the requisition to be accompanied by a money order covering the price, as listed, of the products ordered, plus parcel post charges. No orders will be filled for the public directly from the sales depot and no orders will be filled in less than case lots.

The government is selling these products at considerably less than cost, the prices being even lower than those of the army sales commissaries. Prices are determined by the War Department and are subject to change without notice.

No sales will be made to merchants or retail dealers or for export. According to the government plan, a municipality may buy in any quantity and retail it to the public in less than case lots, if it so desires. Los Angeles is taking advantage of this opportunity; the municipal order is now being made out and Col. Penrose expects to receive it soon.

An official telegram from San Francisco to Col. Penrose yesterday quoted the following authorized prices on surplus subsistance stores the government will sell through the parcel post:

WORKMAN VICTIM OF VICIOUS STRIKERS.

SAN DIEGO MAYOR TO TAKE DRASTIC ACTION AGAINST UNIONISTS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, Aug. 16.—The first violence in connection with local labor troubles occurred this morning when A. S. Eaton, nonunion carpenter, blacksmith and "handy man," in the employ of the W. E. Kier. Construction Company, engaged in government work on North Island, was set upon and beaten by three burly strikers, just before taking the Star and Crescent boat at the foot of Broadway.

Warrants for the three men, all in the name of John Doe, were made out today, but no arrests have been made as yet. Mayor Louis J. Wilde appeared at the police station with Eaton this morning when he filed his complaint and had a talk with Chief of Police Patrick regarding the labor troubles. The Mayor stated he would not tolerate violence and if necessary would place the whole police force about the carpenters working at North Island to prevent it.

PRISON ANGEL'S SLAYER MAY BE EX-CONVICT.

POLICE SEEK MAN WHO HAD RECEIVED BENEFACTIONS OF MURDERED WOMAN.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Aug. 16.—Local police stated today that a search was being made for Clarence Johnson, 28, ex-convict from San Quentin prison, in connection with the murder yesterday of Mrs. Eunice M. Freeman, 58, former press representative of the W.C. T.U. of Oregon, whose dead body was found yesterday by her son on his return home from work. Robbery was given as the motive for the murder which was accomplished with a gas pipe. The woman's skull was crushed and she had been gagged.

Mrs. Freeman had been instrumental in securing Johnson's release from prison, the police said, as she had been a member of a prisioners' correspondence society. Johnson came to Portland about a year ago and boarded with Mrs. Freeman and her son until recently. The police said they learned that he had left his job with a shipyard here yesterday and apparently had gone from the city leaving a note for his landlady to the effect that he had had trouble and was going to Mexico. Cecil Freeman, son of the dead woman was insistent that the former convict be found.

ONE IS INDICTED AS RACE RIOT STARTER.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 15.—After having indicted scores of persons in connection with the race riots, the grand jury today returned a true bill against George Stauber, who, it is alleged, started the trouble by throwing a stone and knocking Eugene Williams, a negro boy, from a raft into the lake at the Thirty-ninth-street bathing beach.

The blow from the stone dazed the boy and he fell from the raft and was drowned.

The indictment against Stauber charges him with manslaughter. His bond was fixed at $10,000.

CIVIL DAMAGE SUIT ARMY TRIAL SEQUEL.

FORMER CAPTAIN CLAIMS HIS COLONEL ARRESTED HIM ON ALLEGED FALSE GROUNDS.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

COLUMBUS (O.) Aug. 16.—On the even of his departure for Fort Sam Houston where he is to become head of the militia bureau, Southwestern Department, Col. Franklin O. Johnson, commandant at the Columbus barracks, was made defendant yesterday in a $25,000 damage suit filed in the local State courts by Francis M. Doyle, former captain in the quartermaster's department under Col. Johnson. Doyle alleges false arrest.

The damage suit is the culmination of court-martial proceedings instituted by Col. Johnson against Capt. Doyle early last spring in which Doyle was charged with conduct unbecoming an officer. He was under arrest at the barracks for five months.

Doyle, as counsel for a private who was to be tried by a special court, demanded a general court and, being refused by Col. Johnson, appealed to the commander of the Central Department at Chicago. This resulted in Doyle's being arrested.

Doyle was found guilty by a general court but the decision was reversed by Maj.-Gen. Leonard Wood, commander of the Central Department, and he was ordered reinstated. Doyle soon thereafter applied for honorable discharge which was granted.

STRIKERS PETITION TO FEDERAL COURT.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 16.—Receivers for the Pittsburgh Railway Company in a statement issued last night told the 3000 striking motormen and conductors who walked out Thursday midnight that if they would not abide by the recent decision of the National War Labor Board, which awarded them a 5 cents an hour wage increase, they would be compelled to adopt the old system of dealings with all employees as individuals. The men, who asked 12 cents advance, it is alleged, agreed with the receivers to abide by the board's decision, following the suspension of the strike last May.

The strikers announced they would petition the Federal court, either with or without the consent of the trolley company's receivers, to grant the 12 cents an hour increase.

the recent appropriation of $2,500,000 made by the boards of directors of the Hudson Motor Car Company and Essex Motors, for land, buildings and machinery looms the new assembly and shipping building of the Essex concern in the east end.

Although only a single-story structure of steel and concrete the building is intended as a "starter" of subsequent expansion. To that end the foundations are being laid so as to carry the weight of two or more additional floors. The plant, 340x400, with 136,000 feet or floor space, will cover nearly an entire block. It will house the Essex assembly lines and domestic and export shipping facilities.

Both Essex and Hudson cars at present are being made in the Hudson plant, but after the new Essex building is completed only the machine and engine-testing departments will be conducted in the Hudson establishment. Receiving rooms, offices, stock inspection and other Essex departments will be installed in a brick building that was used last year for war purposes. This structure has 24,000 square feet of floor space.

It is the purpose of the Hudson and Essex companies to double their output next year. A production schedule of 40,000 Essex and 30,000 Hudsons is planned. This year's schedule calls for 20,000 of each car.

Automobile distributors all over the United States are complaining that manufacturers are shipping abroad cars that are needed badly at home. Discontent at prevailing conditions, which was voiced at a recent convention of distributors in Detroit, resulted, it is said, in two factories holding export orders in abeyance until domestic trade had been satisfied to an extent in the matter of deliveries. According to a Michigan distributor, it was a case of the factories holding up some of their foreign orders, or losing some pretty good home "pluggers" for their products.

Even the prohibitions that have existed against the exportation of automobiles to England and France have not prevented an increase of exportation of automobiles to the Far East and South American markets have been developing in the meantime. Since the signing of the armistice pretty near all the large automobile concerns have been making determined bids to break into the foreign market. They have not only sent traveling representatives to distant countries, but materially strengthened their export departments by opening headquarters on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

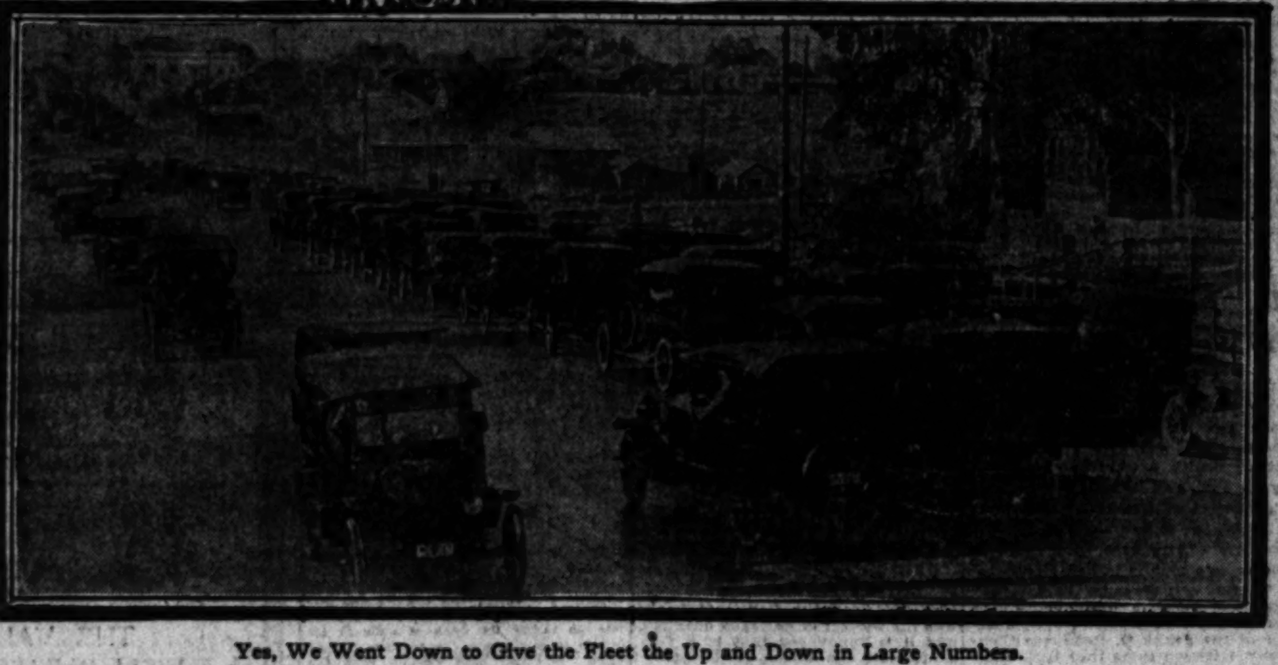
Viewed as a far-sighted policy, it would probably be an excellent move for the manufacturer to rivet his hold upon the foreign fields while he can.

Many men who have intimate knowledge of the production capacity of the American car-building plants agree that within two or three years they will be turning out more cars, by many thousands, than could possibly be consumed by the domestic buyers.

If there should be no outlet for such a surplus of production it would spell price cutting and disaster to both makers and distributors.

It might be hard on the home dealers for a year or two not to be able to get all the cars that could be disposed of, but in the long run their business interests would undoubtedly be protected. The United States can easily build cars for the entire world, but the makers must intrench themselves while the foreign markets are open.

It is understood that foreign makers, those of France in particular, are cognizant of the situation, and are combining with the idea of fighting the invasion of American-made automobiles.



Yes, We Went Down to Give the Fleet the Up and Down in Large Numbers.

These photographs, taken by a Times staff cameraman a week ago today, give some idea of the tremendous mob of automobiles that traveled over the Harbor boulevard to greet Admiral Rodman's personally conducted armada. The remarkable feature of the tremendous congestion in and around San Pedro for several days was that there were practically no accidents of a serious nature.

INSURANCE RATES DROP.

Pacific Coast Underwriters Vote to Lower the Premium.

Automobile insurance rates throughout California are to be reduced by approximately 25 per cent. of the rates now charged in the West on fire, theft, collision and property damage.

Rumors which have been prevalent for months that insurance rates were to be put on the toboggan have "jelled" with the definite announcement yesterday that the Pacific Coast Automobile Underwriters Conference has voted to lower the rates anywhere from 25 to 40 per cent. on cars costing $800 or over, and this recommendation has already been sent East for the approval of the national conference.

That the motorists of Southern California themselves are directly responsible for this action, through the activity of the Automobile Club of Southern California, is the consensus of opinion.

When the Automobile Club started to write insurance for its members at cost, back in 1912, it "started something" which has gained in popularity ever since—notably, cheaper insurance and quicker and fairer adjustments for loss.

During the past year, when the club had established nineteen branch offices throughout Southern California, every one equipped and ready to handle insurance and adjustments for club members, panic appeared in the old line companies. According to club officials, the reduction in insurance rates by the conference companies has been impending for some time.

That the motorists of Southern California who have placed their insurance with the Insurance Department of the Automobile Club since 1912 have saved themselves $766,-710.42 was the statement given yesterday by Manager Ralph Reynolds of the club's interinsurance exchange.

In 1918, he points out, the saving, as compared to the rates charged by conference companies, was more than 40 per cent. Furthermore,

DON'T OVERCHARGE YOUR BATTERIES.

MANY MOTORISTS RUN CARS BUT NEVER SEEM TO USE THE LIGHTS.

Running the daylights out of a car often means running the night lights out as well. This truth has impressed itself on thousands upon thousands of motor car owners, to their sorrow. How to dodge the disastrous affects of a storage battery of daylight driving without frequent use of the self starter and lights is a bit of timely advice invariably given motorists known to be starting on a long trip by the Kay & Burbank Company, Exide battery distributors.

"We always advise motorists who mention that they are setting out on a cross-country tour to be sure and allow their headlights, dash and tail lights to burn an hour or two a day," a Kay & Burbank service man remarked. "By following this advice they will save themselves a repair bill on their batteries."

PAINT PROCESS IS SPEEDED UP.

The average Los Angeles motorist is taking much more pride in the appearance of his car than he did a few years ago. The result is that the whole city has more smartly-finished cars than any city in the world.

These are the observations of a New Yorker who has made annual trips to this city and whose business requires that he pay particular attention to automobiles. "Los Angeles leads in motor styles," he said to George H. Bentel of the Bentel Shops, yesterday.

One reason that the motorist dislikes to have his car painted is the time required. Formerly a car was out of commission six weeks, but this tim ehas been cut in half by the Bentel Shops installing drying kilns in connection with the paint department.

WANT TO BUILD ROADS.

Four Counties Anxious to Spend Some Money on Improvements.

An epidemic of road building has broken out in Southern California. Four counties have "come down" with the bacillus, caught possibly, say officials of the Automobile Club of Southern California, from the $40,000,0000 bond issue recently rampant in the State.

More than $5,500,000 are about to be collared and put to work building better roads, if the plans of Ventura, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara and San Diego counties materialize. Of these San Diego is planning the largest bond issue—for $2,500,000—while San Luis Obispo county is second with $1,-500,000 and Santa Barbara third wit h a cool million.

But despite the fact that Ventura county comes fourth on the list, so far as the number of dollars to be put to work is concerned, it is the most determined, for it will vote $580,000 for better roads on August 26, right in the middle of the summer when most people hate to even think of bond issues!

It says it will vote $580,000, and when Ventura county says it will build roads, it will, if past performances speak for anything. The most important highway scheduled to be constructed in that county is probably between Ojai and Santa Paula.

Motorists in both ends of the State will watch San Luis Obispo county like a set of foxes, for in its bond issue, which is scheduled for September 23, the paving of the coast highway through Paso Robles and San Luis Obispo is provided for.

Anyone who has toured between Los Angeles and San Francisco remembers with displeasure the Paso Robles and San Luis ruts, and $25,000 is set aside for the fixing up of the route in San Luis Obispo, while $50,000 is allowed for the operation on Paso Robles. Furthermore, there is $115,000 provided for a bridge across the Salinas River at San Miguel. Other large sums are set aside for bridges and roads which will greatly increase the pleasure of living for Southern California motorists finding occasion to visit San Luis Obispo county.

Comes Santa Barbara county, stirred to action by a holler from Lompoc wanting a paved highway. In fact, Lompoc's desires in this respect seem to have roused the whole northern part of that county, and $1,000,000 is looked for to put Santa Barbara on the map of good roads.

Officials of the Automobile Club of Southern California are running true to past performances, and wherever they scent a good roads proposition a-borning they are right there on the job, nursing the newborn into healthy life. At the present time, the Auto Club is busy bringing the Ventura bonds into being.

Ventura county is pretty well fixed up with good roads, but there are some important bits not yet completed, and that county has never been a piker when it could see a way to better itself, therefore on the twenty-sixth of this month will be decided the question of whether $580,000 will be forthcoming to put Ventura in the very van of good roads sections.

The question of bridges is worrying San Diego county. Also some more good roads, notably the fixing up of that horrible stretch between La Jolla and the business section of San Diego itself. It is firmly believed by motorists who trundle over the paved State highway that the erection of the bridge just outside of Oceanside would be a good thing for San Diego.

Auto Club officers point out that in the hills and mountains of San Diego county lies some of the most scenically beautiful country in the State, and the resolution to find a way for providing funds for good roads and bridges in the section deserves all the boosting it can get.

Southern California thus leads the State in planning road improvement, it is pointed out, and the example set by the State in voting, six to one, for $40,000,000 to complete the State highway system is possibly responsible for the activity.

DETECTING MANIFOLD LEAKS.

A new way of detecting leaks in the intake manifold is found in the employment of a bit of the Japanese incense or punk, that is frequently used as a protection against mosquitoes. The lighted punk is moved all around the manifold while the engine is running. If there is a leak, no matter how small, the smoke will be drawn into the manifold when the punk is brought near the leak.

CRUDE RUBBER ON OWN PLANTATION.

TIRE CONCERN TO PURCHASE SOURCES OF THEIR SUPPLY OF THE MATERIAL.

Determined not only to control, but to own their own rubber supply and thus assure themselves that they are obtaining the best quality of crude rubber possible, O. M. Mason, president of the Mason Tire and Rubber Company of Kent, O., and J. P. Matthews, purchasing agent of the company, have decided to purchase a number of rubber plantations, according to information received by C. Fred Thompson, manager of the C. Fred Thompson Tire Company, distributors for Mason cord tires for Southern California and Arizona. Mr. Mason and Mr. Matthews will sail for the Orient on September 5 in order to make the purchase. The Singapore Straits Settlement will be their first stop.

According to Mr. Thompson, rubber, like wheat, grains and other products, is the best quality when harvested at the right period of the year. At this period of the year rubber may not always be obtained in as great a quantity as at other seasons, but the quality is of the best.

TIRES HANG UP A FINE RECORD.

EIGHTEEN MONTHS' SERVICE ON A DELIVERY CAR GIVES A REAL TEST.

"Mr. Sheldon, vice-president of the Cambria Spring Company of this city, told us that he has just taken off a pair of Globe tires which have done service continuously on the rear wheels of a light delivery car for more than eighteen months," said H. H. Anderson of Hawley, King Company. "The exact mileage was not recorded on these, but Mr. Sheldon is certain that the Cambria delivery car has been driven considerably more than 20,000 miles in the year and a half the Globe tires have been in use. The same company has a salesman who drives a Maxwell, and it is equipped with Globe tires, one of which has been in use for even longer than those on the company's delivery car, and it is apparently good for a good many more miles."

MAY PAVE SAN ANTONIO ROAD

Pomona C. of C. Wants to Make it Smoother.

Private Ownership Fails to Make Expenses.

Possibility of Making it a County Road.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

POMONA, Aug. 16.—Taking up a project which has been under discussion among certain business men for some time, the Chamber of Commerce has voted to instruct the chairman of the roads committee, J. M. Paige, to present to the county Board of Supervisors the proposition of paving a portion of the road leading into San Antonio Canyon.

It is well known that this is a privately-owned road, and that the San Antonio Water Company, to whom it belongs, has been to larger expense each year to maintain the road than the total receipts from Camp Baldy and the toll gate. According to figures presented to the directors of the Chamber of Commerce, the average annual expense is $5000, while the receipts are considerably less. For this reason the company is considering closing the road.

The San Antonio Water Company put the road in several years ago at an expense of $22,000. Most of the road lies in Los Angeles county. A proposition has been made by the company that if the original sum expended by the company can be refunded, the company will give the county a free right of way for a public road. Otherwise, the company is likely to close the road next season.

This matter was brought to the attention of the Chamber of Commerce by E. K. McComb of the Automobile Club, who stated that many complaints are being made because this road is not marked on the club signs. Mr. McComb stated that his organization refuses to sign any road that is not public, or that is used for monetary gain, which is the case with the canyon road, because of the tolls which are collected. For many years there has been a desire on the part of the public to dispense with the toll gate, but since the road is private there is no means of changing.

In the discussion it appeared the most desirable plan would be to connect the canyon road to the base line road at a short distance west of the mouth of the canyon. This would turn the bulk of the travel down toward Pomona instead of toward eastern cities. It is also suggested that the new road into the canyon, if built, should be constructed on the west side of the stream, and up on the crest or near it. This would eliminate the heavy expense of repairs from flood waters each year.

The Chamber of Commerce can do nothing in this matter now except to present it to the county Board of Supervisors, after which it is proposed to push the matter as rapidly as possible.

OTTERBEIN ROAD.

Another highway which received consideration was the road to Otterbein, the thrifty settlement west of Walnut, which is reached from the Pomona boulevard by a short road to the left. The residents of that section desire a better road, and as most of them trade in Pomona, they naturally turned to this city for assistance. The Chamber of Commerce values the trade from that community highly and expects to refer this to the Board of Supervisors for favorable action.

CONNECT LA VERNE, GANESHA.

Agitation is being made for the construction of a road from La Verne to Ganesha Park, which will cut off considerable distance between the two places. Very few people of Pomona realize how many residents of La Verne and San Dimas come to Ganesha Park every week. On an average day in Ganesha, a La Verne business man told Secretary Bayer, that he saw three La Verne people to one Pomonan and that the day in question was not an exception. The same idea was before the people of this city before the war, but was dropped at that time.

DISTILLED WATER.

Distilled water is, of course, absolutely essential for the storage battery. It is not always possible to procure this easily, and any car owner can make his own distilled water by means of a very simple apparatus. Have a length of annealed copper tubing coiled, so that it will fit in a dishpan. Connect the end of the copper tubing with an ordinary teakettle by means of a short piece of rubber tubing. The other end of the tube is curved so that the water passing down will drip into a bottle, or other container. The dishpan in which the coil rests is filled with cold water, frequently renewed, to keep it cold. The water in the teakettle is boiled, and the steam so produced passes out of the spout into the tube, through the coil, where it is cooled and condensed back into water again, and is finally collected for use in the bottle at the end of the copper tube.

CONNECTIONS TROUBLESOME.

DIRTY ONES QUICKLY RUN DOWN THE CHARGE IN YOUR BATTERY.

"One of the commonest causes of undercharged batteries," say A. J. Tobey of the Western Auto Electric Company, distributors for Willard batteries, "is loose or dirty connections. It is a good scheme to go over the wiring every once in a while, particularly between generator and battery. If there is a loose connection anywhere along the line it hinders the flow of current and will in time starve the battery.

"When it is found that a connector is loose at the battery, the best plan is to take out the bolt that holds it in place, take off the cable, rub both of the contact surfaces with sandpaper, bolt the two parts tightly together and finally coat all the exposed lead parts with a thin film of vaseline. You will then have a good tight joint and at the same time will provide protection against the corrosion that would otherwise result if any acid happened to spill on the lead."

APPEARANCE IS VERY VALUABLE.

CLASSY LINES ON CARS WILL AID MUCH TO THEIR SECOND-HAND VALUE.

"There are two chief factors that determine the resale value of any motor car. First and foremost, of course, is the way in which the car stands up under usage, and second is the matter of appearance," declares W. D. Wright, Roamer distributor for Southern California.

"The national used-car price lists will bear out my statement that the Roamer car has always commanded an unusually high resale price. This has been true not only on the Pacific Coast but all over the United States. It has resulted because the Roamer car has proved to be a long wearing car, and also because it has always held such a pre-eminent position in regard to appearance. Smartness of appearance is an asset in a motor car that has a very distinct money value. With a new coat of varnish, Roamers that have been in use for two and three years appear to be brand-new cars."

MAKES SPEED ON OUR PAVED ROADS.

Stepping it off in his Mercer "war horse" from Sacramento to Los Angeles without a stop except for meals, A. F. Scott, well-known tire man, arrived home early last week to finish up a job on which his associate, R. O. Jackson, showed record-breaking speed in the East. "We were after a certain make of tire," Scott said, "and Jackson landed the biggest lot that has been shipped out here in a long time. The fact is the Rubber City Clearing House Company got a carload and a half of one of the five leading tires direct through the factory."

BRAND NEW CAR IS HERE.

Combining the dignity, richness and distinctiveness of custom-built coach work with abundant power, speed and sturdiness of mechanical units, the new ReVere car has come to Los Angeles and has captivated the motor colony. For several days the racy, aristocratic sport roadster and four-passenger touring models have been seen on the streets of Los Angeles, and their appearance always has caused an unusual amount of craning of necks to get that desired "second look."

The first two models received by the California distributors, W. Dowling and I. L. Fisher, who operate under the firm name of the ReVere Motor Car Company of California, are now on display at the temporary showrooms at 949 South Broadway, where they are attracting scores of motorists whose tastes run to distinctive cars of the class of the ReVere. The keen interest already evidenced precludes a lively demand in this territory for the new ReVere, which, while being a comparative stranger in this field, has come with a reputation for popularity in the East.

Custom-built coach work and high-grade mechanical units have put the ReVere in the class of ultra-distinctive cars. Every detail down to the minutest point has been cared for in carrying out the motif of completeness. Comfort and convenience has been strongly expressed throughout the car.

The graceful lines of both the roadster and the four-passenger touring types have been enhanced by the richness of finish in painting, the individual steps that supplant the conventional running board, and the rakish appearance resultant from placing the two spare wire wheels, one on each side of the car, forward of the front doors. Even the headlights carry out the ReVere's exclusive appearance.

What the ReVere offers in fine coach work is substantially supported by the sturdiness of its mechanical features, which are topped off with a racing type Duesenberg motor that develops 105 horse power, and is capable of whizzing the stock car along the road at the rate of eighty to eighty-five miles an hour. The power plant develops a flow of energy that is equal to every demand, whether boulevard, city traffic or mountain conditions prevail. The tiger-like get-away that sometimes is so desirable is the response of stepping on the accelerator of the ReVere.

Magneto ignition is featured by the ReVere, which car incidentally embodies the lessons of years of racing practice by Gil Anderson and Tom Rooney, whose fame on the speedway and road is well known to motor speed enthusiasts throughout the United States. There is an oversize factor in every unit, to give utmost dependability.

Mr. Dowling and Mr. Fisher are highly elated with the favorable comments that the new ReVere models have occasioned, and they are exceedingly optimistic over the prospects of sending the car away to a flying start in this rich territory.

WILL RUN PLANTS ALIKE.

Determined to leave nothing undone in the way of preparation for an era of unprecedented activity in the automobile trade of Los Angeles, arrangements are being perfected by the Frank O. Renstrom Company, distributors of Grant and Atterbury trucks, to more thoroughly coordinate efforts here with those of the same company in San Francisco.

To this end Manager Earl V. Abbott has been in daily conference for a week with W. N. Bridges, auditor of the Frank O. Renstrom Company. Between them they have completed the installation of a system which shows at a glance every detail affecting the business from the time trucks arrive until they have been sold and delivered and even afterwards, for the system extends to a record of service provided for Atterbury and Grant truck owners.

"The automobile business has outgrown the guesswork, hit or miss stages of a few years ago, and ours is on a basis that has elicited compliments from numerous business authorities who say our system cannot be improved upon," Manager Abbott declared.

"Mr. Bridges has taken a lot of red tape out of things for us, just as all unnecessary movements have been eliminated by the Renstrom Company in San Francisco. We are sure of ourselves every step of the way, which is a distinct advantage to our patrons."

Another matter which occupied considerable time in the conferences between the Renstrom heads was the subject of enlarged quarters, and it is announced that in a very short time the Frank O. Renstrom Company will be housed in its own building, with enlarged accommodations for the complete line of Atterbury and Grant trucks and Grant six and Briscoe pleasure cars. Present plans call for not less than five floors in which the truck and pleasure car departments will be separated and each connected with everything possible to provide to insure convenience, comfort and the most efficient service.

WHY HE BOUGHT HIS CAR.

One of the most interesting house organs published by a motor car firm in the United States is the Don Lee Spirit, now entering upon its fourth year. The magazine is published in the interest of Cadillac owners and the Don Lee organization in California. It has grown from a four page leaflet to a very substantial and most interesting motor journal.

One of the attractive features of the Spirit is the variety of articles, there being something in every issue to interest all classes of readers. There is always information of value to Cadillac owners and much of a general nature. The feature article last issue was an article by Will Rogers, the rope swinging monologist, who is out here for a year in pictures.

The following is part of the Rogers's article:

"When I bought a Cadillac from these birds I thought I was through, but now I find that owning a Cadillac is a serious business. You have to write them articles and have your picture taken, and the deuce knows what else. Guess they want me to tell how I like the car. They are pretty safe there 'cause I have had it only three days and what else could I say but good? I will be here a year and maybe I will write again, who knows?

"Then they want to know why I bought a Cadillac. Well, if they got to know I will tell them.

"Up to the time I came out here I made my living by telling jokes on the stage, and some of the best jokes I ever told I thought of while riding in a Cadillac. Bet that's an argument no salesman ever thought of before.

"When I got out here I also heard that Miss Geraldine Farrar had bought one and as I sang a song in the Follies last year I thought that us singers kind of oughter hang together, for what is good enough for Geraldine and Lou is good enough for me.

"I also understand that when you want to soak one, or sell it, a Cadillac will bring you more than any other car, and at the price they charge moving picture people for everything out here I may not have it long.

"Now, the reason I got a closed car is because in an open car I had a lot of trouble losing some of my children; I could never seem to arrive with the same number I started out with. With this roof, and doors with locks, I don't have to count the children when they come out.

"I hope that I have better luck with this car then I did with a certain brand of hayburner I had in New York. Just before I was coming away I sold it, but had not delivered it. Now it happens that this car was insured for twice as much as I had sold it for, and when someone stole it from in front of the theater I figured I was in luck again. I was feeling pretty good over having my car stolen when darn if the police didn't find it. There ought to be a law passed making a man keep what he steals; that's the only way to stop automobile thievery."

SLAMMING ON THE BRAKES INJURIOUS.

Motorists cannot jam on their breaks without taxing their pocketbooks. Careful application of the brakes will save repair bills and increase the life of the tire substantially, according to E. Richard Just, of the Just-Crackel Rubber Company, local distributor of Diamond tires.

In slowing down at crossroads and street insersections many drivers wait until the last minute and then clamp on the brakes suddenly. Locked wheels result. The tires suffer the bulk of this abuse by grinding and sawing against the road surface. Very ofetn sharp stones are caught between the tires and the road and as the car slides to a standstill a hole is gouged or filed into the casing. Every time a brake is suddenly applied a portion of the tread is worn off, eventually baring the fabric carcass.

INSURANCE RATES DROP.

from the viewpoint of the motoring public, the policy of the club's insurance department, which is procured at reduced rates, actually entitles the individual motor car owner to better service due to the nineteen branch offices located throughout the southern part of the State.

These branches have been so strategically located that any trouble or accident involving an insured member can be reached within a half hour by a club representative. Service such as this has made the conference companies realize that they were batting against a type of service which could not be competed with, say club members, and the only solution for the life of the conference at all was to lower the rates.

That the Automobile Club's influence in this respect, notably in rate-lowering, will be nation-wide is probable, in view of the fact that other motoring clubs throughout the United States are taking up the insurance department idea. This rounds the death knell of high rates and indifferent service by the old line companies.

Commercial suicide is indicated in any attempt of conference companies to reduce rates to compete with the inter-insurance idea among motorists who have banded together so efficiently as in the Southern California club, say club officials, and the real solution to the fight for existence on the part of insurance companies is found in giving real service and quick adjustments.

Whether the companies can ever hope to compete with the Automobile Club in rapid adjustments and low rates is the problem which is now up for solution by the conference concerns. When such a system is mapped out, American auto owners will get the benefit, and forever thank the Auto Club of Southern California.

BATTERY TESTER.

A glass tube, which may be carried in one of the door pockets, makes an admirable instrument for determining the water level in the battery. In using it the tube should be inserted in the battery, with one end held over the upper end of the tube. By lifting the tube up slightly the depth of water in the battery at once appears in the tube. In refilling the battery with distilled water this tube may again be used. By holding the vessel containing the distilled water against the tube, the water will flow down the tube and into the battery without a spill.

USED CAR MEN INCORPORATE.

Plans for Organization Now Almost Done.

Will be Able to Perform Big Helpful Work.

Business will be on Reliable Basis Always.

Conforming with the announced intention to incorporate the Used Car Dealers' Association, its members have authorized President M. A. Leach to commission Attorney Dave F. Smith to prepare the necessary legal papers and push the proposition to a conclusion.

"Attorney Smith performed a similar service for the new car dealers of Los Angeles," Mr. Leach said, "and it was for this reason, in addition to others, that he was selected for the task of incorporating the Used Car Dealers.

"Of all plans which have come before the association none has met with such unanimity of opinion as the one to put the Used Car Dealers' Association on a more responsible footing in the State.

"The association to date has accomplished more for the trade than we had hoped for within the time we have been in existence, and by incorporating the association will be in a position to proceed more aggressively in the future. We want people to know that we are a compact organization operating in harmony to promote our own business welfare and protect those who find the purchase of used cars desirable from the standpoint of economy.

"Right now the public needs our co-operation more than ever before in automobile history, because so many must have cars and the only way to get all that are needed is to resort to the purchase of reliable used cars from reputable dealers."

RATTLING DOORS.

In the case of a rattling door the defective part can be detected by the simple expedient of holding each in turn while the car is running. Adjustment of the clearance between the spring bolt and its recess will cure the trouble.

ll the Nimrods Tasted thing but Salt Pig.

Fine Bucks Downed up in the San Emidio.

Better Later on When Moon is Dark.

t all the licensed nimrods of up-coast did not get on their early August is becoming evident as rolls on, recent reports Fish and Game Commission that the sport was much nearly normal than supposed the week.

Fish and Game Commis- Harry Pritchard returned western San Emidio coun- spending the first six days vicinity of Apache Canyon, a watchful eye upon the of the Western Kern from Taft, Maricopa, Bak- mostly. He found a of sportsmen from all The average of luck ahead of last year, but say, the bucks as a whole so mature as to hardness of horns as they were in August of 1918.

BIG HEADS.

Twelve legal deer were reported to the deputy at his camp in Apache Canyon, mostly still "in the velvet," but averaging prime and fat as to venison. Most were forked-horns, some freak heads, one a "stag." The heads were rather bigger than usual, and Pritchard ascribes it to the working-out of the "spike-buck" law, saying that there is a general disposition to observe this law upon the part of hunters without compulsion, as they are convinced it is resulting in fewer barren does, and will bring about a larger proportion of really big heads as the years go on.

Many deer were brought into Maricopa the first day, killed by native hunters who had the great advantage of thorough familiarity with the country. Four deer were downed in Apache Canyon the first day.

SOFT HORNS.

A considerable proportion of the hunters made the very natural mistake of taking it for granted that the bucks would be harder of horn than last year in harmony with the general character of the season, which is earlier than 1918. These hunted high in the ranges that will be frequented by the bucks two or three weeks hence, hoping to get a bigger, better deer by going high, and into the rough brush. This explains the sport being better in the lower canyons, the majority of bucks being still too soft to horn to punish themselves more than necessary in the brush.

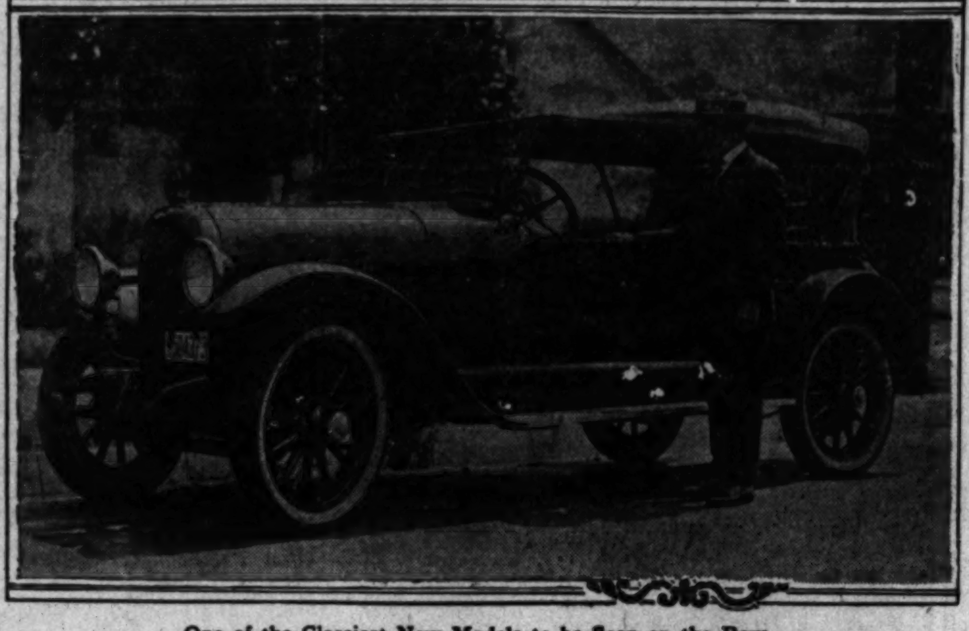
The moon being dark the first two mornings, hunting was favored considerably. The weather was not unduly hot, and little meat was lost by spoilage. Now, the nights are becoming too light, and there is good reason to believe that the best hunting will be enjoyed this season in the last few days of the month when the moon is dark again, and it is certain the best heads will be brought out about that time.

Deputy Pritchard issued transportation affidavits for Roy Silvernale of Santa Monica on a nice four-pointer, and for Jack Woods of Los Angeles on a forked-horn buck. Silvernale is a indefatigable and uniformly successful deer hunter, who usually visits the San Emidio section.

No fires developed from the hunting in this vicinity, although evidence of several incipient blazes started earlier in the summer were evident. No evidence of carelessness in handling camp fires was noticed by the deputy, who was watching out for all such in common with the Fish and Game Commission's policy of co-operating fully with the forest service in all such matters affecting the public welfare.

Deputy Jack Barnett opened up the season patrolling the Tapo Ranch country near the changed Los Angeles-Ventura line, while Deputy Les. Hare was on duty farther south at the west end of the Santa Monica range. Numerous hunters were ordered off the Conejo and Russell ranches, which are now all in Ventura county, and the western Malibu will not have to show much next Friday to beat all it has done by its loyal devotees thus far. But little of the hunting country is left in Ventura to come in under the earlier opening.

Deputy Barnett arrested several hunters without licenses, and all were fined in the local court. The Tapo and Strathearne ranches are posted against hunting, but as the country is wild, some slip in around the edges. Few deer ever are shot there as the brush is high, and conditions generally are against the hunter. More does use the vicinity than bucks, and males of legal size are rare indeed.



One of the Classiest New Models to be Seen on the Row.

This is a foxy new Paige recently purchased by Mr. Butcher, manager of the Clara Kimball Young studio.

EVERYBODY IS TOURING.

The motorist in the East has the touring fever that is fully on a par with that which has taken firm hold of his brother on the Pacific Coast, according to W. H. DuBois, one of the sales force of the Hupmobile department of the Greer-Robbins Company, Hupmobile distributors, who, with his family, has just returned from an extended auto tour. "The touring fever is not confined to any particular section of the land. It's everywhere," he said.

DuBois left Los Angeles with his family May 30 in a model N Hupmobile which had been in constant use for four years. Attached to the Hupp was a trailer loaded with camp equipage and weighing about 850 pounds. That he was able with this heavy load to traverse flooded sections in Nebraska and Minnesota and without receiving help save on one occasion, speaks volumes for Hupp construction. The Santa Fe Trail was followed to Denver. From there he traveled to Montendeo, Minn., by way of Hastings, Neb., and Yankton, S. D. The distance—2576 miles—was made in fourteen days, and his gasoline mileage was a trifle better than fifteen miles to the gallon. Considering the terrible roads encountered in many places, and the load, this average is exceptional, said DuBois.

The returned Hupmobile salesman condemns the Santa Fe Trail, or rather that portion between Ludlow and Kingman, in no mild terms. Discarded tires, tubes, rims and even broken wheels, mark the trail between those points, and he asserted that by reason of these the motorist need have no fear of getting off the "highway." The Raton Pass was very rough, but the grade, declared DuBois, was easy for the Hupmobile, which arrived in Frenchman Valley, Nebraska, the day following the visitation of a cloudburst.

The road in some places was eight feet under water and it was necessary to break through fences and cut across the prairie in order to reach a small town where the water was then as high as the street curbing. Boats that had been in use the day before were still tied to telegraph posts on the main street.

In the vicinity of Canby, Minn., another long stretch of bad road had to be negotiated. DuBois was advised that for a distance of about twenty-seven miles the road to Canby was impassable because of washed-out bridges. The Hupmobile made it on its own power with one exception, and then the car and trailer were down in the mud to their frames. After digging away mud that was several inches above the base of the radiator, a sturdy farm team did the job. The other side of Canby the Hupmobile for a mile was sent through water so deep that it poured through the raditor and out the hood louvres.

COUNTRY IS ACCESSIBLE.

The time is not far distant when the many scenic wonders of the Sierras and the lesser ranges may be viewed from paved automobile roads that will thread their heights and which will be part of State and county highway systems is the opinion of a prominent State highway official. There has been a movement in this direction for some time and now it seems to be taking concrete form with the resumption of pre-war activities.

"The State's mountain systems are one of its greatest assets for they offer healthy recreation and permit one to study nature at first hand," said Albert J. Russell of the Boulevard Motor Corporation, distributor of the Dorris. "Without the automobile they would be accessible to comparatively few."

Orange county is giving consideration to amplifying its already excellent road system by the construction of a scenic road through Trabuco Canyon to Santiago Peak, thence through Coldwater Canyon to Saddleback and by way of the beautiful Santiago Canyon to the good dirt highway that connects Modjeska's home and the Forest of Arden with Orange.

Last week Russell at the wheel of a seven-passenger Dorris made a trip into Santiago Canyon, going by way of the San Diego coast highway and El Toro and returning by the Modjeska-Orange road. Although teams hauling grain and lima beans have somewhat cut up the dirt road, it is in very fair shape. The Santiago road for about two-is in very good condition. The upper part of the road is impassable because of bad washes caused by heavy spring rains.

After the wide entrance to the canyon is left behind, the road by a gradual ascent, threads its way through a heavy growth of trees and undergrowth. For stretches of a half mile or more, this growth forms a complete archway over the road through which the sun barely filters and the light is dim and the air cool as in some cathedral. Then again there are openings that offer views of rugged mountains and their picturesque tops outlined against the sky.

Midway up the canyon, the mining camp which has been in a more or less dormant state for the past fifteen years, has again come to life. The property which is said to carry ore rich in silver, lead and zinc, is to be actively worked once more with modern machinery methods. Trucks are to be used to haul ore and supplies between the mine and Orange.

Some superb camping sites farther up the canyon are hardly available at this time for motorists because of washed-out roads. For the first time in thirty years, it is said, a creek which traverses the canyon and the bed of which is crossed several times by the road, is practically dry. A number of springs furnish plenty of water for camping purposes, however.

OUR ROADS WONDERFUL.

"No signs are required to know when you strike the State of California," said Mr. B. Q. Thomas on his return from a 7000-mile motoring trip in an Auburn beauty six last week. "We planned this motoring trip last summer and looked forward to it with a great deal of pleasure, as it was over a country that was new to us.

"We journeyed towards Salt Lake City and I wish to say that Lake Tahoe ended our good roads. We had dirt roads that were fair through part of Nevada, but the farther East we toured, the worse roads we encountered. In places there was just one chuck hole after another that our wheels would drop in to the hub, and these holes were filled with a fine flour dust that looked level and one never knew where these chucks were until the wheel dropped in.

"In the State of Utah we traveled roads that were so terrible that five miles an hour was uncomfortable. Then, after a short stay in Salt Lake City, we left for Yellowstone Park over bad roads and steep mountain grades. At some places where they were blasting and building new roads, you could only pass between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. on account of the blasting. This road work left the roads filled with sharp shale rock that cut the tires. In fact, the best cord tire would stand less than 5000 miles. We found many of the grades very steep, but were never disappointed in the performance of the Auburn beauty six delivering the goods with perfect ease and without heating.

"The scenery is wonderful and even more beautiful than pen or picture can describe, and a wonderful variation ranging from the Salt Lake Desert to the beautiful redwoods of the high mountains. But speaking of roads, it was unnecessary to read the signs or inquire when we reached California as the wonderful roads of this State leave a lasting impression which is never forgotten, with only about sixty miles dirt road between San Francisco and the Oregon line, and practically all boulevard between here and San Francisco. You can imagine how delighted we were when we reached the California line."

TRAVEL ELSEWHERE IS UNNECESSARY.

CALIFORNIA BOULEVARDS LEAD TO ALMOST EVERY KIND OF SCENERY.

Why envy motorists who make transcontinental trips and other long journeys when one may have all the joys of outdoor life in Southern California and over much better roads and amidst far superior scenery, said an official of the California Sales Company, distributor of Warner products and service.

"There are so many different drives in Southern California that the motorist may keep on the go for week-ends throughout the summer and the fall season and never repeat. The modern doctor prescribes motoring and still more motoring as a recuperative for his patients. Probably 30 per cent. of the thousand odd cars that were given new Warner installations and service by our large service department last week were bound for week-end trips in Southern California," he said.

NEW SALES MANAGER FOR RUBBER GOODS.

C. E. Cook, for many years a member of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company organization, first at Akron, O., with the mechanical goods department, and later as Pacific Coast manager, with headquarters at San Francisco, and for the last two years located at Akron, O., in connection with branch operating work, has been made sales manager of mechanical goods for that company.

NO LOAFING FOR THE MOTOR DEALERS.

LOCAL PLANT EXPECTS TO BE ON A CAR A DAY BASIS IN A FEW WEEKS.

Anyone who says the car shortage situation has produced a loafing period for men in the automobile trade in Los Angeles has a man-sized argument with R. A. Wilson. Wilson, as automobile men of the city know, is production manager of the Leach-Biltwell Company—and what is more he is producing with the help of an organization of producers behind him.

"There's no leisure about this plant," Wilson declared as he paused for an instant while dashing from the Leach factory through the office on his way for a bite of lunch. "We're right up to the handle now getting things in shape for September 1, when we will be on a car-a-day basis."

STARTS AND STOPS TOUGH ON CASINGS.

While considerable attention is given in the purchase of a tire to its mileage qualities over long hard routes, not enough attention is given, according to Howard S. Reed, Los Angeles distributor for the Canton cord tires, to the ability of the tire to withstand the gruelling work of frequent starts and stops made necessary in heavy city traffic.

Tires on city cars, as well as tires on the commercial cars used by city business houses, need qualities peculiarly their own. Their work is entirely different from the work of tires on long hard grinds. The frequent starts and stops, as well as the very necessary application of brakes at various times, puts a very hard task upon the tires.

The Progress of Motordom Depends Upon the Exacting Buyer

It is the discriminating buyer who has brought progress to the motor car.

He has not been satisfied with indifferent appearances, inattention to detail, or ordinary performance.

He has insistently demanded increasing efficiency, more comfort and greater beauty.

He measures a car not against the standards of yesterday but against the ideals of tomorrow.

To such a keen, appreciative critic the new Studebaker has a particular appeal.

It has not followed the trend, it has established it. It is a new and different kind of light car.

This you may prove by accepting our invitation to take a new series Studebaker car, drive it anywhere you choose, without expense or obligation.

TRUCKS

—and the cost of upkeep

Many truck owners are kept from enjoying the full benefits of their investment by the High Cost of Upkeep. What the High Cost of Living means to everybody High Cost of Upkeep means to these owners.

The AC model MACK truck represents the downward trend in Cost of Upkeep. The AC models in 3½, 5½ and 7½-ton capacities are the heavy-duty members of the MACK family. In their construction every provision for overloading is made and it is overloading that ends the life of the average truck.

The owner of a MACK AC model truck will tell you his Cost of Upkeep amounts practically to nothing when measured by the mileage basis.

MACK AC owners smile at repair bills, because of their almost total absence. The MACK AC is King of the Highway, but unlike other monarchs operates without an expensive retinue.

Factors of safety such as are not to be had in any other make of trucks exist in every MACK AC.

Central Americans Strong for Los Angeles-Made Products.

CENTRAL AMERICA BUYS.

That automotive products of American manufacture are in great demand in various parts of South and Central America is the message brought to this Coast by consuls of representative Latin-American countries, who have recently arrived in California.

Previous to the recent European war, Germany, France and England had made a strong bid for motor supremacy in the southerly countries. With the culmination of hostilities, Europe was unable to immediately turn to the building of automobiles, and as yet those countries that had been actively engaged in the export business have not been able to adjust production so as to meet demands at home. Statistics show that European automobile factories will be many months in adjusting production, labor, material and buildings, so that they will again be able to enter competition.

American automobile builders have already jumped into the first line in covering Latin America. Representatives of sales, executive and mechanical departments have been on the field for some months. Because of the increased activity and interest evidenced by this country, American motor vehicles have thus come into great demand, according to South and Central American consular officials.

It is a known fact that American manufacturers are confronted at the present in meeting demands at home. Automobile factories, body builders, axles, springs and motor builders have been endeavoring with feverish haste to make production balance with demand. This point has not been reached for the reason that America has "gone mad" buying automobiles, trucks, tractors and trailers.

The fact that American manufacturers have not confined all of production to distribution at home, but that an attempt has been made to fill the multitude of orders that have come here via cable and regular mail service, has tended to add stimulus toward cementing trade relations between the two continents. Every possible effort is being made to take ample care of Latin-American sales, many manufacturers having given export orders preference over local sales.

As "capital-letter" evidence of the interest being manifested by Latin America in producing American motor vehicles, Julio Giraldo, one of the best-known bankers, exporters and importers of Colombia; Hon. J. J. Serrano, Los Angeles Consul to Nicaragua, and R. S. Foncoso of Chile, were visitors at the Moreland Motor Truck Company recently. They were accompanied by John C. Allen, editor of Los Vecinos, who has spent more than twenty-five years in Latin-American countries.

The visitors were amazed at the size of the local manufacturing plant, to say nothing of the impression made upon them by the thousands of dollars' worth of machinery and the splendid system which enables the Moreland plant to market a purely western product. Heretofore, these men, like their countrymen, had believed that all of the automobile manufacturing of this country was found solely in the East.

According to the above-named South American representatives, a great field has been thrown open to Americans. The automobile craze has hit South and Central America as it has this country. There is a world of activity in road construction, floating road bonds, etc., in order to make ready for the passenger car, truck, trailer and tractor.

"With visiting South Americans coming to this Coast to buy automobile trucks and accessories, it is clearly evident that the West is due for a big slice of the automobile business that is to be transacted with our South American brothers," declared Watt L. Moreland, general manager of the Moreland Motor Truck Company.

HERE TO APPOINT A DISTRIBUTOR.

DETROIT REPRESENTATIVE WILL NAME LOCAL MAN TO HANDLE WHEEL.

W. T. Sewell, treasurer of the Sewell Cushion Wheel Company of Detroit, is visiting here for a week with the object of securing a representative for the Sewell Cushion Wheels. While en route here, Mr. Sewell stopped off at Denver and Salt Lake City and reports truck conditions in these territories exceptionally good.

"From what I have seen of conditions here, I am sure that Sewell Cushion Wheels have a big market and I also feel sure the truck operators here will soon recognize the valuable part Sewell Cushion Wheels can play in the operation of their trucks. In the East, South and Middle West, our sales have been increasing astonishingly."

OLD MODELS ARE GIVEN NEW LIFE.

The Greer-Robbins Company, State distributor of Chalmers cars, is now in position to equip all Chalmers models which precede the present one, with a hot spot attachment, according to L. M. Rash, sales manager of the retail Chalmers department of the concern.

"This attachment produces a clean combustible mixture which increases power and mileage, and which also maintains engine efficiency by eliminating carbon from the engine and spark plugs. With this attachment on my 1917 Chalmers I traveled better than 1000 miles while on my vacation recently and I averaged a little bit better than twenty miles to the gallon," he said.

NEW ACCESSORY FIRM OPENS UP.

One of the very latest additions to Accessory Row is the new firm known as the Turner Motor Supply, located on Grand avenue. The firm is composed of J. L. Turner, formerly of Chanslor and Lyon, and J. L. Turner, Jr., and C. L. Turner, who have recently been discharged after serving two years with the Marine Corps. The firm has a complete line of tires and other accessories.

TRUCKS WILL SAVE DAY.

Transportation men argue that it has been clearly demonstrated for several years now that the railroads cannot completely meet the demands of traffic. They see no future hope of relief through the railroads themselves. It is physically impossible for railroad rolling stock and terminal facilities to meet the fluctuating requirements of demand and supply. There comes the season for "moving the crops." That job alone, which demands speed, would tax the capacity of the railroads for several months, practically to the exclusion of all other business. Then comes the season when coal must be moved in vast quantities and quickly.

And thus it goes, transportation men point out. The railroads work most of the year on thousands of little jobs under the handicap of big jobs.

They point out that trucks can move in large or small fleets according to demand; that they are not restricted to central terminals for loading or unloading, but can overcome congestion by moving freely from one to another of the final destinations of their loads.

There is also a certain class of freight that because it demands special speed in handling or special care can best be handled on long as well as short hauls by motor truck. Live stock is in this classification.

Already some live-stock raisers have realized the value of the motor truck in the handling of their shipments. Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville and Kansas City markets are receiving and increasing the proportion of their hogs by motor truck. During 1918, in eight months, 72,887 hogs were hauled at Kansas City, an increase of 21,505 over the same period in 1917. At Denver the haulage of sheep increased more than 223 per cent., and approximately 13 per cent. in cattle and 12 per cent. in hogs. In a single day at St. Joseph, Mo., 190 trucks brought in 1400 hogs, 200 cattle and a large number of sheep.

Trailers practically double the value of the truck, with but slight increase in cost of operation. Recently one truck, running from Dallas to Farmersville, Tex., hauled four trailers. It carried seventy head of sheep, seventeen head of steers—net weight, 29,500 pounds—a distance of ninety miles. Of this distance twenty-nine miles were over black soil roads.

Even if the practicability of the commercial motor truck is still in the first stages of demonstration, its great value as a feeder of the railway system and for bridging the gaps between farm and near-by market has been clearly demonstrated, commercial men and farmers who have tried it are proclaiming. There is a network of motor-truck freight and express routes from practically all local markets throughout the United States today. New operators are coming into the field daily as new possibilities unfold themselves. Vast quantities of cream, butter and eggs that would have wasted on the farm are being marketed by the trucks, which carry to the farmer his requirements in furniture, binder twine, groceries and a thousand and one of the everyday necessities of life on the farm.

In this territory the interests of truck operators and shippers are watched over by a branch of the nation-wide organization of the Firestone ship-by-truck bureau, with headquarters at Akron, O. The bureau acts as a clearinghouse of information, bringing operators and shipper together. A. N. Wayne, who directs the bureau, has offices at 1165 South Figueroa street.

"At present we are centering our energies on the return-load problem," said Mr. Wayne yesterday. "We are determined to systemize the motor-truck express business in this territory so that no truck need make one-half of its round trip empty."

ANNOUNCE NEW AGENCY.

Were "Billy" Sunday to visit Los Angeles now he would be a surprised man indeed. Probably the first place he would look up would be the site of his famed tabernacle, and it is there he would encounter his chief surprise.

And, no wonder, for but little of the original site remains as it was when he was here. Buildings far more enduring than the temporary wooden edifice which sheltered him for some weeks while he exhorted the thousands who flocked to the tabernacle to hear him have sprung up as if by magic.

The latest of these is an unusually attractive building occupying a goodly frontage on the Grand-avenue side, near Pico street, which has been watched with increasing interest day by day by the more observant men along auto row. Their interest in it was two-fold, because it presaged the advent into the automobile distribution field of a new company and also because that new organization has succeeded for weeks in retaining as a secret information as to the make of motor cars they will represent in Los Angeles and vicinity.

Now the secret is out, and Davidson, House & Meyer, with a location at 1210 South Hope street, which will be retained, now occupy also the building erected for them at 1225 South Grand avenue, and they have formally announced themselves as distributors of the Cole aero eight.

The formal opening of the new sales and showrooms of Davidson, House and Meyer has been announced for Wednesday, August 20. It will be an all-day affair, with music from 10 a.m. until 10 p.m., during which hours the public is invited to attend.

The firm members—Francis C. Davidson, E. M. House and Robert A. Meyer—as well as H. L. Perkins, identified with the Cole car here for five years and now sales manager for the new distributors, will be on hand to welcome Cole owners, present and prospective.

Five models, two of them standard and three specially finished and equipped types, will be on display. Those who have been privileged to inspect the specially-equipped models have pronounced them marvels of motor-car refinement. The three cars—Cole roadster, sportster and tourster—each are finished in a different color in Davidson, House & Meyer's own shops, and they have received assurances in advance of the opening that they will be obliged to duplicate these special cars for a number of motorists who have declared they want a car of the same type and color.

The opening of the sales and showroom, itself declared by critical judges as one of the best rooms of the kind devoted to the purpose in Los Angeles, will round out the concern's accommodations for handling the various branches of the automobile business in which it has engaged.

Proceeding on the theory borne out in practice that "It is service that counts," Davidson, House & Meyer have put back of the Cole aero eight some of the most modern shop equipment to be found anywhere. This includes a well-lighted repair and pit room, a machine-room, battery and electrical equipment department, forging-room and other departments, all complimenting each other and each featured by complete mechanical appliances installed and the flood of daylight throughout the place.

Don't buy a truck that will depreciate too rapidly to be economical. You really rent a motor truck when you buy it. At the end of the period of your use for it, it should have a substantial cash value. Investigate the actual "after use" worth of any truck before you make your selection.

LIFE-TIME SERVICE

The first cost of the GARY TRUCK averages less than for any truck comparable with it. This, together with the unusual strength features incorporated into GARY construction, accounts for the very small percentage chargeable at the end of the year to depreciation.

In the GARY TRUCK every part—every unit—is known for its quality of perfection—its durability—its sound engineering. You need only compare the specifications of the GARY with the specifications of any other truck to see why every dollar of your investment buys sound value.

that should not be an excuse for total neglect. Underneath the car there may be many places that require oil through small cups, oil holes, etc. While some manufacturers are so far behind as to continue to use oil holes in exposed places, the owner of a car using them should not let them become filled with dirt.

AND THE BRAKES.

Sometimes brakes are hard to operate after a trip over muddy roads. It is because mud gets into the joints at the brake bands and other places in the braking system. These parts cannot be properly cleaned merely by wiping. One must dismantle them to get a clean working surface that will operate freely when lubricated. Cleaning of this sort prevents rusting and certainly goes a long way toward making for better handling and car operation.

In filling the transmission and rear axle with oil or other lubricant be sure that the filling hole or opening is clean. Pouring oil into a small opening with dirt all around the outside is bad, because the dirt goes right in with the oil. Then you hear gear noises and wonder how it happened so suddenly.

THE UNIVERSAL.

Universal points at best are hard to lubricate and even if covered with a leather boot are not proof against the ravages of dirt and mud. The more dirt that you allow to accumulate around these parts the more dirt will get to the working surfaces.

It pays to have the car washed underneath, but it also pays to wipe to surfaces after spraying on water. The wiping is necessary because some of the dirt sticks fast. Look over the smaller parts of your car, the parts that are hard to see and get at, also examine parts that don't give you any trouble. You don't have to do any more than to clean them and lubricate to make them run for a longer period.

SAN PEDRO HAD HEAVY TRAFFIC.

FOUR THOUSAND CARS AN HOUR ALONG HARBOR ROAD TO SEE FLEET.

"To anyone who visited San Pedro by motor car a week ago today, the stream of motor-car traffic that poured in and out of the harbor city was a decidedly impressive sight in itself," declared G. W. Keith, manager of the Standard Steel Automotive Corporation, Los Angeles representatives for the Standard eight.

"By actual count there were long stretches of time when the stream of motor cars poured into San Pedro at the rate of almost 4000 an hour over the Harbor boulevard. This is a little better than a car a second, and yet motor accidents were very few and those that did occur were of a minor character. A multi-cylinder motor is certainly appreciated in driving in such a crowd as that. The flexibility such a car as the Standard eight possesses makes it a very much easier task to handle a car in such a crowd."

TAKE UP TOUGH WAGER.

To bet a $1000 in gold on his judgment of the frailty and femininity showed the courage of "Bob" Battle, one of the characters in the film colony of Los Angeles.

Taking the opposite end of this golden wager and pinning his faith in a woman's ability to win the money, Harold L. Arnold proposes to show that Nell Shipman, movie star, and Marjorie Cole, a young society girl of this city, can drive an Essex over the roughest trail "Bob" Battle can negotiate.

One of the conditions of the wager is that Battle shall prove his own ability by personally placing a distinctive arrow at every point on the trail and that the conclusion of the test must end in the Devil's Punch Bowel out on the Mojave Desert three days after Battle leaves Los Angeles. A further condition is that a motion picture camera must be taken along to record every strenuous bit of cross country driving the girls make, so that the public shall be able to judge of their ability to overcome the difficulties placed by Battle en route.

Miss Shipman and her companion left Los Angeles yesterday in the Essex arrow and are now in the midst of their strenuous trip in the big rock country on the north slope of Old Baldy. From there the girls will be sent through the sand dunes of the Dry Lake region between Mojave and Barstow, ending their wild ride in the Devil's Punch Bowl and Pilot Knob section, the roughest portion of the desert.

According to Mr. Arnold he fully expects to win Battle's $1000, for he says the Essex car is light enough to overcome the terrors of the sand dunes and has more than enough power to successfully buck the mountain and rock part of the trip.

FORESIGHT IS PROVEN.

"An article in the current issue of Automotive Industries carries interesting confirmation of the farsightedness of E. A. Nelson, designer of the Nelson car," says Frank Nelson, Southern California distributor for the Nelson car. "The article in question is written by the technical expert of the trade magazine and deals with changes that may be expected in the near future in the more advanced types of American motor cars.

"'There are no doubt going to be some innovations in valve actions in the near future,' the article declares. 'The desire on the part of some designers to secure the greatest possible thermal efficiency is going to result in the use of the overhead cam-shaft type of engine where the car is high priced enough to warrant the careful workmanship necessary for success with this type of construction. An experimental six was recently put on the road with this type of construction, but was withdrawn because of noise. Slight alterations in the design are all that is necessary in the design are trouble in the opinion of the manufacturer. This will be the subject of test the next few weeks.

"'The use of the high pressure oil system which is growing and probably will continue to grow, not only helps to solve the problem of the overhead valve, but is conducive to the greater life of the bearing because of the cooling effect of the lubricant.'

"Both of these features of construction have always been incorporated in Nelson design. The over-head cam-shaft and high pressure oiling have made it possible for the Nelson motor to develop extremely high horsepower from a very small piston displacement, and secure a long-lived and highly efficient motor. There can be no question that this type of motor is destined to be much more widely employed and it is interesting to remark how far in advance of the average manufacturer the Nelson design proved to be."

HE KNOWS ALL ABOUT 'EM.

From farm implement manufacturing to the tire business may seem a far cry, but to H. D. Warfield, who has just taken over the agency for Los Angeles for the Gates Half Sole Tire, the change came as easily as the most simple event in a well-ordered life. All this was because Mr. Warfield was observant and noted every little thing in his particular line of business.

Some years ago Mr. Warfield was the purchasing agent for the Deere & Co. at Moline, Ill., manufacturers of the John Deere plows and other farm implements. In this capacity he had the opportunity to observe closely the work of the various articles purchased for the company.

It was under those circumstances that Mr. Warfield obtained his introduction to the uses and the work of the Gates Half Sole Tire. For the company he purchased more than $100,000 worth of tires yearly. He noted the great waste in the tires and the inability to salvage the partly used tires. To do away with this waste he cast about for a remedy. It came in the Gates Half Sole Tire. Making a study of the product Mr. Warfield found that partly used tires could be half-soled time and time again until thousands of miles had been added to the usual mileage of the tire. He was a Gates booster from that time on.

When the first opportunity came to show his confidence in the Gates Half Soles, Mr. Warfield took it, and as a result he has come into the possession of the dealers' rights for Los Angeles and has taken over the Gates concern at 938 South Main street.

TAKES PLACE OF A TRUCK.

Passenger motor cars seldom drift off into the field of the truck, but occasionally the necessity arises for the speedy handling of inanimate loads when the nearest truck is out of reach. Then it is that the car shows its sturdiness of construction, reliability and tractive power.

An interesting experience along these lines was related last week to L. V. Starr, manager of the J. W. Leavitt & Company, Oldsmobile distributors, by Don C. Anderson, a local mining man with properties in the Mojave district. It shows in a striking manner the exceptional power and sturdy construction of the Oldsmobile light six, and at the same time gives an idea of how varied are the uses to which a passenger car is adapted, although, of course, such treatment is hardly to be recommended as a regular thing.

Here is the way Anderson tells the story: "We, my brother and I, ran out to the mine ten days ago to look over the property and make a few changes in the plant. We found it necessary to move a 2000-foot water line a distance of three-quarters of a mile and we had no truck, tractor or mules available. The pipe was two-inch stuff, weighing five pounds or more to the foot, and wound around through the sage brush like a giant snake.

"After talking over every conceivable method of doing the job, some one suggested that we take our Oldsmobile light six, disconnect the pipe into lengths of 250 feet and drag it three-quarters of a mile through the heavy sand. I hated to do it for fear of injuring the car, but there was no other way out.

"We found a piece of three-eighths wire cable and attached it to the frame just above the spring hanger. Then we fastened the cable to one of the 250-foot lengths of pipe and off we went. The sand was that mushy sort that hangs on, and the tires sank right down into it, but the little car walked away with the load without any trouble and we took the whole line that three-quarters of a mile without bothering either pipe or car. Those lengths would weigh 1250 and 1500 pounds, three-quarters of a ton, and made a rather unwieldy sort of a load swinging along for a foot or eighteen inches off the sand, but we made it in fine shape."

Mr. Vesper's main subject will be "How About 1920" in which he will point out the importance of national dealers' strength, the value of trade information, our association in national highway constructions and legal department which is so efficiently handling the legislative affairs that are of vital importance to all motor car dealers.

Those who are fortunate enough to hear Mr. Vesper speak will hear first-hand some of the good work done in adjusting motor vehicle affairs in Washington. It is Mr. Vesper's intention at this time to make Los Angeles his headquarters until about September 1.

SEVEN YEARS' USE MAKES IT QUIET.

SLEEVE-VALVE ENGINE SEEMS TO RUN MORE SMOOTHLY NOW THAN WHEN NEW.

"People who have never had any experience with the sleeve-valve type of motor such as the Stearns employs, find it hard to credit the statement that these motors grow quieter with use," says Frank S. West, sales manager for Lynn C. Buxton, Stearns distributor for Southern California. "One of our Stearns users came in the other day to testify that it is absolutely true that the Stearns motor does grow quieter with use. He was Fred Andres of Fullerton, and he is in an unusual position to judge in the matter, for he is the owner of four Stearns cars, the first one purchased in 1912, and the last in 1918.

"'All are quiet enough, but it is a fact that the 1912 Stearns, which has run much farther than any of the others, is the quietest of the lot,' Mr. Andres told us. 'It runs more smoothly today than when I first purchased the car, and it develops even a little more power, I think, than it did when it was new.'"

BIG EXPANSION BEING PLANNED.

SPEEDOMETER MANUFACTURERS TO ENLARGE BUSINESS WITH MORE CAPITAL.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Details of the reorganization of the Van Sicklen Speedometer Company and its plans for expansion were announced yesterday. The company, which recently was reincorporated, will have capital of $2,500,000 compared with $250,000 for the old company. It is stated that the enlarged capital is fully subscribed.

The reorganization has been largely in charge of Norman W. Church, who will be chairman of the board of directors. He stated yesterday that all the stockholders of the old company retain their interests in the reorganization, among the larger interests being John N. Willys of the Willys-Overland Company, C. H. Hurlburd, president of the Elgin Watch Works; Ernest A. Hamill, president of the Corn Exchange National Bank; George M. Holley, president of the Holley Carburetor Company; T. F. Sheridan and A. D. Edwards. N. H. Van Sicklen, Sr., will be president of the company, and his sons, N. H. Van Sicklen, Jr., and Charles Van Sicklen, will be vice-president and secretary, respectively.

DISTRIBUTOR FOR NORTHWEST NAMED.

A still further increase in the distribution facilities of the Mohawk Rubber Company on the Coast, has been made through their appointment of the Rubber Service Company as the distributors for Seattle, Wash. Their first carload of Mohawk tires has been shipped.

They will carry a large stock of Mohawk casings and tubes, special attention being paid to the Mohawk cord tires. This is one more link in the chain of branches and distributing stations the Mohawk Rubber Company has been throwing over the entire country, for the purpose of placing a full stock of Mohawk tires and tubes within a few hours shipping distance of every dealer in the country.

IS DISTRIBUTOR FOR TWO LINES.

W. L. Elbe, president of the Elbe Motor Car Company of Hollywood has purchased the outstanding stock and interests of the company and has been appointed distributor for two well-known makes of motor cars, announcement of which will be made in a few days. Mr. Elbe will build a fine new salesroom which he says will be one of the finest equipped for sales and service in Southern California. Mr. Elbe has been associated with the Cadillac for the past seven years and is one of the best known and most popular dealers on the Pacific Coast.

Here to See That a Whole Lot of Automobiles are Sold.

This is Fred W. Hauger, Pacific Coast sales manager for the Haynes Motor Car Company of Kokomo, in a 1920 model Haynes.

ALL READY FOR CAMPAIGN.

To aid Walter H. Fisher, Haynes distributor for Southern California, in introducing the new 1920 Haynes models to local motorists, Fred W. Hauger, Pacific Coast sales manager for the Haynes company, arrived in Los Angeles last week. Two or three carloads of the very latest models of "America's first car" reached Fisher's Grand-avenue salesrooms last week. The shipment included both open and enclosed types of the new Haynes series, in both the six and the twelve cylinder types, and the handsome cars attracted not a little attention among local motor enthusiasts.

Many refinements of detail are to be noted in the newest Haynes models, chief among them being a striking new, all-aluminum body with bevel edge and pleasing lines. Cord tires are standard equipment on the new cars, and many minor changes that add to the comfort and convenience of the motorist are incorporated in the new Haynes.

"It is a matter of pride with us that no changes that could be classed as radical have been found necessary in the Haynes in the past five years," said Hauger last week at the local Haynes headquarters. "Scores of refinements have been made in that period, but the experience of thousands of Haynes users has been so satisfactory as far as the general chassis design has been concerned that not a single change of a sweeping nature has been found advisable.

"The only problem confronting the Haynes factory this year is one of production. The war work assigned by the government to the Haynes plant consisted of the building of truck motors. This of course meant a complete rearrangement of the production facilities of the factory. It has been slow work to get into full production again on motor cars, but the factory has almost reached that point now.

"When I left San Francisco, the Haynes agency there held forty-four unfilled retail orders for the new cars. The interest that has already been displayed in the new models here leaves no doubt in my mind that the Southern California demand for them will soon be beyond the ability of the factory to meet."

Hauger expects to leave for a visit at the Haynes factory the latter part of this week. His stay there will probably occupy almost a month, and he has promised Walter Fisher to bring back first-hand information regarding Haynes production plans for the coming season.

The first of the 1920 series Haynes to be delivered to a Los Angeles owner was a handsome blue sedan which was purchased last week by Herman R. Levi, president of the Capitol Milling Company.

GET LOCATION AT LAST.

After thirty days scouring the city, with the assistance of the newspaper men and real estate men, as well as dozens of others, W. P. Herbert Company succeeded in getting a temporary location at 1047 South Olive street. This will be the Cleveland six headquarters in Southern California, until the new four-story building at Eleventh and Flower streets is completed.

Monday morning this week was the start of the W. P. Herbert Company in active business. Practically all the time since Monday, Mr. Herbert and Mr. Smith have been interviewing dealers from the various Southern California territories. From one town there have been eighteen applications for Cleveland six representation; from another twelve; another eight and so forth. There is hardly a town in Southern California where an application has not been filed in person or writing. The tremendous interest and aggressiveness shown are not only a tribute for the Cleveland car, which is built by old established auto men, but shows how quickly auto business men can see the sales and profit possibilities in handling a light, popular priced car, which meets the expectations of the motoring public.

The applicants for territory are all being given consideration by the Herbert company, and for the next few days they will continue to be occupied with this alone. No contracts have been closed so far, the Herbert company preferring to go very thoroughly into the matter now, aiming to avoid possible future dealer changes. The first carload of Cleveland six touring cars leaves the factory at Cleveland, O., this week, and will arrive in Los Angeles in about two weeks. It is the intention to begin dealer deliveries as soon as they arrive, in order that the cars will be distributed uniformly throughout Southern California, so that the great number of interested persons may see and ride in the new car.

Mr. W. P. Herbert, the president of the company, is a very experienced auto business man, having been a former director in the Chandler Motor Car Company and at present is the head of the Herbert Bros. Company, of Philadelphia, Pa., Cleveland and Chandler distributors in that section. Mr. Smith was the general manager for five years, of the Armstrong Company, Southern California Chandler distributors, and is familiar with the automobile business in Southern California. Owing to the fact that Cleveland cars will not arrive for almost two weeks, they will have ample opportunity to arrange their dealer connections and intend to devote most of their time giving dealer applicants consideration. They hope to have all the dealerships in the larger centers closed before the first carloads arrive.

PUT RAILROAD ON THE FRITZ.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, Aug. 16.—There is a reason for the curtailment in service on the steam railroad lines of Southern California and that reason is the automobile truck, according to a well-known railroad man of the city. He says that he made a survey of Redlands this week and there are just twenty-five automobile trucks plying between Los Angeles and Redlands every day. Five of them come up every morning loaded with fruits and vegetables from the gardens of Los Angeles and vicinity and they go back loaded with the fruits that are grown here. The other trucks are owned by private concerns and are used in hauling fruit and other commodities to Los Angeles. One firm with six trucks has just taken the contract for hauling all packed apples from Yucaipa to Los Angeles, about 150,000 boxes. Another firm has the contract for hauling about 100 tons of hay from this section to Los Angeles. Another firm has big trucks that haul great loads of lumber from the coast directly to this city, the railroad man says.

MANY CHANGES IN THE NEW MACHINE.

COMMENCE WITH THE RADIATOR AND CONTINUE BACK TO REAR END.

"The 300,000 chassis plan is still the leading feature of the Maxwell car," said T. C. Whitcomb, director of sales for Harold L. Arnold, Maxwell distributor for Southern California and Arizona, "and the improvements made on the '20 series place this car as the peer of four-cylinder automobiles.

"The car cannot be appreciated by anyone who has not seen it, for the changes start with the radiator and end with the large and powerful rear end. More power is given this wonderful car by the use of lightweight pistons, combined with the famous hot spot ram's horn carburetor, with the spark plug placed in the center of the explosion chambers. The use of the Thermoid universal cushion drive eliminates vibration to the lowest minimum. The solid steering post is also an improvement. The emergency brake has been placed directly on the transmission, getting away from any oil or grease. Also a large service brake."

A Self-Starter for the Liberty Motor.

This is the Bijur self-starter on the 400-horse-power Liberty aviation motor and it is stock equipment on the United States Navy seaplanes.

STARTERS ON AIRPLANES.

It is not generally known that the NC flying boats which accomplished the successful trans-Atlantic flight were the first heavier-than-air machines in this country to be equipped with electric self-starters for each of their big Liberty engines.

The result of the Navy Department's decision to so equip its seaplanes undoubtedly aided the success of the enterprise, for the NC-3, lost in the sea and fog near the Azores, all her engines stalled, wet and cold, would never have been able to taxi into Ponta del Gada under her own power without the assistance of mechanical means for starting her propellers.

The picture shows this little starter attached to the propeller shaft of one of the big Liberty motors which drove our seaplanes through the air.

This little device, the work of Bijur Motor Appliance Company of Hoboken, N. J., consists of a small 12-volt electric motor operated by a storage battery connected through a geared reduction to a Bijur automatic screw drive. On the end of the screw shaft is cut an eight-tooth pinion which meshes with a larger gear on the propeller shaft. The starter will turn over the engine at forty to fifty revolutions per minute, with a consumption of 100 to 110 amperes and a maximum of 1200 foot pounds is available on the engine crank shaft for breaking loose a cold engine. When the engine begins firing the screw drive automatically demeshes from the crank shaft gearing. The storage battery weighs twenty-six pounds and has a rating of twenty-four ampere hours or sufficient to supply enough current to make 150 starts on one charging.

An interesting incident of the American trans-Atlantic flight was that all three planes carried extra propellers, intending if one should break to descend to the water, change propellers, and start off again. They depended on the starter to make this possible.

It is also said that the C-5 (blimp) met such strong headwinds on her trip from Montauk Point, L. I., to Newfoundland that the force of the wind stopped her propellers, and it was necessary to ascend to a higher level to avoid them, the starter with which it was equipped starting the engines while in mid-air.

Aeronautical navigation has undoubtedly received a progressive impetus by the development of devices capable of turning over the engine while in flight.

In the days before aeronautical starters were developed—which is to look back scarcely two years—it took three men to start an airplane. One man turned over the propeller while two others, grasping him by his extended hand stood ready to pull him away from the tremendous sucking power of the fast revolving blades.

Airplanes of the future will no longer be forced to glide to doubtful safety when engines stall high up above the clouds.

A new aircraft engine starter, which fits on the nondriving end of the engine, has just been developed. It operates substantially the same as the propeller end starter (described above) except that the gearing is fully inclosed and the starter projects less than five inches from the crank case.

The starter is entirely disconnected from the engine except during the time of starting. The gears cannot be meshed while the engine is running and a safety device is provided which prevents damage in case of backfire.

This starter is being built to fit the Liberty, Curtiss, Thomas-Morse and other prominent makes of engines.

Twin engine dirigibles of the "C" and "D" classes, United States Navy, have adopted the Bijur starting system. The equipment has also been in use for some time on blimps, using Hispano-Luiza engines and has more lately been applied to nacelles fitted with the "all-American" Union engine.

It is interesting to note that a flying station has been established at Atlantic City, N. J., where anyone, by the payment of $25, may get a ten-minute ride in an airplane. These planes which are of the Curtiss "MF" flying boat type are equipped with electric self-starters.

Templar
The Superfine Small Car

Until the coming of the Templar there had never been built in America a small car that was luxuriously comfortable and inexpensive to operate.

The discerning motorist is turning to the smaller car, for it is easier to drive—particularly in city traffic—and the cost of operating is far less than a heavier car.

With a speed from three to sixty-five miles an hour on high, light, although holding the road as if geared to it at the highest speed, small in size and superfine in quality, the Templar is ready for your inspection.

For the present we can make immediate deliveries.

GUARD AGAINST OLD AGE.

Old age in a motor car usually manifests itself in two unmistakable forms—lack of power in the motor and decrepitude of the body of the car as shown in ill-fitting doors and ineradicable squeaks, due to a frame that has sagged and weakened with long usage. The loss of motor power is very frequently due to excessive wear on the walls of the cylinders, from the long continued action of the pistons, until it is no longer possible to maintain good compression in the cylinders. With the ordinary motor there is no remedy for this except the practice of reboring the cylinders and installing over-size pistons. This is expensive, and frequently fails to prove satisfactory, owing to the difficulty of securing an exact piston alignment in the rebored job. When a car has a motor with cylinders badly worn the frame weakened from use, it is well past its days of real usefulness, and its second-hand value has dropped extremely low in the eyes of motor car experts.

"The skill of the engineers who designed the Marmon car provided so effectually against these two forms of wear that it is really hard to set a limit on just how many years of usefulness and how many miles of travel may be economically secured from a Marmon car," declared Al G. Faulkner, California distributor for the Marmon.

"In the Marmon motor for example, the cylinder block is a casting of aluminum alloy, strong, light, and proof against rust or corrosion. The walls of the cylinders are cast iron sleeves, fitted tightly into the aluminum block. When a Marmon motor has reached a stage of wear that in the ordinary car would demand a reboring job, all that is necessary to do is to replace the worn sleeves with new ones. As far as the cylinders are concerned the motor is thus made as good as new. The alignment of the pistons is not disturbed. With bearings tightened and valves ground, a Marmon motor with new cylinder sleeves is virtually as good as new.

"The unique design of the Marmon frame with its very unusual depth, secures an absolute rigidity that protects the body of the car from the destructive racking and weaving that a light frame eventually imposes. As a consequence Marmon bodies do not show wear even after long usage. One of the first of the Marmon "34s" which we sold in Los Angeles, has already traveled over 100,000 miles, yet few people would think to examine it that it had gone one-tenth of that distance.

MANY SALES OF TRUCKS.

While automobile dealers everywhere in California are finding a greater demand than ever before for cars, their fellow-dealers in the truck end of the automobile business are also reporting an era of prosperity before undreamed of.

One of the most enthusiastic men in the city over the truck selling possibilities in this section of the State is Freeman A. McKenzie of the City Garage, Inc., distributors here for the Commerce truck.

The demand from the smaller towns and the country districts during the last few months for the Commerce has been so great that already McKenzie is pleading with W. B. Wood, Pacific Coast Manager for the Commerce Motor Car Company for a larger allotment of trucks than he had before thought it possible to sell here.

Simultaneously with this demand he also made the announcement that a branch had been opened in San Diego under the management of Lieut. W. H. Perry, and that the rapidly growing business in that section of the State would be taken care of through this branch organization.

An interesting story of the appointment of Perry to his new position is told by McKenzie. It appears that during the war Lieut. Perry was in charge of the Motor Transport at Rockwell Field and that he had thirty-five Commerce Trucks under his charge at that time. So well did these trucks conduct themselves under the hard service given them, that Perry was convinced that they were about the best power wagon on four wheels.

So with the coming of peace Perry looked up the Commerce distributors here, which happened to be McKenzie and came to an arrangement with him whereby he would have charge of the San Diego branch.

TIRES FAIL TO SHOW THE WEAR.

FOURTEEN - HUNDRED - MILE TRIP THROUGH YOSEMITE DOESN'T HURT.

"A man dropped into my office the other day and asked me to come out and look at a set of tires on his car," said F. H. Osler, Racine tire distributor, one day last week. "I went out and looked them over carefully. They were a set of Racine country road fabric tires, almost brand new and in first-class condition. 'How far do you think those tires have run,' the motorist asked me. I told him that they had apparently had less than 1000 miles of driving over boulevards, for the sharp edges of the non-skid corrugations had been barely dulled by the road.

"'Those tires have been to Yosemite Valley, San Francisco and return, with a total of 1400 miles, and more than 100 miles of steep, rugged mountain road,' the owner of the car, Blake Murray, told me. 'I carried a heavy camp outfit in the car, and there were many places on steep, rocky turns of the Yosemite road that imposed a very severe test upon the quality of a tire's tread.'"

TIRE GUARANTEE IS MADE BY USER.

"That the user now makes the mileage guarantee on Victor tires is the sum and substance of the new adjustment policy of the Victor Rubber Company, according to Manager N. Bershon, of the Bershon Tire Company. This means that the mileage obtained from Victor cord and fabric tires must satisfy the user, and be as large as usage and road conditions should reasonably be expected to produce.

This mileage may be 10,000 miles on the light car traveling over paved roads, or only a fraction of this on the heavy car running over mountain roads. In either case, the user must be satisfied, and Victor dealers are pledged to give this mileage satisfaction to their customers."

BEARING TROUBLE.

The average car owner does not realize how slight a bump may have a disastrous effect on the car's mechanism. The writer recently found a case where a comparatively slight bump against the curb bent a rear axle shaft, and this in turn caused excessive wear of the inner face of the right end roller bearing, so that the entire bearing had to be replaced.

National Automobile Chamber of Commerce Boosts Truck Transport.

The possibilities of improving facilities for marketing farm products, the handling of city to country and vice versa transportation problems are taken into serious consideration by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. President Charles Clifton of the chamber has appointed a strong committee of successful and forceful executives from the motor truck field to be known as the Rural Motor Express Committee. Coming at a time when the high cost of living is a national issue, which demands close attention and co-operation the work of this committee is looked upon as being very important, through it plans can be devised and propaganda started that would make the entire country a network of rural express routes, thereby materially cutting down prices, getting the farmer better prices for his product and cutting out that much discussed middleman, jobber and whatnot before the farm produce reaches the consumer through his local dealer.

The men selected for this committee by President Clifton are James L. Geddes (chairman,) President of the Kelly Springfield Motor Truck Company, Springfield, O.; G. D. Wilcox, director of sales and advertising of the Commerce Motor Car Company, Detroit; E. A. Williams, Jr., president and general manager of the Garford Motor Truck Company, Lima, O.; O. H. Browning, truck sales manager of the International Harvester Corporation, Chicago; A. T. Murray, president and general manager of the Bethlehem Motors Corporation, Allentown, Pa., and F. W. Fenn (secretary,) N.A.C.C.

That the committee will be called together early for a discussion of the problem before it is the opinion here. It is possible that they will offer co-operation to the officials at Washington in helping to solve the high cost of living problems, as well as taking the matter up with Gov. Cox of Ohio and Atty.-Gen. Alex Groesbeck of Michigan in the price reducing campaigns now being waged by those public spirited officials.

The committee has abundant information to prove that the truck in rural express service can be a big factor in reducing prices of food. They can prove that the farmer cannot profitably produce perishable foodstuffs unless he can get them promptly to market. They can prove that these express routes would be keen competition to the alleged combines who now control the food making prices of today. They can prove that the rural express route will allow the farmer to produce more at less expense and give him more time on his farm, as he will not have to spend time taking his produce to market if he does not sell to a combine or one of its subsidiaries. They can prove that rural express routes now in operation are profitable to their owners and a real service to customers. Rural express routes cut down the number of times an article must be handled from the time it leaves its point of pick-up until it is delivered to its destination.

G. D. Wilcox, the Detroit member of the committee who has been notified of his appointment, declares there is much the committee can and will do, but he declines to give any opinion of definite statement, preferring to let the committee's chairman make public announcements.

PROTECTING THE BENCH.

The motorist who does considerable bench work, may be glad to know that it is possible to protect the bench from excessive wear by placing on it a pad consisting of cast iron disk, hollowed out at the center and filled with lead. This will act as a sort of anvil for a long time and when the lead gets too badly battered it may be removed.

ONE KICK FROM TWO THOUSAND.

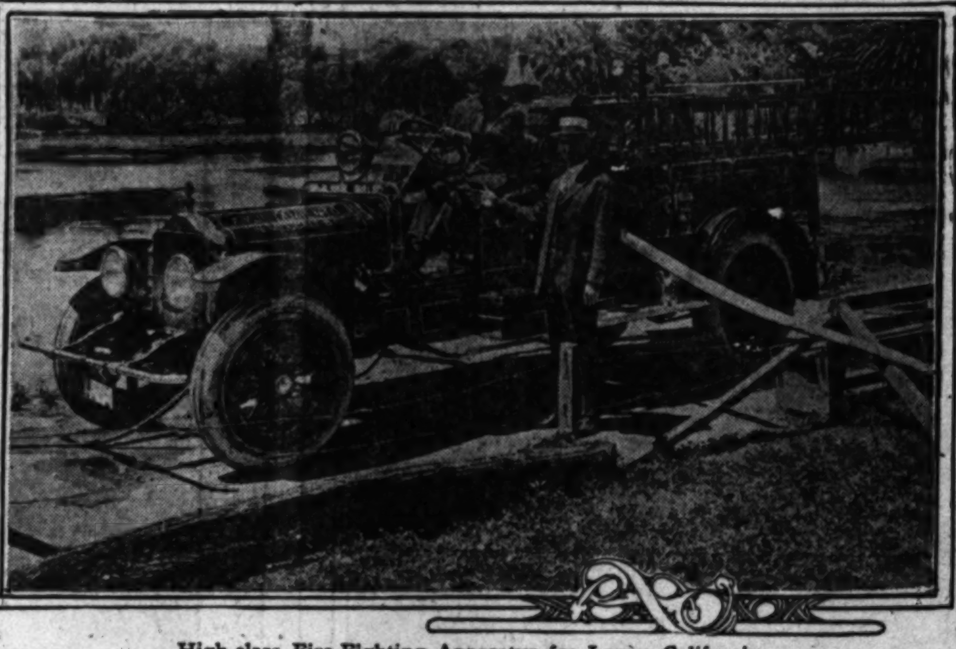
ONE-TWENTIETH OF ONE PER CENT. OF HIS CUSTOMERS ARE NOT SATISFIED.

Modern automobile tires have reached a degree of perfection in construction that is astonishing, according to S. Minnice, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Western Auto Supply agency. Very few other lines of industry produce goods that are as uniformly satisfactory as do the makers of standard brands of tires, the local accessory man declares.

"Recently we checked over our past year's sales of Paramoid tires," said Minnice last week. "We actually found that our customers' complaints in regard to the performance of these tires numbered one twentieth of one per cent. of the total number of sales. That means that out of every two thousand Parmoid tires we sold, only one failed to give complete satisfaction. That is really an astonishing degree of perfection for any sort of manufactured product."

VALLEY POPULAR WITH MOTORISTS.

The great number of beautiful camp sites which are spread over the entire country surrounding the Yosemite Valley proper has made that national park the most popular resort in the State this year and motorists by the thousands have flocked to the valley from all parts of the State for their summer vacation. "I believe that the popularity of the Yosemite Valley as a summer resort, shown this year by the record-breaking crowds which have flocked to the valley by motor car, is due in a large measure to the nation-wide publicity given the park by the national government during the past year," declared Foster Curry, manager of the camp which bears his name and which is located almost at the exact center of the government reserve.



High-class Fire-Fighting Apparatus for Lower California.

Chief Scott of the Los Angeles fire department inspecting White sixteen-valve triple combination pumper at demonstration in Echo Park. This apparatus was purchased by Col. Cantu, Governor of Lower California, for service on the Mexican border.

FIRE ENGINE FOR MEXICO.

Col. Cantu, Governor of Lower California, believes in preparedness. With the large number of American industries now established across the Mexican border, the colonel was farsighted enough to realize that adequate fire protection was necessary, and after a careful investigation of different makes of fire apparatus on the market, the colonel some time ago placed an order with the White Auto Company of Los Angeles, distributors of White products for Southern California, for one White sixteen-valve, seventy-horsepower triple combination pumping engine. His apparatus arrived in Los Angeles a few days ago and has caused a great deal of favorable comment among the local city officials.

A demonstration of the White apparatus was staged in Echo Park last Wednesday and Chief Scott of the Los Angeles fire department was an interested spectator. The White machine pumped well over its rated capacity of 600 gallons per minute and the demonstration was a revelation to the local city officials as it is a very flexible unit, having four speeds forward, enabling the apparatus to travel at a rate of forty to fifty miles per hour, if necessary, and has all the latest improvements incorporated in its construction.

During the recent convention of the International Association of Fire Engineers in Chicago the White sixteen-valve triple combination pumper created a sensation by pumping continuously for sixty hours. This sixty-hour run exceeded by forty hours the best previous continuous run which has been authenticated. The test was made on the Chicago Municipal Pier while pumping from draft under the observation of members of the association. Heretofore, the previous record for a nonstop pumping test was twenty hours and when this twenty-hour point was reached the White pumper was working so satisfactorily that the different fire chiefs in attendance at the convention requested the officials of the White Company to allow the pumper to continue operating day and night until the sixty-hour mark was reached.

E. R. Townsend, engineer of the Stock Fire Insurance Companies, made a careful inspection of the cylinders, valves, bearings and other working parts of the White pumping machine at the conclusion of its sixty-hour test and found the motor and pumping equipment to be in very good condition. According to the pitot tube measurements the pumper was delivering on the average of 625 gallons of water per minute at a net pressure of 123 pounds per square inch.

The pumper which the White Auto Company of Los Angeles is delivering to Col. Cantu is an exact duplicate of the triple combination pumper used in the Chicago test.

ADMITS HE WAS TOWED.

Touring across the sunny south is a combination of motoring and "barging" according to George Baxter, of South Oxford street, who, with his family, recently returned from a lengthy motor trip through the southern States, up the Atlantic coast and back by way of the Lincoln highway.

"I'll frankly amdit that my Dodge was towed on several occasions down in Texas and Louisiana," said Mr. Baxter last week. "On the occasions in question, however, it was on a barge and a motor boat was doing the towing. This, too, over places where roads were theoretically located If you want a really strenuous bit of motor touring, I can strongly recommend a trip from Los Angeles to New Orleans in the spring, particularly if it has been as damp a spring as we encountered.

"There is gumbo to be encountered in Texas, too, that after a heavy rain is absolutely impassable. When a storm catches you in that country there is nothing to do but make the nearest farm house and stop. I don't believe a tank could find traction in that stuff.

"Beyond New Orleans we found better road conditions. In Florida we found some of the best roads of the entire trip, particularly up the east coast, where we made as high as 290 miles in a single day over very good highways.

"One very interesting thing to us was the interest which everyone displayed everywhere concerning California. Even through the south and in Florida we were eagerly plied with questions about California wherever we stopped. Everybody seems to want to come.

"Up the Atlantic coast we found some bad road through the Carolinas, and in Virginia as well. Between Richmond and Washington we encountered such a stretch of impassable mud in the Dismal swamp that the road authorities had stationed teams there to pull all cars through.

"I have driven my Dodge over many of the roughest roads in California, but the trip through the south that we made was the most strenuous that I have ever made. It is a wonderful trip from a scenic standpoint, but I should hesitate to advise anyone to make it as a pleasure trip until the good roads that Texas and Lousiana are planning have become a reality."

NEW KIND OF AUTO THIEF.

Auto thieves have rung in a new one on Southern California motorists, and automobile owners are warned to watch out for the latest type of "stinger."

Throwing a "telegram barrage" across the face of New Mexico, Arizona and Nevada, detectives of the Automobile Club of Southern California succeeded last week in capturing J. L. Stanley and T. J. Duffy, who confessed to the theft of a valuable automobile belonging to R. M. Burdick, of this city.

That is when the "notary public" auto thief was uncovered, and yesterday a general warning was sent by the Automobile Club throughout the southern part of the State.

This type of thief will steal your car, and with his partner drive it to another State or even city, where one thief will "sell it" to another, swearing to the bill of sale before a notary public. After receiving the official papers, the dates will be changed to show that the sale took place before the theft, and thus the progress of justice would be balked.

In the confession dictated by Duffy and Stanley, they stated that the system adopted by the theft bureau of the Automobile Club, in dropping a barrage of telegrams in front of thieves fleeing with stolen cars was unbeatable, and would sound the death knell eventually for car stealing in this part of the country.

BANQUET FOR DEALERS.

Troy Motor Sales Company, distributors for Nash Motor products in the southwest, held a banquet in the blue room of the Athletic Club on Tuesday noon for their dealers.

John J. Troy, president of the Troy Motor Sales Company, and H. J. Coger, vice-president and manager, have just returned from a trip in the East where they attended the Nash distributors' convention, and had lots to say regarding future prospects for the Nash organization.

The dealers were told that there were several secrets up the sleeves of the officials of the Nash Motors Company, and sooner or later they would drop out—when they did they would all be proud that they were members of the Nash organization. The installation of new machinery and several additions built on the factory during the past few months will soon be completed, and the Nash production will be considerably increased.

After the service and sales policies had been thoroughly discussed and other matters of importance cared for the dealers were shown a picture trip through the factory, and all signed up their 1919 and 1920 contracts and went home happy.

DESTROYING SIGN POSTS.

Motoring parties who have little or no consideration for those who may follow a highway after them are raising havoc with the signposts erected by the Automobile Club of Southern California on the famous Yuma-Imperial route, according to the latest reports.

In fact, say local club officials, wherever signposts have been erected in sandy or little-traveled sections, motorists have torn up the metal posts of the signs and used same to pry their cars out of sand or mudholes.

The club thought it had circumvented this by anchoring the poles with huge redwood blocks, buried several feet beneath the surface, but persistent miscreants have dug 'em up anyway and used them for pryers.

When the club used wooden posts, in the old days, motorists tore those up to use for firewood. Two days after club signs have been placed, they have been destroyed by wandering mischief-makers, it is stated.

"Shooting-up" signs has again become a popular pastime, and residents of some of the desert sections of the State promise to "go gunning" themselves to stop the practice. Don't shoot the highway signs is the warning, and preserve Southern California as the "best-marked road area" in the world.

LOTS OF MOTOR CONTESTS

Speed Stuff in the Air and on the Mile Gasoline Circle.

There will be a-plenty of burned castor oil in the air to tickle the nose of the speed fan when the stampede is held at Ascot Speedway October 10, 11 and 12. It was announced yesterday that preparations were being made for motor contests in the air as well as on the speedway. Which would indicate that the fans will have something in the way of aviation.

Meantime, there is some husky preparation going on at the speedway. The crews with their gangs of mules and scrapers are constructing a horse track inside of the motor course. On this inner course the race horses will travel, not only in the stampede, but later maybe, it is reported.

The infield, after being rolled and scraped, is to have an arena in the center. Here the close-up contests will be held, including the all-around affair which will decide the cowboy championship.

While there is activity at the speedway and the Ascot headquarters on Grand avenue, scouts are out gathering in live stock. The wild horses are being poked out of the brush and a special outfit is rounding up some longhorns in Texas and across the border. Some of these Mexican cattle, it is said, are faster than any of the horses used by the cowboys chasing them.

"The programme grows daily," said George R. our original plans have panded to creased attractions. an, who is in charge of the contests, has heard from cowboy stars and they there. They regard affair which will championship.

SIGNALS ARE NECESSAR

The Sheriff of Los Angeles county, John C. Cline, is following the rulings regarding the interpretation of the State Motor Vehicle Act, issued by M. F. Brown, secretary of the California Traffic Officers' Association; Lieut. D. A. Sylvester, chief traffic officer of the San Francisco police department, and president of the California Traffic Officers' Association. According to these officers, the law specifically provides that it is unlawful to operate motor vehicles on the public streets and public highways, unless they are equipped with a mechanical or electrical signal device, approved and certified to by the State Motor Vehicle Department.

The arresting officers have granted a few days' time to motorists in order for them to equip their cars with the required signals. Thereafter, strict enforcement will be the order, and no excuses will be accepted for violations.

All motor vehicles so constructed and operated that the driver can give the hand and arm signal clearly visible from the rear when stopping and turning do not need the signal device. However, the law is clear as to its intent regarding closed cars of every description including limousines, taxi-cabs and sedans of a type that will not permit the driver to give the arm and hand signal to the operator following in the rear; this also includes trucks and trailers when loaded or if they have an extended body to make impracticable the giving of the hand and arm signal. All such vehicles must be equipped with a mechanical or electrical signal device.

As regards the mechanical signal device, one of the most approved types is known as the Diamond Stop and Turn Signal. The State Motor Vehicle Department tested and approved the Diamond Signal.

The Diamond Signal is easily operated, its action is instantaneous and instinctively understood. The signal consists of two diamond-shaped lights attached to the rear fenders, one on each side. When not in operation both show black, but when the signal is needed, by simply moving a small switch lever attached to the steering post, a bright red flash and arrow appear in the light on the sides toward which the driver intends to turn. The lighting of both diamonds indicates to drivers in the stop is to be made.

The Diamond Signal is a product, manufactured in cisco and marketed in fornia and also in the Fresno, Tulare, Inyo, Luis Obispo, by the Sales Company, in the Wilcox Building geles.

dealers of Los Angeles, Pas- South Pasadena and Glen- about to branch out as dec- which is to say that several of them are plotting to grab a day out of the calendar soon and paint it a beautiful scarlet.

The several aforesaid dealers recently fell to discussing ideas for welding the family of Ford owners in Southern California into a unit which would operate for the benefit of all.

"Now that the war's over," one ventured, "something should be done to bring the Ford owners closer together. Now, if we only could arrange a Ford day—"

That's as far as he got when another dealer interrupted. "We Ford dealers know no such obstacles as 'ifs.' Why don't you say: 'Let's arrange a Ford day?' I'm for it and if I know anything about Ford owners and Ford dealers I would say that we're all of one mind on the subject."

Others who were present agreed that a Ford day would be fine, whereupon the inspired dealer continued:

"Why, the Ford days held at various points throughout the country have proven among the biggest attractions and most popular events of the community. There's no reason why every effort along this line should not be surpassed in Southern California, the motorists' paradise.

"In the first place, there are more Fords here to the square mile than anywhere on earth and a Ford day here would attract owners and dealers from every hamlet, town and city for 200 miles around.

"My idea would be to arrange a programme calculated to acquaint Ford dealers and owners with what the Ford Motor Company is doing, how Ford dealers can serve them, how fellow Ford owners are utilizing their cars for pleasure and business and similar subjects.

"Then we could arrange for a card of Ford races, a Ford story-telling contest and numerous other attractive events."

And so it transpires that the Ford dealers are thinking things over with a view, possibly, of designating a day soon as Ford day.

TIRE BUSINESS STILL BOOMING.

COUNCID OF MANAGERS AGREES THAT IT WAS NEVER QUITE SO GOOD.

J. B. Magee, manager of the Southern California and Arizona branches of the United States Rubber Company has returned from San Francisco, where he attended a council of branch managers of Pacific Coast territory. The council, which lasted for several days, was presided over by J. B. Brady, general manager of this territory, and also a member of the operating council of the company.

"It probably sounds like old stuff, because everyone in business tells the same story, but when I say that we are more than satisfied with business conditions as we have found them for the first six months of this year, I am expressing it mildly. This statement pertains to every one of our several departments, and particularly to that of United States tires," said Magee. "To care for increased local business, the company has added two trucks to its Los Angeles fleet."

PLENTY OF TROUT ARE TO BE FOUND.

That there seems to be an inexhaustible supply of trout in the mountain streams of the high Sierras, is the word sent to Los Angeles by Foster Curry of Camp Curry, Yosemite. The rangers are always replenishing the streams with fresh plantings of trout. About 50,000 baby eastern brook trout were planted in or near the Tuolumne meadows one week ago, and an equally large number of other varieties are to be placed in the different lakes and streams, both in the nearer and more remote sections of the park before the end of the present season.

OIL SHIELD.

Vaporised oil that comes through the breather is blown out in a mist, covering the hood and engine, and making an abominable mess. This trouble may be cured by fitting an elbow of soft rubber hose over the breather pipe. A tin pipe is fitted over the other end of this elbow long enough to reach down into the dustpan, to which it is fastened. In this way the vaporised oil will be carried away from the engine and hood.

CLEANING CONTACT POINTS.

It is sometimes difficult to find a really satisfactory agent for cleaning the contact points of ignition apparatus or the surface of a commutator on a starting motor of a lighting dynamo. There is something known as "cuttlefish paper," which is finer than the finest quality of sandpaper and which is very well adapted to this operation. Cuttlefish paper is not regularly carried by hardware stores, but it may be obtained from dental supply houses.

Off to Film the Beauties of Nature.

Here we have L. J. Burrud, well-known cinematographer, with the outfit in which he will travel through the Northwest making a big scenic serial. The car is a Maxwell truck with Goodrich tires and the automobile also is a Maxwell.

TO FILM SCENIC BEAUTIES.

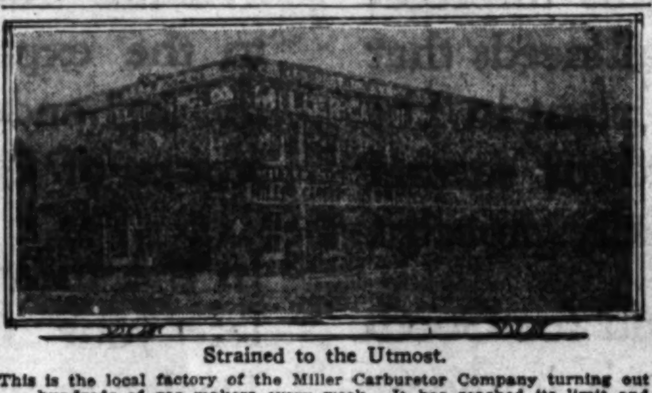
History and legends, as well as the scenic beauty of the Northwest, will be exploited in a new and gripping scenic serial soon to be produced by Leland J. Burrud of this city, one of the most successful scenic photographers in America.

Mr. Burrud is leaving this week on a 15,000-mile tour of the Northwest, and will cover all points of scenic and historic interest. Among the points to be visited are the Canadian Rockies, Glacier National Park, Yosemite National Park, Rainier National Park, Quiniault Indian Reservation, Garden of the Gods in Colorado, north rim of the Grand Canyon, Apache Trail, Canyon du Chelly and other various scenic places will be photographed.

On account of the mountainous country to be traversed, N. H. Spitzer, general manager of the Bullseye Film Corporation, which will release the serial, and Mr. Burrud made extensive tests of automobile and tire equipment. It was found that a light car was best suited for the tour. Mr. Spitzer accordingly purchased a Maxwell light touring car and a Maxwell truck. Because of the remarkable durability shown in the tests, Goodrich Silvertown cords were chosen for the truck and Goodrich 31x3¾ tires were determined upon as equipment for the touring car.

The present plans call for a series of thirty pictures to be released weekly. Every effort will be bent toward making the film the most striking of its kind ever produced, and scenic points in the Northwest not heretofore photographed will be featured in the serial.

The Goodrich National Touring Bureau is furnishing Mr. Burrud with complete maps and logs for the entire trip, and hunting and fishing regulations of the countries to be traveled will be furnished by the B. H. Dyas Company.



Strained to the Utmost.

This is the local factory of the Miller Carburetor Company turning out hundreds of gas makers every week. It has reached its limit and will shortly be used for Coast production only, a factory being planned for the East to take care of orders from that section.

TURNS 'EM OUT RAPIDLY.

The new plant of the Harry A. Miller Manufacturing Company, located at the northeast corner of Seventeenth and South Los Angeles streets, is now producing about 100 Miller carburetors daily. Even though this volume of production is a tremendous increase over the small beginning made by the concern three years ago, it is inadequate to meet constantly increasing demands for the Miller that come from the East, and plans are now under way for the manufacturing of the carburetor at some eastern point. This plant will care for the trade east of the Mississippi, and it is intended that it will be in operation not later than December 1.

The Los Angeles plant, which is the largest given over to the manufacturing of carburetors west of the Mississippi, has 11,500 feet of floor space and every foot of it is occupied. On the first floor is the sales and service department, experimental department, stock, grinding and sand-blasting rooms. On the second floor, which is well lighted and ventilated, are the general offices, toolroom and the large department for machine work and carburetor assembling. A large electric elevator is capable of handling truckload capacities of castings.

"The need of an eastern factory has been apparent for some time. From an economic standpoint we can take care of the eastern business much better from some point in that territory, which releases this plant to handle Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain territory. The Miller has been standard equipment on Moreland trucks for the past two years and the immense increase in their business has in turn affected us. We are turning out Millers for passenger cars, trucks, tractors, marine engines and airplanes," said Milton H. B. Miller, secretary and treasurer of the company.

PREDICTS A PRICE RAISE.

After an absence of more than three years, during which time he made an extended visit at the Pittsburgh plant of the Standard Steel Car Company, C. P. Vauclain, president of the Standard Steel Automotive Corporation of this city, returned to Los Angeles last week. He declares that in his opinion the price of automobiles will not drop in the next few months, but that on the contrary there may be a sharp advance due to the unsettled labor conditions that prevail in the great eastern manufacturing centers.

"There is no denying the fact that there is tremendous unrest in labor conditions everywhere in the big cities of the East," said Vauclain last week. "The high cost of living, the unsettled conditions that came in the wake of the world war, and other causes have tended to make labor restless. This puts a tinge of uncertainty upon the whole manufacturing situation, particularly in these days when some forms of manufacture are so highly specialized. Strikes in just two great plants which manufacture practically all the roller bearings used in American automobiles would virtually tie up the whole industry. One of these plants has been having trouble already, and their production has been seriously cut down for weeks.

"Lessened production in an automobile plant necessarily means a higher price for the product, for there is lessened volume over which to spread the overhead costs of manufacture. Material prices are no lower than they were, wages are just as high, and any interruption in production due to labor troubles would unquestionably result in higher prices for machines.

"I found the production of Standard eights to be proceeding in fair volume. The Standard Steel Car Company has just commenced the manufacture of their own motors. They recently bought the rights to the manufacture of the Herschel-Spillman eight which they have been using since their 1916 model, and will henceforth make their own motors. The building of the motors is being done by the Model Engine Company of Pittsburgh, a subsidiary of the Standard Steel Car Company. They are gas engine builders of long experience, and the purchase from the Herschell-Spillman people included all tools, jigs and dies in the manufacture of the eight.

"They are now making their own bodies at their Worcester plant, and they have for some time manufactured their own frames and transmissions. Virtually every vital part of the car is made by the Standard Steel Car Company itself and the good effects of the undivided responsibility are very apparent in the car."

What Is Behind This Enormous Demand?

For some time, now, the production of Goodyear Tires has been sustained at a point beyond anything previously recorded in the tire industry.

Over several months, the output of the Goodyear Akron factories alone has approximated 25,000 finished Goodyear Tires a day, while the daily production of our Canadian plant has well exceeded 2,000.

It is so evident that even this unprecedented total will not meet all needs that we are now at work on a plant in Los Angeles which will afford us several thousand tires additional daily capacity.

In other words, the demand for Goodyear Tires has assumed such immense proportions as to make our present enormous production all too small.

Behind this demand on the part of the public is no other thing than the consistently fine service Goodyear Tires everywhere deliver users.

No fictitious discounts, no delusive guarantees, no expedients of any sort have been employed to stimulate artificially the steady advance in sales.

Purely on the intrinsic merit of the product, and the faultless character of its performance, rests the unexampled leadership that Goodyear Tires enjoy.

Certainly Goodyear Tires must embody a conspicuous superiority thus to win and hold the allegiance of the largest single group of tire-buyers in the world.

We are devoting our whole energies to the expansion of our production, in an endeavor to establish ample stocks of Goodyear Tires everywhere.

In the meantime we suggest that you let your Goodyear Service Station Dealer show you how to give proper care to the Goodyear Tires you now have, as a means of assuring you their maximum usefulness.

He will be glad to instruct you in the application of Goodyear Tire-Savers, which are designed especially to prevent troubles and to prolong tire life.

Your return from their use will be not only increased satisfaction, but a very material profit in added mileage.

This enthusias- comes from Robert D. of Maxwell & Hoffman, distributors, and he some authority for he completed a 2800-mile out- wonderful country of forests, trout-filled and scenic mountain roads. take their camping along if they follow the Maxwell, for they leave behind. That is one of of the country, Maxwell Mr. Maxwell, with Mrs. and their little daughter, and a servant started route in their Stude- a trailer, carrying of camp equipment was behind.

drove to San Fran- the almost-completed and then crossed the started for Humboldt the way of Santa Rosa. Rosa, the route went through Ukiah, Willets and over the State highway to Eureka. Camp was established in an immense redwood grove 100 miles north on Blunt Creek, a half-mile from the junction of Trinity and Klamath rivers.

This journey is quickly outlined but more slowly covered in auto. To drive to the Eureka country requires about five days. The roads become very mountainous with some real stretches of pulling. For instance, the Studebaker pulled one grade of 40 per cent. with its trailer. This was on a seven-mile detour north of Garberville, where the road was not only very steep but narrow with sheer drops down to the south fork of the Eel River.

"All in all I would advise motorists to go in the way we came out—that is by Red Bluff and Sacramento," said Maxwell. "In that way they may avoid two very severe detours. If they do go as we did, it is better to turn to the left at Willets and go up over the hill to Latonville, rather than take the 'State highway.' The road to the left is no boulevard, but it is much better than the State highway.

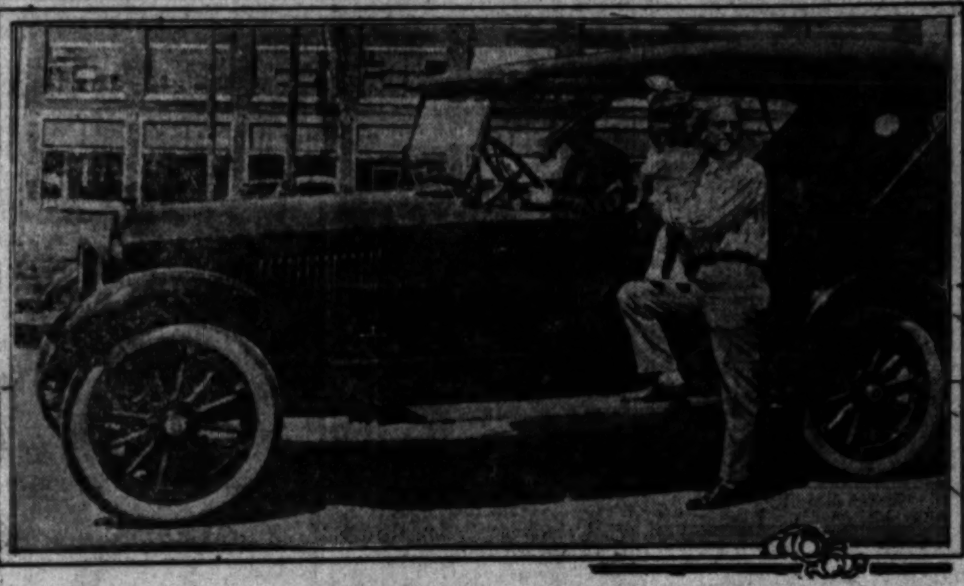
"Good careful driving is necessary on the mountain roads for they are regular mountain roads. We have nothing like them down here. They hang on the edge of the mountains and would make a snake dizzy following them. But it is worth it. Have a good car and take it sensibly and there will be no trouble.

"Our camp was ideal. The great forest was carpeted with ferns and laurel. Every few feet, it seemed, would be a spring of cold, crystal water. If a man could drink that all the time he would not worry about prohibition laws. Fish—the limit in any hour and half. Deer—hundreds of them. Bear—aplenty. Quail, dove, oh, everything that a man would care to shoot.

"It is a wonderful place to forget the world and just live. One fills his lungs with that air and feels that he could jump over one of the tallest redwoods. The climate is just right, cool with brisk nights. Coming out we ran into thick frost. And, incidentally, after breaking camp we had six miles of incessant gear work. So you can see that it requires a car which will cool and pull.

"Coming back we returned by the way of Red Bluff and then dropped down to Sacramento. We drove this distance in a half day easily. After Sacramento we went to Stockton and then over to Mission San Jose and into the Santa Cruz country. From there we came home via the Coast route.

"It was a wonderful outing, taking seventeen days. And they were great, big wonderful days, every one of the seventeen."



Thinks He Has Discovered the Real Place for a Vacation.

This is Robert Maxwell, of Maxwell & Hoffman, and the Studebaker six in which he took a vacation with his wife and family recently. He says that there is no place like the one he found for the purpose of enjoying yourself.

EAST TO WEST TRUCKING.

Motor Truck Train Blazes Way for Future Commerce.

BY G. A. KISSEL,

President Kissel Motor Car Company.

Never has a more momentous movement been started that will develop hitherto unheard of and undreamed of service potentialities of the motor truck than that of the first army motor truck train that is now on the first transcontinental trip from Washington, D. C., to San Francisco.

In fact I predict that the conclusion of this first trip will be a signal for the opening up of a new adaptability of the motor truck to the nation's transportation requirements. As Secretary of War Baker has truthfully said, "this is the beginning of a new era," and while no doubt he had reference to the possibilities of transcontinental trucking from a military standpoint, he could have, with equal truth, said it from a commercial point of view.

The ability of the motor truck to efficiently make long distance trips on a definite schedule was proven so often in the great world war, culminating in the magnificent burst of glory that saved Paris by rushing troops to Chateau Thierry, that I have often wondered why American manufacturers and industrial leaders have not before this duplicated the performance here in this country. Many a manufacturer has had a Chateau Thierry to reach in the rushing of needed good and supplies which railroads were incompetent to handle. There has been a scarcity of necessities and supplies needed in different parts of the country to enable other industries to do their manufacturing or to the aid of communities who suffered from the tie-up of the railroads in their localities.

True, there have been very successful runs of motor trucks extending, three, four and five hundred miles and the trucks and their loads were none the worse for the trip. In fact both arrived in as good a condition as when they started. I understand that on these particular trips, the consumption of oil and gasoline, the wear and tear on tires, mechanism, etc., was very satisfactory.

So I look for great results from this cross-country trip, foremost among them being, of course, the adaptability of the motor truck for long distance transportation, which as I have said before I believe to be a foregone success. The motor truck of today is built for long and hard service. In most cases the manufacturers and designers are hard-headed business men with practical experience in the hardships and obstacles motor trucks must overcome to do the work required of them.

The second result will be a close up view of the road conditions of America. Two hundred odd men who will accompany this fleet of trucks will have brought forcibly to their minds the necessity of America taking off its coat and rolling up its sleeves to build more roads and improve present ones. If this coast-to-coast truck train falls behind schedule, it will be because the condition of some of the roads was not taken into consideration, or that we have not a clear idea of how few good roads we have when the country's total road mileage is taken into consideration. I think that every goods roads association in every city, town and village through which this truck train will pass should use the event as a big publicity feature, pointing out to the local people the urgent necessity of reconstructing their roads and building new ones. Every good roads organization in the country should feature this transcontinental trip in their meetings and in the local papers, pointing out what a wonderful thing it would be for local concerns, as well as for the development of the community at large, if good roads were built to promote and invite increased transportation, both passenger and freight.

Every business organization, every chamber of commerce, ad club and all booster clubs in every city should start a whirlwind campaign to keep progress with this transcontinental trip, pointing out how good roads cut transportation time as well as transportation cost, how good roads help to produce good times, how good roads increase realty values and decrease the cost of not only commodities and necessities, but the high cost of living, by providing a cheaper means of getting goods and food to the merchants' shelves.

This first transcontinental motor truck trip will convince farmers as no other means could the adaptability of the motor truck for long-distance hauling, and there is not a larger class of prospective customers in the country who could cash in on this adaptability of motor trucks as the farmers, who are the backbone of the country. There are thousands of farmers who do not yet believe that the motor truck is competent to transport their produce over long distances—that these farmers, even though their farms are many hundreds of miles from the nearest center, can likewise take advantage of the use of the motor truck for long-distance transportation which this transcontinental trip will prove. Once agricultural America as a whole employs motor trucks to transport their produce to market, the cheaper their produce can be sold at the market, because they can deliver more produce in less time and at less cost. Remember, the cost of producing wheat, corn, rye, all the fruits and vegetables is the biggest part of production cost. Once this cost is reduced, its selling cost can be likewise reduced.

Therefore, it is up to every farming community to likewise give serious thought to the motor truck and its potentiality in helping solve the transportation demands made upon agricultural America to feed not only America, but the world; to transport not only field produce, but live stock. The motor truck has proven its success in comparatively long-distance hauls such as 300 miles from farm to market. The success of this transcontinental trip will prove to the farmers that no matter how far away the market is from his farm, the motor truck is the logical means of transporting the results of his labors to the market.

Once the farmer gets the big idea that the motor truck is the logical solution, the question of good roads throughout agricultural America will be solved in no time at all. American farmers are men of action—once they realize the immense advantage to them of any given project, their procedure is not to wait for the other man to put the project over, but all of them collectively put their shoulders to the wheel and "go over the top." And that is what is bound to happen in the matter of good roads, once the adaptibility of the motor truck is proven to them for long as well as short hauls.

When America is honey-combed with motor truck highways from which arteries lead off into different directions to act as feeders, then is when the question of transportation will be no longer a question, and it will not be until then that we will be able to reduce a big part of the present high cost of commodities—that of haulage and delivery.

Another object of this United States Motor Corps transcontinental trip is for the purpose of enlisting young men to serve in the corps—these young men to be sent to schools in September. Consider what this education means to the future of motor truck transportation in the United States. When it is considered that the economy and efficiency of motor truck transportation does not rest entirely on the motor truck, but equally so on knowing how to properly drive, handle and take care of the truck, it can be seen what a big asset to the country these young men will be after they have been thoroughly schooled and graduated into first-class motor truck operators and dispatchers. Without a doubt, one of the results of this trans-continental trip will be that in every city where the train passes through or stops, hundreds of young men who want to get ahead, will quickly seize the opportunities which the motor transport corps offer them.

It has been proven that motor trucks operated by competent drivers, men who not only know how to properly handle and drive a truck, but who also have the knowledge to enable them to anticipate any trouble and recognize same before developed, or to make adjustments or repairs on the road, are the trucks that have lowered upkeep, maintenance, tires, gasoline and oil consumption records.

Consider, then, the immense saving to owners as well as to the country, the increased service the motor truck will render owners when in the hands of young men who have been through Uncle Sam's motor truck transport schools and have become graduated A-1 motor truck experts.

Another lesson this first cross-country trip will teach us is the condition of America's highways as a help to motor trucks in rushing troops, supplies and equipment from one city to another or from one State to another in times of internal trouble. While I hope such an emergency may never rise, it is one that we should provide against and be on guard to nip in the bud, and we can only do this if our highways are developed enough to get all the speed, dependability and performance that are built into trucks. Such highways will also enable the city police, fire and water departments to extend their area of operation which in itself is a big asset to the community.

I think that Secretary Baker and officers of the United States Army Transport Corps are due a vote of thanks, by not only the motor truck industry, but by each community, its land-owners, taxpayers and business men; in fact every branch and twig of our commercial and social structure for endeavoring to demonstrate to us what must be done to bring the country's transportation facilities up to 100 per cent. efficient.

DEFLECTORS IN GREAT DEMAND.

"The rapid growth and demand for wind deflectors or windshield wings is nothing short of remarkable," says R. L. Sergeant, president of the Continental Wind Deflector Company of Los Angeles. "The idea of a wind deflector was first originated in Los Angeles, and it is safe to say that at the present time there are more deflectors installed on cars in Los Angeles county than in the balance of the United States. This condition, however, is only temporary, judging from the inquiries we are receiving daily from every State in the Union."

SQUEAKY SPRINGS.

In cases of chronically squeaky springs, try jacking up the car so that the weight is removed from the springs and then soaking these latter with kerosene. Run the car for a day or so to let the kerosene soak in and then saturate the springs with some of the old oil that has been drained off from the crankcase. After a day's run wipe off any excess oil that shows to prevent the collection of unseemly dust.

w hand methods in tire making

TO produce a better tire—a tire more resistant to punctures, blowouts, tread separation—the perfect method is to build them, from the innermost ply of fabric to the tread, by hand.

Made in this way each Thermoid Tire is the work, from start to finish, of one man, who is rewarded, not on the basis of how many tires he makes, but how well he makes them.

A new wonder of chemistry

The toughness and resiliency of Thermoid Tires is the result of the discovery of CROLIDE.

CROLIDE is blended in scientifically exact degrees with each layer of rubber or fabric that goes into the tire. This makes the tread stronger and the fabric tougher.

Never have we seen such durability or mileage so far in excess of our expectations. You can depend upon 6000 miles of guaranteed service. (Ford sizes 7500.)

SELL CARS OVER BORDER.

Within a short space of time Smith Brothers have, through their dealer representative at Calexico, placed a number of Peerless motor cars with this class across the border.

Among the latest models of this car to be delivered is one with special top, sold and delivered to Senor Jacinto Barrera, who is the private secretary to Hon. E. Cantu, military Governor of Lower California.

Aside from the handsome appearance of all Peerless eight motor cars is the economy of operation in all Peerless models, and the fact that, notwithstanding the extreme heat encountered in the Imperial Valley and the south, the Peerless motor does not become overheated.

Only this week S. Gordon Buckner, sales manager for Peerless cars, with Smith Brothers, received a report from the Peerless car recently sold to Villasenor, ex-Governor of the province of Lower California in which is reported the fact of the smooth and quiet running Peerless motor and the further fact that at no time of day, even with an air temperature of 110 degrees, did the water in the radiator boil or even become hot.

BANQUET FOR SALES FORCE.

On Wednesday evening the sales force of Walter H. Bissell Company, distributors for Diamond T Motor Trucks in Southern California, Arizona and Lower California, were given a banquet at the Los Angeles Athletic Club in celebration of the victory of 43, the mysterious 43 being the number of Diamond T trucks sold during the month of July, the first month that the Diamond T has been in the local field.

DESERT CUT-OFF TO BE SURFACED.

According to information advanced by the State Road Commissioner of Utah, the 18-mile stretch of improved road between Granite Mountain and Black Point, known as the Goodyear section, will receive a four-inch gravel surfacing this year. This section is part of a cut-off across the Great Salt Lake Desert, which makes the new route fifty-miles shorter than the former one.

HUDSON SUPER SIX

The Way to Get Delivery Of a Hudson Super-Six

The Automobile Which Men Said Would Have No Rival, Still Outsells All Other Fine Cars

First announcements of the new Hudson Super-Six promised prompt deliveries.

We had arranged a larger production but had underestimated the force of Hudson prestige.

In the interim between writing the announcements and their publication, some four or five weeks, dealers booked orders faster than we could produce cars.

Repetition of Each Previous Year

The Super-Six, from the first, has outsold all other fine cars. The present situation is but a repetition of what has happened each of the past four years.

Up to the time the present model was offered, 60,000 Super-Sixes were in service. We are building 20,000 this year—one-third as many as had been delivered in the previous years.

Why This Demand For Hudsons

The answer is found in any locality in any group of motorists.

The reliability and endurance Hudsons have proved in every test and to every owner is a matter of official record and common talk. Read the records for speed, acceleration and hill climbing for the past four years. You will find the part the Super-Six played excels that of any other stock car or special car or stock materials and design.

Or observe Hudson performance on any city street or country highway. Super-Sixes are everywhere. They belong to people who demand the most of their cars. They are the favorite of the hard, fast drivers and of those who demand comfort and reliability.

There are more Hudson closed and chauffeur driven cars than of any other fine grade. They are the choice of those who want elegance and distinction.

The service of those 60,000 earlier Super-Sixes accounts for today's demand.

How to Get a Hudson Super-Six

Place your order now. Don't delay even if you can't get immediate delivery of the model you want.

There is a great demand for all good cars. There never was such a shortage. Eagerness for prompt delivery has caused many to accept makes that were not even second choice to Hudson. Avoid the possibility of disappointment by ordering your Hudson now. Accept the earliest delivery you can obtain. Remember that the car you buy must serve you a long time and that a slight inconvenience in delivery now will be offset by the satisfaction your Hudson will give.

AMONG THE FANS.

The following news concerning Newell W. Banks was taken from the Pittsburgh Dispatch column of August 4:

"BANKS PLAYS A.E.F. IN FRANCE."

"Corp. Newell W. Banks, American premier checker player, is probably on the water now headed for the good old U.S.A. On July 1 he was in Paris, France, on a furlough. He played several exhibitions with the A. E. F., over 300 games, and won all except two draws. Out of 60 blind-folded games only one was drawn, he won the others. He anticipated playing in the K. of C. carnival at Brest, about July 15. Newell also played about 150 chess games and either won or drew them all."

For the past two months F. Wright and M. L. Davis have been meeting at the clubrooms three or four times a week and playing a series of games to find out "who was who." Their score shows them to be evenly matched, for at the end of 200 games, it was "nip and tuck."

CHESS GAME NO. 137—RUY LOPEZ.

"The game produced below, won by the French champion in the London tournament of 1883, is typical of the brilliance and "elan" of the French school, and it was awarded a well-deserved prize for brilliancy. We take the score from the store-house of chess master-play, "Chess Exemplified," and the notes are those of the loser of the game, the then champion of the world.

NOTES BY STEINITZ.

a—At this point White has the better game.

b—Loss of time, as proved by Black's two excellent moves.

c—An unsound sacrifice if White had played properly.

d—An error which cost the game. PxKt would have won easily, e. g., 30—PxKt, BxP; 31—Q-Kt2, B-B7 ch; 32—K-B1, etc. If 31 . . ., Q-R5; 32—B-Q2, and must win.

e—A beautiful rejoinder, which turns the tables.

f—The best defense was Q-Kt2.

g—This is much stronger and finer than R-KKt3 ch, in which case White would have played B-Kt2, and if 32 . . ., PxR, then 33—Q-Kt2.

h—Q-B2 was not much better.

i—M. Rosenthal now finishes off with a few elegant strokes, which deserve the special prize for brilliancy awarded to this game.

TEN YEARS TELL THE TALE

With more than 6,000,000 automobiles officially listed in the United States, it is difficult to believe that as recently as 1893 a "new-fangled contraption" covered its first mile without the aid of horse power, or that a circus, only a few short years ago, actually exhibited a horseless vehicle as a curiosity.

In a few years the manufacture of automobiles has become the nation's third largest industry, employing 1,000,000 workers, whose yearly wages amount to more than $747,000,000. The total capital invested is estimated at more than $1,500,000,000.

"The phenomenal growth is graphically illustrated by the tremendous expansion of the Hudson Motor Car Company, which is just observing its tenth anniversary," said Harold L. Arnold, distributor of Hudson motor cars for Southern California.

"The first Hudson was built just ten years ago in a little two-story plant, employing less than 500 men. Although the company was incorporated in February, 1909, the first car was not shipped until July 3 of that year.

"Today the Hudson factory covers twenty-six acres of ground, and there are nearly 5000 persons on the pay roll. It is the largest factory in the world devoted exclusively to fine automobiles.

"The year of its birth the factory shipped 1100 cars valued at less than $1,000,000. This year its volume of production is valued at more than $56,000,000.

EXPOSING THE HIGHBROWS.

Beethoven's "colossal name" was not altogether to the taste of the Abbe Liszt. He says it was used to crush all contemporary composers and tells more than one story of tests that he applied to find out if the crowd were indeed "subjugated by the power of genius" or whether their "brilliant displays of enthusiasm" were not largely induced by the mere attribution of a composition to the great master.

An inversion of the order of the programme on a particular occasion showed decisively how the case stood. Without any explanation a trio of Pixis was played in the place of one by Beethoven. The bravos were more numerous, more brilliant than ever; and when the trio of Beethoven took the place assigned to that of Pixis it was found to be cold, mediocre and even tiresome.—[Christian Science Monitor.

PLUNDER.

The Gentleman Burglar flashed his lamp in the startled eyes of the aroused head of the family.

"Where's your valuables?" he demanded politely.

"For heaven's sake, don't shoot!" pleaded the victim. "My jewels are in that box on the bureau; my money is in the handbag on the dresser; my husband's watch—"

Impatiently shooting a hole in the pillow, the burglar snapped:

"Don't kid me! I asked you where you keep your butter and eggs."

But with a shriek of desperation the woman leaped upon him, for that was too much, too utterly much!—[Richmond Times Dispatch.

HE KEPT CHEERFUL.

When Hiram Stevens Maxim, the inventor, lived in Brooklyn, his nearest neighbor, a physician, had a pretty maid, who was courted by the policeman on the beat. Mr. Maxim would spend hours at an upstairs window blowing peas at the policeman through a tin shooter. The policeman sought in vain for a small boy, for who else could give time to such an annoying thing?—[Boston Post.

SUFFRAGE MEMENTOES.

A portrait of Susan B. Anthony, together with the table upon which was written the call for the Seneca Falls convention of 1848—the first active movement in America to give women the vote—has been presented to the Natural History Museum in Washington by the National American Woman Suffrage Association.

The portrait was painted by Sarah J. Eddy, and for the years it has hung in the ters of the national represents Miss Anthony inflexible leader of a great as a smiling, gray-haired upon whose knee children roses. The table Miss Anthony by Stanton, one of the first convention.—[New York Sun.

EXPORTERS LEARNING METHODS OF LATINS.

DENVER MANUFACTURERS FIND A PROFIT IN SYMPATHETIC REGARD TO TRADE.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

DENVER, Aug. 5.—Denver exporters are rapidly pushing open the gates of commercial South America by giving greater attention to the needs of Latin-American countries, by more sympathetic deference to business customs prevalent below the equator, by more careful packing and by refraining from hurrying the South American merchants to pay their bills.

Lessons derived from the experiences of Denver manufacturers may be a benefit to those of any section of the country. Business circulars are being issued in Spanish and correspondents familiar with that language are being employed so as to approach the customer in his own language.

Realizing that much of their merchandise must be transported by mules over the Andean passes, the Denver men are limiting the weight of packages of machinery to about 250 pounds and are packing them in cases composed of heavy planks reinforced with steel bands.

Extension of credit is being arranged through the assistance of certain New York banks.

Denver exporters find that it is best not to introduce inovations with painful suddenness.

There is scarcely a South American country with which some Denver manufacturer has not established commercial relations. The Andean mines of the west are reached by way of the west coast of South America, are the best customers for the class of machinery which Denver has to offer.

One local exporter of mining machinery reports that he has received more inquiries from Latin-America in the past six months than ever before during a corresponding period.

This is the very latest thing in Jordans, one of which has just arrived here from the factory in Cleveland, O.

SOME NEW CARS ARRIVE.

With every motor car factory of prominence in the country straining every effort to heighten production to attempt to cope with the enormous demand for automobiles, the dealers throughout the United States are keeping an eagle eye on the eastern plants to discern any improvement in the car situation.

There was one gleam of hope this week at the Seager-Clark Company, distributors for Jordan cars in Southern California, with the arrival of a shipment of Jordans and word that additional carloads would reach here next week. While the incoming cars found plenty of waiting purchasers, they aided in cutting down the long list of unfilled orders.

Advices from the Jordan factory are to the effect that the output is being increased gradually, and that the delivery situation is much more hopeful. Work is being rushed on the big extensions to the factory in Cleveland, and within several months the greatly-enlarged plant will be in full swing.

Vice-President and General Manager Robert S. Weaver of the Seager-Clark Company has been spending a week at Catalina Island, and will return Monday to aggressively assume the managerial reins at the Jordan headquarters here.

FACTS ABOUT PLATINUM.

The American Museum of Natural History has issued a bulletin giving many interesting facts relating to platinum, one of the most striking of which relates to its ductility. The marvelous ductility of platinum may be conceived when we consider that out of a single troy ounce of the metal it would be possible to make an almost infinitely slender wire that would reach from Santiago, Chile, across the continent to Rio Janeiro, a distance of about 1800 miles. To draw out platinum into so exceedingly fine a wire it is covered with a thin layer of gold. This new wire is drawn to the thinness of the former one, and the gold is dissolved. A small section of this second wire is then given a coating of gold, redrawn and the gold covering dissolved. After this process has been repeated several times the wire finally is still intact, but virtually invisible.—[Indianapolis News.

MASON

The growth of the demand for Mason tires in the past two years has been virtually unprecedented in the history of the tire industry.

It has been caused by the fact that Mason tires are DEPENDABLE TIRES—long wearing and uniformly good.

If you'll take the trouble to ask a Mason user, you will understand why Mason sales-growth has been so remarkable.

GAVVY LEADS IN BATTING.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Jim Therp, the Indian outfielder of the Boston Braves, has relinquished the batting leadership of the National League, according to averages released today and which include games of last Wednesday. He has dropped to second place with an average of .348. Gavvy Cravath, Philadelphia, former league leader, who was dethroned early in July by the Indian, has again advanced to the head of the list with a mark of .351. The number of .300 hitters is gradually dwindling, the list being cut to thirteen.

Benny Kauff, New York, and Cravath are sharing home-run honors with nine circuit drives for each. Z. Wheat, Brooklyn, has taken the lead in total bases from Kauff. He has 169 total bases. Cutshaw, Pittsburgh, continued to show the way to the base stealers with twenty-nine thefts. Other leading batters in the National League, who participated in forty or more games are:

McHenry, St. Louis, .330; Roush, Cincinnati, .323; Z. Wheat, Brooklyn, .318; Hornsby, St. Louis, .310; Myers, Brooklyn, .308; Doyle, New York, .306; Barbare, Pittsburgh, .303; Stock, St. Louis, .302; Holke, Boston, .300; Clemons, St. Louis, .300.

Ty Cobb, Detroit's star, increased his lead among the American League batters during the past week and is now fourteen points in front of the runners-up, Veach, a teammate, and Sisler of St. Louis, who are tied for second places with .371.

Sisler has reached the 200 mark in total bases and is also out in front among the base stealers with twenty-four pilfered sacks to his credit. Ruth, Boston, seems unable to increase his home-run total, which remains at sixteen. Other leading batters in the American League for forty or more games:

Peckinpaugh, New York, .340; Jacobson, St. Louis, .338; Jackson, Chicago, .331; Rice, Washington, .323; Heilman, Detroit, .323; Flagstead, Detroit, .322; Fewster, New York, .322; Ruth, Boston, .311; Chapman, Cleveland, .311.

OPENS TEMPORARY PLACE.

Temporary headquarters for the W. P. Herbert Company, who will distribute the new Cleveland six in Southern California, have been established at 1047 South Olive street. The building is undergoing a thorough renovation in preparation for the car, the arrival of which is expected soon. This location will be occupied by the Herbert company only during the process of erecting the new four-story building at the corner of Eleventh and Flower streets, which will be the permanent home.

The interest that has been created in the announcement of the coming of the Cleveland is suprising. There have been so many new cars produced in recent years that the motoring public has become somewhat blase. The Cleveland apparently is an exception. Already there has been a score of applications from dealers in various parts of the territory who desire representation. Mr. Herbert was at the store a few days ago while a painter was putting the name Cleveland on the windows, and four persons stopped and asked if they could place orders for the car.

The reputation of the makers of the Cleveland is so well known that the public will have confidence in their product, according to Don P. Smith, who will be Mr. Herbert's sales manager. The personnel of the Cleveland Motor Car Company includes several leaders in the automobile industry and the fact that the car has been ready for production for two years, but was withheld because of the country being at war, is another reason for the interest that has been created.

CAR HAS ADVANTAGES.

The long overland trip made by Prof. Woodruff of the State College of Pennsylvania in his Templar four-passenger touring car has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the owner, so he informed Albert J. Russell of the Boulevard Motors Corporation, State distributor of the Templar, the superiority of the light, well-balanced car for all kinds of driving. Prof. Woodruff in a little more than a month's time covered almost 5000 miles when he arrived in Los Angeles two weeks ago, and the journey was made without any mechanical trouble of any sort, he stated.

"It is on the poor country highways, and the rough mountain roads, where the turns are many and often sharp, that the light car particularly shines. On the Yellowstone trail we passed several heavy cars, some with broken springs and others with broken axles. Trying to negotiate a bad piece of road at too fast a clip was in the main the cause of the trouble. The light, well-balanced Templar, with its almost perfect spring suspension, made the rough going without difficulty. Because of the car's short wheel base, hairpin turns were easily made where longer and heavier cars had to be carefully maneuvered," stated Prof. Woodruff.

Membership Drive for Hollywood Memorial Park Going Strong.

The contest campaign for membership in the Hollywood Memorial Park and Playground Association closed Friday evening at an enthusiastic meeting held at the Woman's Club House in Hollywood, four loving cups being awarded to individuals ranking highest in the number of members secured.

Choice of cups fell to 16-year-old James Withers, who turned in 150 paid memberships in the eleven-day drive, he having been in the lead since the contest started. The second award in the men's rank was to Gabor Hegyi, with 101 members.

First cup to the women workers went to Mrs. J. W. Stoddard, with sixty-one enrolled. The second was won by Mrs. Rolin B. Lane, president of the association, who had fifty-two memberships. She is the one directly responsible for the movement for a park and playground in Hollywood which is intended as a memorial to the more than 1000 Hollywood boys who served under the colors.

The cups were given by Arthur Letts of the Broadway Department Store, J. E. Ransford for the Garden Court Garage, A. P. Henderson, and James Leask, druggist.

Judge Harlan G. Palmer, chairman of the membership contest, stated that the paid memberships are 900. The membership drive will continue for a fortnight longer.

Among speakers was Miss Bessie Stoddart, of the Los Angeles Board of Education and formerly of the City Playground Commission, and Dalton S. Patterson, one of the commissioners who planned the park system in Kansas City.

ANNOUNCEMENTS COMING.

Mr. E. B. Wilson, manager of the Willys-Overland Pacific Company here, has just returned from the East. In an interview Mr. Wilson states that many decided changes in automobiles are due to take place, and announcements will be made to the public on the coast in a few weeks. One of the best-known manufacturers in the automobile world is coming out with a new medium-priced, six-cylinder car.

Another of the largest automobile manufacturers will produce a new sensation in spring suspension and easy riding qualities. This car will sell at a very moderate price. The shortage of cars at the present time is undoubtedly due to the advanced designs and models that will be placed on the market this fall.

There will be more changes this year than ever before due to the fact that it could not be done during the period of the war. Prospective purchasers throughout the country are on the qui vive, expectantly watching the papers, and when these full page ads come they will not be disappointed.

HUGE USED CAR DEMAND.

Los Angeles is just now experiencing the greatest demand it has ever known for used cars, according to a pool taken among the members of the Used Car Dealers' Association.

There are two well-defined reasons for this condition, according to M. A. Leach, president of the association. "One reason for the unprecedented demand for used cars is the shortage in new motor cars.

"The second reason, and probably the one which is influencing buyers to a very great extent, is that the public is fast coming to a realization that cars may be purchased from recognized used-car dealers, with every assurance of getting good value for their money.

"This condition of affairs is not peculiar to Los Angeles, either, as reports we receive from points throughout the country where methods and policies employed by the used-car dealers of Los Angeles have been adopted indicate that recognized used-car men are being rushed as they are here."

SEEKS SEPARATE SUPPORT.

After a married life of twenty-two years, Mrs. Cora D. Cross yesterday sought separate maintenance from Abraham L. Cross, charging him with cruelty. She alleges he deserted his family last December, remaining away from home until last Wednesday. She says he returned home and tried to persuade the children to leave their mother and go with him. It is also alleged he endeavored to force his wife to consent to a property settlement. Mr. Cross is said to own property valued at about $30,000.

MAYOR OPPOSED TO PATENTED PAVEMENT.

MESSAGE TO COUNCIL RAPS MONOPOLIES, FAVORS COMPETITION.

Declaring he is opposed to spending any of the citizens' money for the purpose of using a patent article for which a royalty must be paid, Mayor M. P. Snyder sent a message to the City Council vetoing the proposed specifications for Warrenite and bitulithic pavement.

Mayor Snyder said he did not believe his action would stop paving. "I am in favor of paving, lots of it, but I do not favor using a patented article that costs considerable more than the same article costs if unpatented," he said.

The Mayor also took exception to using a bituminous base in the pavement. The use of this base was discontinued in this city several years ago, he said, and its use was again spoken of a few months ago. In all of the large eastern cities, the message said, the use of this base is prohibited by ordinance.

Cheapness alone is a poor recommendation for paving, the Mayor said in discussing the first cost of the bituminous base as compared with a concrete base, also spoken of in the ordinance. Because of this fact he declares that the bituminous base should be struck out. He calls attention to the fact that the use of the bituminous base is prohibited in certain California cities.

Most of the Mayor's comment regarding the specification had to do with the use of the patented surface. "Using this specific surface in the specification is liable to lead to lobbying," he said. The manufacturer of a particular patented surface may use lobbyists and they may work on contractors, in either case stifling competition.

"Paving specifications ought not to call for a kind of pavement which is patented, or which is exclusively controlled by a single corporation without making that fact clearly apparent to the property owner who will have to pay for the work."

The Mayor says monopolies are rightly viewed with distrust and that in paving work and all such construction paid for by the property owner the fullest kind of competition should be permitted.

FORMER AVIATORS IN PUBLICITY WORK NOW.

John S. Oshanna, known here for activities in the field of art, and A. E. Holmes, formerly advertising manager for a Los Angeles business house, both of whom have just been discharged from the army air service, announced yesterday that they have formed a commercial art and advertising agency with offices in the Baker-Detwiler Building. They served together on the Rockwell Field Weekly Flight, the post newspaper.

JUDGES RECUPERATING.

Attention was called yesterday to the fact that United States District Judges Bledsoe and Trippet will not call their law and motion calendar in District Court until September 8. The judges are now taking vacations.

MANY INQUIRE ABOUT BIG PHANTOM ESTATE.

PROBATE HEAD FEARS FRAUD IN TALE OF MILLIONS IN UNRECORDED PROPERTY.

Many inquiries are being received by Herman Lichtenberger, head of the probate department, asking for information in connection with the alleged estate of John Baker and Anderson Baker. These inquiries come from small eastern and southern towns, and the reply invariably is that there is no record of such an estate and that the probate department regards the inquiries with suspicion.

Mr. Lichtenberger says he is convinced a gang of sharpers is working on the credulity of members of the Baker families, probably obtaining money for legal services in making a fight for a distribution of an estate among the numerous Bakers.

One letter received in the probate department came from Cherryville, N. C., under date of the 1st inst., and is similar in tone to other letters received. It states:

"It is reported to us that an estate belonging to John Baker and Anderson Baker has never been probated. The Bakers went to California in 1849 and at this time the property is located in or near Los Angeles. They died without disposing of the property. Can you give us the records of the case?"

"We write back that we regard the matter as suspicious," said Mr. Lichtenberger. "The Bakers are supposed to have been mining men who accumulated property worth from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 and died without disposing of it."

The Proof.

"A woman can never come to the point."

"How can you prove such an assertion?"

"Prove it yourself; just watch her try to sharpen a lead pencil."—[Baltimore American.

The $7,000,000 3½ Inch Tire

—or it might be called the $73,000,000 tire, for it is possible only because of the entire resources of the Firestone Company.

[illegible] is what has gone directly into this [illegible] Firestone factory that is devoted exclusively to the making of this tire and the tubes to match. The main plant is now concentrating on Cords and big sizes.

16,000 TIRES and 20,000 tubes, all 3½-inch size, is the daily capacity of this new factory. This plant is years in advance in its mechanical efficiency. Into it has gone the thinking, planning, the spirit of service that distinguishes the entire Firestone organization. Its methods and machinery were developed by Firestone men.

FIRESTONE HAS STEPPED FAR AHEAD in engineering practice and you get the benefit. The labor saving equipment of this factory cuts costs on every operation from 10% to 30%.

FROM THE TIME special shipments of rubber and of fabric arrive at this plant, until the finished tire is loaded on the freight car, there is not a backward move.

AND THE MAN POWER of this plant is as far in advance of the ordinary as is the mechanical efficiency. The Firestone organization is the talk of men in big industry everywhere.

THE FACT THAT 90% of Firestone workers own stock in the Company is an index to their interest in their work. Their superior skill, their spirit of service, is stimulated by their financial interest in winning you as a customer.

AT EVERY TURN Firestone thinks and plans to give you the most for your money, knowing that this is the surest method of obtaining the greatest demand. Every move Firestone makes is toward this end—mileage at lowest cost.

NEVER HAS FIRESTONE, NOR ANY tire maker, offered car owners so much as they are offered now. Ask your dealer.

Head It Off.

THESE wise fellows who keep their ears to the tickers on Wall Street, and all the money sharps elsewhere, appear to be agreed on the theory that we are now to have from five to seven years of unprecedented prosperity, and that after that, look out for the lean years of financial hard times.

Well, that is fair enough, isn't it? Forewarned is forearmed, as the saying has it. We know what's ahead, and it will be our fault if we get caught out in the rain without our umbrellas.

Personally, we may pay no attention whatever to the warning. Like many another, we may go on earning a little and spending a little more, although that's a shameful thing to do, and we hope to reform. But, in our province as adviser to the populace, we would suggest that the wise birds be taken at their words.

So, friends and countrymen, while these fat years are in progress and the horn of plenty is spilling, why not salt down chunks of the surplus every so often, so as to be prepared for the lean years when they come?

Whoever will do this need have no fear of the lean years. They can't throw a single scare into him. He will sit on his sunny doorstep when these years put in an appearance, and he will say, as pleasantly as you please:

"Good morning, Mr. Leanyears; howdy; come in and have a bite to eat with me, for I've got plenty and to spare."

Then old Mr. Leanyears will snort and dig his hoofs in the ground, and sneeze fire out of his nose and tear down the road like a mad bull with a red rag in front of it.

In other words, if we prepare for the lean years and store up the corn like Joseph did in Egypt, there are not going to be any lean years.

The Poor Rich.

THERE was a play or a book or something written under the title of "The Poor Little Rich Girl," or something like that. We have not had the pleasure of hearing or reading it, whatever it was, but the title is eloquent, indeed.

For there is truly such a class as the poor rich. It is the rich whose wealth is a burden. And anything that comes to be a burden, whether it be riches or any other thing, is to be deplored and far from welcome.

When it comes to be that one's material possessions are heavy on one's shoulders, it were better, surely, to be without possessions. Wouldn't you say that? Wouldn't anyone with common sense say that?

There is a story about a dog that couldn't sleep nights because he had bones buried under a tree. Every sound the dog heard he was awake and growling and running to the tree. And when some one asked what was the matter with the dog, his owner replied: "He has too much property."

The Lord forbid that we should compare a man to a dog, and yet there are a lot of things about dogs that a man might well emulate. But, no man should try to emulate a greedy dog.

It is the same with dogs and men when they are burdened with the cares of too much property. Better for both that a thief shall come in the night and relieve them of their burdens.

The thing to do in this world is to be happy. So, if a man have too many houses, or too many dollars, or too many wives, he should "reduce down" as the Mayor of Butte once said to the town Council when it got to be extravagant, even for Butte.

"To earn a little and to spend a little less"—ah, there's a motto for any man to pin on his wall and to steer by.

Home Is Best.

"EAST or West, home is best," runs an old song. It is a fine song, and it were well if the whole world learned to sing it from the cradle to the grave.

One of the most pathetic, and even one of the most tragic things in life, to our way of thinking, is the widespread habit of families to separate. A man marries a wife in the springtime of their youth, they build a rooftree together in infinite joy and gladness, they rear their children under its sheltering eaves; and there are no years that can ever be so happy as these.

Then the children grow up and they wander away, one by one, often to separate to far ends of the earth. Their lives pass, and brother and sister may never see each other again. At best they see each other only occasionally.

And there is one thing sure to happen when this takes place. It is that when these brothers and sisters grow old, they will hark back again in their hearts to that old rooftree where they were born and where they were reared together. There will be a longing in their souls for which there is no name, and no balm.

Why is this so? Why do not families remain together and near throughout life—this little life that goes on so fast and ends so soon?

Now and then we hear of brothers, or a brother and sister who have not looked upon the faces of each other for thirty years because the years had flung them so far apart. Who has read an account of it in the papers without a heartache?

Happy is the home that time has never disrupted and torn apart. And wise are they of the household who cling together through the years, close to one another's hearts and close to one another through all the sorrows or the joys of life.

THE OLD REGIMENT.

Long ago on a summer's day,
Over the hills they marched away—
Kinfolk, friends and the boys we knew
In childhood's blossoms and fields of dew,
Changed in that hour to full-grown men,
When the song of the bugle rang down the glen
With its wild appeal and its throb and thrall,
And they answered "yea" to their country's call.

Then in the furrows the plowshare slept,
O'er wheel and anvil a silence crept;
All night long through the village street
Thundered the rhythm of marching feet,
With clash of steel and the saber's clang
And the gray commander's stern harangue,
Till morning broke, and they marched away,
Long ago on a summer's day.

We watched them go with their guns agleam,
Down past the mill and the winding stream,
Across the meadows in clover deep,
By the old stone wall where the roses creep,
We watched them go till they climbed the hill,
And they faced about as the drums grew still
And they waved their caps to the vale below
With its breaking hearts that loved them so.

Save for the maimed and shattered few,
They came no more to the vale they knew
In the dear, dead days of their childhood's dreams;
But, far away by the alien streams,
Where they fought and fell, are their hearts asleep;
Lying unnamed in the trenches deep;
Some at Antietam and some with the lines
Of blood-stained bayonets at Seven Pines.

They wake no more to the battles' noise—
Kinfolk, friends and the neighbors' boys;
But oft when the starlight fills the glen,
In phantom marches they come again.
And, over the walls where the roses creep,
And the dew-kissed meadows in clover deep,
I see them still, as they marched away,
Long ago on a summer's day.

JOHN S. McGROARTY.

Blue Days at Sea.

YOU recall the song that Robert Louis Stevenson wrote—that "fine song for singing"—and in which was the lilt that said:

"I will make you brooches and toys for your delight
Of bird-song at morning and star-shine at night.
I will make a palace fit for you and me,
Of green days in forests and blue days at sea."

It is, indeed, a fine song for singing, and California is the one place in all the world to sing it.

Now, every man should have his days in forests and his days at sea in California. The man who permits his business, his neighbors, his lawyer or his chickens to rob him out of these days is a man who doesn't deserve to live in California.

So, by the time that September comes, we should have had our green days in forests to our heart's content—until another year. And then for the blue days at sea. There are plenty of boats. You would be surprised to know how many boats there are to be had among the estuaries, in the bays and along the shores of our Land o' Heart's Desire.

You will get a boat, therefore, in September and put out to sea. For September is the time for the sea. You will see it said in that blessed book that Charles Frederick Holder wrote, the book called "The Channel Islands," and you will have that same book in the boat with you, God willing.

Calm as the bosom of a quiet lake are the seas in September. The winds are quiet then. It is easy sailing. The veriest land lubber will love the sea in September.

There is a long shore line from San Diego to Santa Barbara, and farther, if you will. And though you wander it for a thousand years it will be always as new to you as it was to Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo, who was the white man to see it first.

Yo ho! and let us raise the anchor, messieurs. Spread to the morning breeze the lateen sail. And, bon voyage!

The Actor's Day.

IT SEEMS to be true that Shakespeare was an actor, and a very poor actor, at that, but that he died a rich man. He made his money, however, by writing plays and getting other actors to act them.

With this exception, actors have been proverbially poor for hundreds of years. We mean poor in pocket. There was no man always so badly in need of a loan as an actor.

Now, the tide has turned. The movies were invented and actors are swimming in prosperity Mary Pickford makes more money in a year than the president of the steel trust makes, and almost any actor thinks nothing of a salary of $5000 a week. It is stated that Nazimova demands and receives $10,000 a week from the movies.

As a matter of fact, according to trade reports, the actors get all the money that the movies make. The reports are that producers and exhibitors are able to show only red ink on their balance sheets.

The producers made the financial error at the start of educating the public to the "star" idea. The producer who had the biggest star believed he would make the most money. The public was trained to gossip over the movie stars as though they were of the royal families of the effete monarchies.

Now the producers can't help themselves. The actors have them absolutely in their power.

Well, we can't say that we are sorry. The actor waited a long time for his ship to come in. But, it is in now. It has come to port with pennants flying, and the mummers are holding high carnival on shore.

Young Daddies.

DOWN at the beaches we like to watch these young fellows who were married not so long ago and who are revelling in the joys of the first baby that God sent along to them to be cared for.

There may be happy men in the world who are not young and who were married so long ago that they can't remember the time. No doubt there are, and we hope so, too. But, there can't be any man so happy—so absolutely and unconditionally happy—as the young daddy with his first little baby girl or baby boy sitting beside him on a merry-go-round at the beaches.

A Great Liar.

LOOKING back over the pages of history, we have come to the conclusion that one of the greatest liars that ever lived was Juan de Fuca, who went up around Seattle a few hundred years ago and said that he sailed through a canal there that reached clear across the continent.

Now, if old Juan hadn't lied like that maybe Seattle would never have been staked out to be a town. So great a liar should have a monument, and Seattle should see that it is built.

Care of the Body.

succeeded in putting on the market a pure fruit extract made of these flavors. No such flavors have ever appeared on the market. Science has not been able to devise a means of capturing the volatile flavors of such fruits. The whole scheme is false, deceptive and misleading.

"So-called extract of pineapple, used by the candy maker and soda fountain, is a mixture of chloroform, amyl oxide of butyric, aldehyde, butyric ether, citric acid, oil of lemon, glycerin and alcohol. This mixture, whose destiny is the human stomach, is sold under the Pure Food and Drugs Act, in the most dignified and thoroughly legal manner.

"The invalid who eats a dish of gelatine, or the child that drinks a glass of soda water flavored with these chemical triumphs, looks into a very appetizing and apparently very innocent delicacy.

"Strawberry extract is made of nitric ether, acetic ether, formic ether, butyric ether, amyl oxide of butyric, ground rhatany root, and some essential oils and alcohol, a legal compound for the child's soft drink, for the icing of the fancy cake and for the beautifully colored ice cream. There are a few commercial industries engaged in the manufacture of candy, ice cream, soda water, cake, etc., that classify these drugs according to character, and will have none of them. Up to date, the number is few.

"Raspberry extract is another fascinating creation. It is made of nitric ether, aldehyde, acetic ether, formic ether, oeanthic ether, benzonic ether, etc. Raspberry is popular with the child in sweetmeats, sweet drinks, sweet cakes and ice cream. Perhaps some of the derelicts who dope themselves in later years with morphine, cocaine and similar consoling agents have cultivated their abnormal appetites in their childhood from some of these foreign substances, which they have been able to secure so easily."

Another harmful drink, widely advertised, is composed of essence of caffein, the stimulating substance of coffee. It is a habit forming drug, and some people consume from half a dozen to a dozen glasses daily.

"Pure orange juice" is usually made with citric acid. It leaves a furry taste on the tongue, and burns the stomach.

Far more wholesome than these is an alcohol free beer. It is refreshing and palatable, and a pleasing contrast to the sickly, easily-fermenting sweet drinks, now so largely consumed. It is a natural tonic also containing some food value. Or grape juice diluted with two-thirds water and the juice of half a lemon. Undiluted grape juice swallowed like water is less wholesome than claret. It ferments, producing gas and alcohol.

Feeding Children.

ONE of my consultants was told that if she did not feed her 4-year-old child "properly," it would be taken away from her by "health authorities."

The same woman tells me her doctor told her to modify the milk for her child, when it was an infant, with cane sugar.

A child came home from school and said his teacher told him he should "eat lots of eggs and drink lots of milk."

Rotten advice. Eggs over-stimulate the nervous system, especially the sexual organs. To feed children eggs is a crime.

Milk should never be drunk. It should be eaten. After weaning, milk is not a perfect food, being almost entirely deficient in iron.

Our Cousins.

PROF. RICHARD L. GARNER, whom I had the pleasure of meeting several years ago in Los Angeles, has returned to the United States, from his seventh trip to the jungles of West Africa, where he studies the habits and language of apes. He has spent twenty-seven years in that work. During the past year he has been directing an expedition for the Smithsonian Institution.

Prof. Garner seeks to bridge the intellectual gap between the apes and man. He has studied the reasoning power, the instincts, the family life and the habits of apes. In an article contributed to the Dearborn Independent he says they are "uncannily like humans." Father, mother and children apes take daily walks together, and live happier and more respectable lives than many humans who use the word "ape" as a term of reproach.

Apes communicate with each other, not by mere sounds like other animals, but by definite words. Monkeys chatter, but apes talk. Their language has only between twenty and thirty words. There is no doubt in Prof. Garner's mind that the human language began with such primitive words as are uttered by apes. Similar sounds are employed by African savages.

One of the chimpanzees that Prof. Garner bought from a native when she was five weeks old showed that a chimpanzee can be taught to speak. She was taught to count numbers, up to four. She could select and designate geometrical forms, such as cubes, pyramids and cones. Another ape was taught to use the French word for "fire."

On his latest trip Prof. Garner discovered a new type of chimpanzee. He writes:

"I attach more scientific importance to a chimpanzee I procured. In my opinion it is a new type, if not a new species of ape, nearer to man than any heretofore discovered. The hand is strikingly humanlike and somewhat tapering like that of a woman. The ears are the same as the average human beings. They are larger than a gorilla's and smaller than those of other full-grown chimpanzees. All the corrugations and indentations of the ear are like those of a man. The champanzee's height is about five feet and its weight 140 pounds."

Apes are not only mentally alert, but also physically strong. Their regular diet is fruit and nuts—the original diet of man—varied by an occasional raid on a bird's nest.

Fruit By-products.

SERIOUS attention is at length being given to California fruit by-products, most of which have heretofore gone to waste. From apricot pits alone Prof. S. M. Woodbridge of San Bernardino has succeeded in making fruit oil for salads and culinary purposes, bitter oil of almonds, extract of apricot, apricot meal for cooking, apricot powder for cleansing and softening the skin, American blue (formerly Prussian blue,) washing blue, benzoic acid, sodium benzoate, potash and toilet soaps.

Before the war about 6000 tons of apricot pits were shipped to Germany.

WHETHER there is luck or no such thing as luck, it is not only interesting but useful to know something about the law of chance, so that one can estimate his advantage or disadvantage in any event and compare between chance and design.

Some seasons and days have been found by different people to be lucky or unlucky In Eccles. iii:1-2, 4-8, we find the following: "To everything there is a season and a time for every purpose; a time to be born; a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted; a time to get and a time to lose; a time of war and a time of peace."

The theory of chance consists in reducing all events of the same kind to a certain number of cases equally possible. The probability of events serves to determine the hope or fear of persons interested in their existence. All kinds of insurance are based on the possibilities of human life under certain conditions. Probability based upon a daily experience or exaggerated by fears or hopes strikes us more than a probability, but it is really only a result of calculus. It is remarkable that the science of the law of probabilities, which commenced originally with the consideration of the games of chance, should have become elevated to the rank of the most important subject of human knowledge.

All things, however, cannot be submitted to calculus, but careful consideration of the law of probabilities gives hints to guide our judgment. There is a regular periodicity in cycles of luck or ill luck, just as the periodicity of the seasons, the moon and tides and everything else in nature. The great law of opposites demands that as high as the pendulum swings, so correspondingly low must it go to fulfill that law. The probability of the happening of an event is to be understood at the ratio of the chances by which that event may happen to all the chances by which it may either happen or fail.

The Chance of Throwing a Certain Number on a Die.

SUPPOSING, it were required to express the probability of throwing either an ace or deuce at the first throw with a single die. There being in all six different chances or ways that the die may fall, and only two of them for the ace or deuce to come up, the probability of the happening of one of these will be 2-6 or 1-3; and that of the contrary 4-6 or 2-3.

Suppose A to throw once with a single die on condition that if either an ace or deuce come up, he shall receive $500; then because the probability of his receiving the said sum is one-third times, or one-third of $5 will be the expectation in this case.

The following notes and tables have been compiled from various ancient manuscripts. Some of them have been taken from Egyptian papyrus on "Lucky and Unlucky Days and Good or Unfortunate Signs."

Some old astrologers regarded the third day after the new moon as the first fortunate day of the month. It was generally conceded that the whole fortnight when the moon was bright was lucky. Also the first three days of the new moon were the best for signing papers and the first three, as well as the 24th after the new moon were good for fresh undertakings.

Always take a lease for an odd number of years. An even number is not prosperous. Most leases are drawn up in odd number of years, especially long ones such as railroad companies use —ninety-nine years, why not 100 years. Probably no one can tell. It is uncanny how many usages are based on what was originally deemed merely a superstition, but did actually result from design.

Women born in March, April and May are long lived and short lived when born in August, Setpember and October. Some important event is almost certain to happen to a woman in her thirty-first year, and to a man in his forty-second year.

January 3, 4; February 6, 7, 12, 13, 19, 20; March 5, 6, 12, 13; May 12, 13, 20, 21, 26, 27; June 1, 2, 9, 10, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24; July 3, 4, 10, 11, 16, 17, 18; October 3,4, 9, 10, 11, 16, 17, 31; November 1, 3. It was also thought on these days would occur money embarrassments or losses to property, disaster, mental dissatisfaction, unhappiness in the married state, and an extraordinary desire to invest would end in failure. There was also a tendency to weakness, or sprains in the knees and ankles, and disease, and hurts in the legs.

Days on Which Girls Should Not Fall in Love.

JANUARY 5, 6, 13, 14, 20, 21; February 2, 3, 9, 10, 16, 17, 22, 23; March 1, 2, 8, 9, 16, 17, 28, 29; April 24, 25; May 1, 2, 9, 17, 22, 29, 30; June 5, 6, 12, 13, 18, 19; July 3, 4; September 9, 16; October 20, 27; November 9, 10, 21, 29, 30; December 6, 14, 21.

On the list of lucky days are January 1, 2, 15, 26, 27, 28; February 11, 21, 25, 26; March 10, 24; April 6, 15, 16, 20, 28; May 3, 13, 18, 31; June 10, 11, 15, 22, 26; July 9, 14, 15, 28; August 6, 7, 10, 11, 16, 20, 25; September 4, 8, 9, 17, 18, 23; October 3, 7, 16, 21, 22; November 5, 14, 19, 20, 23, 25.

In glancing over the dates just given as being lucky, it is interesting to note that April 6 (1917) the United States declared war on Germany. On June 15 the first Liberty Loan closed with an over-subscription, going way "over the top." And June 26, the first American troops reached France. Many other interesting instances might be recorded.

How to Tell Whether the Day Will be Lucky.

THE ancient philosophers were wont to judge days of good and evil import by applying the following rules: Note the day of the full moon, count the number of days from that day until the end of the month. Multiply the number of days the month contains by the number of days from the full moon, until the end of the month, and the result will be your answer.

To determine the days that are unlucky find as before the date of hte full moon. Count the number of days before the full moon. Multiply the number of days before the full moon by the number of days the month contains. Should it happen that a date indicated as fortunate falls also among the unfortunate, then that date must be accounted unfortunate, it being an old belief that in most mundane matters evil was more powerful than good. In these days we maintain that good is more potent than evil.

If an engaged girl wishes to know the lucky day for her marriage find the day of the full moon. Note the number of days in the month. Find the number of days from the full moon to the end of the month. Deduct the number of days from the full moon to the end of the month, and the number of days in the month, and multiply the remainder by her age. For instance, supposing the young woman is 24 years of age and wishes to find her fortunate marriage day for June, 1919. The full moon in June falls on June 13. The number of days in the month is thirty. The number of days from the full moon to the end of the month is seventeen. Deduct seventeen from thirty which equals twelve. The lady's age is 24. Then twenty-four multiplied by thirteen equals 312. Therefore the lucky days for her are the third and twelfth of June, 1919.

Date of the full moon June, 1919, the 13th; number of days in June, thirty; number of days preceding full moon, twelve. Her age is 24. Twenty-four times twelve equals 288. Therefore the 28th and the 8th of June are unlucky days for her to be married.

The following is taken from a very old manuscript and is quoted exact because of its quaintness:

"We read of an old Arabian philosopher, a man of diverfe rare obfercationfs, who did demarke three Mundayf in a year to be moft unfortunate to begin any notable work, viz., ye firft Mundays of Aprilye wch day Cain waf borne and hif brother Abell flaine. Ye 2n of ye firft Mundaye of Auguft, ye wch day Judaf Ifcariott waf borne. Thefe 3 dayf together with ye Innicentf' Daye, by diverf of the learned are reputed to be moft unfortunate of all dayef, and ought to be efchewed by all men for ye great mifhaps wch occur in them. And thuf mch concerning ye opinion of our Ancient of Dayef. For in like manner, I will repeat unto you ye be obfered by fome old writerf, chiefly ye ancient aftrologerfs who did allege that there wwre 28 dayef in ye year wch were revealed by the Angel Gabriell to ye Good Joseph wch ever have been remarked to be very unfortunate to cure woundf, fow feeds, plant treef, build houfef, or take journeyf, in fighting or giving battail. They alfo doe allege that children who were put to fchoolf or collegef fould become great fcholerf and thofe who were put to any craft or trade in fuch dayef, fould become perfect artificerf and rich and ye dayes be thefe. Ye 3 and 13 January; ye 5 and 28 February, ye 3, 22, 30 March, ye 5, 22, 29 April, ye 4 and 28 May, ye 3, 8, June, ye 12, 15, 18 July, ye 12 Auguft, ye 1, 7, 24, 28 September, ye 4 and 15 October, ye 13 and 19 November and ye 23 and 28 December."

In the Cottonian Manuscripts the three Dies Mali (Days of Evil) of the year are set down as the "Last Monday in April, and then is the second at the coming in (first half of the month) of the month we call August; there is the third, which is the first Monday of the going out (last half of the month) of the month of December."

Sculpture by Photography.

A process for producing bas-reliefs by photography is the fruit of the invention of an Italian scientist.

The basis of the invention is the property possessed by a film of chromium gelatin of swelling in proportion to the intensity of the light falling upon it. The swelling is greater with a low than with a high intensity, so that the light passing through a photographic negative produces upon a chromium gelatin plate a positive in distinct relief.

The transparency of an ordinary negative, however, is not truly proportional to the relief of the original model, but by an ingenious automatic device involving double exposure this difficulty is avoided and a negative is obtained having its lights and shades correctly graded to produce the effect of relief.

Constantinople's Curious Library.

IT APPEARS that there exists in Constantinople a curious and ancient library of which the people there had practically no knowledge until the fall of the old Turkish regime a few years ago.

This library, that of the Hagia Sophia, was founded by the Sultan Mahmud (1142-1158,) and consists of but 2000 volumes, all manuscripts, none of which, it is claimed, has ever been published in print. They lay heaped up in big shelves behind a trellised gate in a small hall adjoining the mosque. This library represents an immense value, each volume being valued at from $8000 to $10,000.

There is no catalogue of these treasures, upon which the dust of centuries had been accumulating, and there are very few savants able to decipher them. The ten rarest manuscripts are kept in a heavy trunk, which has the form of a mosque. This trunk (itself more than 2000 years old) is covered with mother-of-pearl. It is a worthy receptacle for the manuscripts, all of which have an age of nearly 3000 years. Only a few great scholars, who live in Khiva, Turkestan, master the language in which they are written.

The most precious of the volumes is one of immense size, 3.75 by five meters, bound in velour and covered with a strange script. It is distinguished for its beauty more than for its age, since it dates only from the year 1220. It is a copy of the Arabic work, "Kanun fi'l Tebb," by Avicenna, who bore the honorary title of "Prince of Physicians."

The great European libraries possess also copies of this work; none, however, can compete with it in regard to beauty and age. It contains 300 pages, each of which is adorned with sketches representing a plant, a fish, an insect or other creature. All illustrations are in natural colors.

There is also a volume which many centuries ago was presented to one of the Sultans by the Shah of Persia. Despite its considerable size (2.5 by 3.5 meters) it is bound in gold. It is a Persian manuscript of the "Divan," a poem written in 911 by Hussein Biscara, a celebrated Tartar poet. Every page has painted borders and, in addition, geometrical designs cut out of gold foil and brightly colored parchment. This precious binding contains fifty-two sheets and one hundred and four large illustrations. There are further two Sanscrit manuscripts which the Persian Shah presented to Mahmud the Great; also the famous volume "Nargal," containing the observations of Mahomet the Fighter, the first Turkish Sultan of this name, under whose reign (1402-1421) the sense for the sciences began to prevail among the Osmanli, or European Turks. Each parchment sheet is of a different color. The corners, as well as the top and bottom borders of the pages, are adorned with nets of gold, and most of them have broad borders covered with drawings of great delicacy. Another fine volume in the Persian language treats of the stars, and is particularly remarkable for its leather cover, which is adorned with incrusted pearls and diamonds.

"Get into public life, my boy."

"Why, father? Do you think I would ever become President of the United States?"

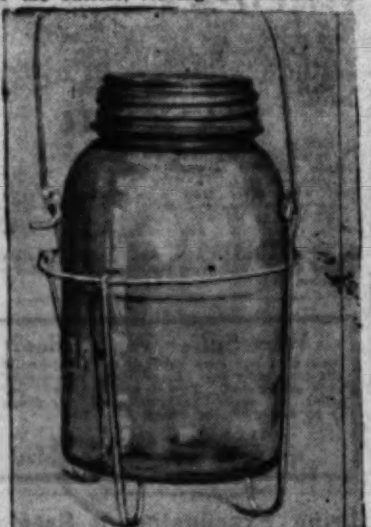
"Maybe not, but failing in that you might still get a large offer from a moving picture concern."—[Detroit Free Press.

THINGS FOR EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

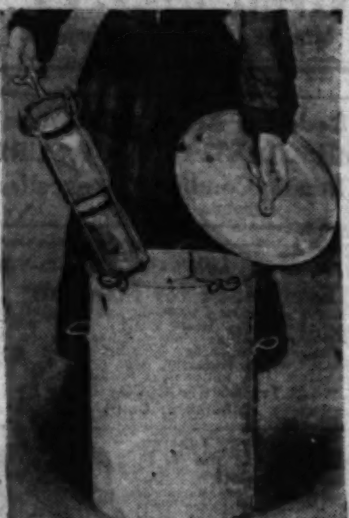
BY RETTA BADGER.

[Any information regarding things illustrated or described on this page gladly given. Suggestions from readers are always welcome. Address all communications for this department to Retta Badger, The Times, Los Angeles.]

HERE is a mighty good thing in canners. It is a double-decker that holds two layers of jars at once and thereby saves time. The canner is deep enough to admit of two rows of jars and contains five racks that will hold two quart or three pint jars each, placed one on top of the other. The racks are so constructed that by pressing down the handle the sides spread to receive the jars, and by lifting the handle the sides automatically clamp the jars securely in place. Each rack is hung from the side of the canner and has a handle of loop type projecting over the outside, leaving the handle both cool and convenient. These racks may be bought separately and come in two sizes, the long size which holds two quart jars, and a smaller one which holds one quart and can be used in any boiler or other container you may be using for your canning. These wire racks will save many burned hands and broken jars, as well as a large portion of an already too much tried canning-time disposition.



Holding one jar.



Two layers of jars may be canned at once.

IN THE TIME OF THE LILIES.

The pond-lily luncheon will please one who is looking for something particularly exquisite, and it will be especially suitable for an engagement luncheon, as the suggestion of the lilies is pure and virginal. The very beautiful artificial lilies might be used but they miss something of the illusive charm of the real flowers; therefore it is better to time the luncheon with the blossoming of the water plants.

A pan suited in size and shape to the table should be placed in the center, the edges masked outside with moss or greens, and inside with pebbles. The bottom of the pan should be covered with clear white sand before it is filled with water. Place in this the beautiful flowers as they are found in their natural habitat. Do not crowd them but arrange a few in floating clumps of leaves and blossoms, artistically and naturally. If you prefer doilies on the table to a cloth, use them; but I consider a beautiful white damask covering will better suit the chaste purity of the flowers.

Lily-decorated place cards may be found in great variety, but be careful not to select those which are too ornate, for you must keep everything in harmony with the note of simplicity suggested by the floral decorations. Large plain name cards are effective with the stem of one fine bud drawn through.

For the first course which should be on the table before the guests are seated, serve grapefruit; to prepare which you will select perfect specimens and cut off the tops about one inch down. Carefully scoop out the inside, saving the pieces of pulp. Next cut the rind in points at the top and continue the cuts a little more than half way down. Place the skins in large thin water glasses, overlaping the pieces of the rind and making them look as much like the petals of a yellow lily as possible. Replace a suitable portion of the pulp, well sugared, and pour over it white wine, if you like—many prefer it plain. Place the glasses on small plates with real lily leaves as doilies.

A very dainty consomme should next be served in bouillon cups. These cups and all the china used should be white or green or green and white. Of radishes, with a little practice, you can make tiny water lilies. Peel off the red skin, and cut the heart into petal-shaped layers, removing some of the center to make it lighter. Float one of these together with a nasturtium leaf on each cup of soup.

For the meat course a crown roast of lamb, surrounded by green peas, will sufficiently suggest the lily, when decorated with white paper spills on each projecting rib.

For salad, the crispest of green lettuce leaves cover the plates. On these sections of the white from hard-boiled eggs should be arranged in a radiating circle, centered by the crumbled yolk. Dressing should be passed for this.

You may have ice cream molded in lily shape, and it will be effective served on the bright green plates to be found in all Chinese and Japanese stores. These plates could probably be rented. Angel food and sunshine cake will be in keeping and, after coffee, each finger-bowl should contain a nasturtium leaf and some small white blossoms which will suggest in miniature the pure Nymphaea Odorata.

PRESERVING BY FERMENTATION.

Your home garden should now be coming into its full bearing, and the surplus should not be wasted but carefully put away for the winter.

We have long known that pickles and sauerkraut can be preserved by fermentation but not many are familiar with the idea of keeping other vegetables in this manner. But the Department of Agriculture is responsible for the suggestion that almost all vegetables are amenable to this treatment.

The vegetables are not cooked, but are put down in a salt brine in any non-metal, water tight container and are afterwards sealed with paraffin. Lactic acid is developed by this method and this acts as a preservative. It also has high food value.

The vegetables must be packed in a crock, keg or barrel, after a thorough washing and draining. First lay in dill weed, and a handful of mixed spices, fill the barrel with the vegetable to be preserved about half full, then put in another layer of the spices and dill, this to be repeated again in the top. A layer of grape leaves or beet tops should be put on the very top and the mass pressed down with a clean board, properly weighted. (Sandstone of limestone should not be used for this purpose, for the acid attacks and disintegrates these.) From five days to three weeks are required for fermentation according to the temperature.

A brine is made by adding one pound of salt to ten quarts of water and about two teacupfuls of vinegar, which keeps down the growth of bacteria and improves the flavor. The brine covered material should be allowed to stand twenty-four hours, then it should be made airtight by covering the surface of the board and weight with melted paraffin. If the barrel does not leak the fermented vegetables will keep indefinitely.

COFFEE CARAMEL PARFAIT.

One cup milk, three tablespoons ground coffee one cup sugar, yolks three eggs, one-eighth teaspoon salt, three cups cream, one teaspoon vanilla.

Scald milk with coffee in a double boiler and add one-half the sugar that has been caramelized; then add yolks of eggs mixed with remaining sugar and salt. Cook until mixture thickens, stirring constantly, and add one cup thin cream. Cool, strain, add two cups thin cream, and vanilla. Pack in one-half pound baking powder boxes, filling boxes to overflowing. Adjust covers, pack in salt and ice, using equal parts, and let stand two hours. Freeze, using three parts finely crushed ice to one part rock salt. Remove from molds to cold platter and roll in blanched almonds cut in thin slices, and delicately browned in moderate oven.

COFFEE ICE CREAM.

One quart cream, one and one-half cups milk, one-third cup finely ground coffee, one and one-half cups sugar, one-fourth teaspoon salt, yolks of four eggs.

Scald milk with coffee, add one cup sugar; mix egg yolks slightly beaten with one-fourth cup sugar, and salt; combine mixtures, cook over hot water until thickened, add one cup cream, and let stand on back of range twenty-five minutes; cool, add remaining cream, and strain through double cheesecloth; freeze. Coffee ice cream is delicious and may be served in halves of cantaloupes.

COFFEE SAUCE.

(To be served with vanilla ice cream.)

One and one-half cups milk, one-half cup finely ground coffee, one-half cup sugar, three-fourths tablespoon arrowroot, few grains of salt.

Scald milk with coffee, and let stand twenty minutes. Mix remaining ingredients, and pour on gradually the hot infusion which has been strained. Cook five minutes and serve hot.

COFFEE MOUSSE.

One cup strong coffee, one quart cream, one cup sugar, one and one-half tablespoons granulated gelatine, three tablespoons cold water, three tablespoons hot water.

Combine the coffee, sugar and gelatine that has been soaked in cold and dissolved in boiling water. Set in pan of ice water and stir until it begins to thicken; then fold in whip from cream, put in mould; half pound baking powder can with a tightly-fiting cover can be used. Adjust covers, pack in salt and ice, and let stand four hours.

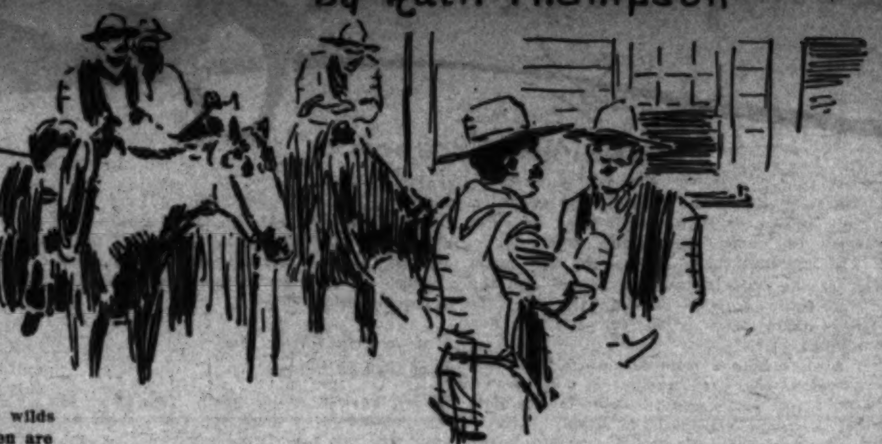
Last Chance Canyon

by Ruth Thompson



THE lure of silent lands; the fascination of the destre with with its hot breath, undimmed sunshine, great stretches of sage and greasewood, winding dry gulches, the hiding place of the sneaking coyote and timid rabbits, the miles of brightness and heat that are bounded by jagged, gaunt gray hills as barren as a mountain boulder; how often have we heard of it all and how many of us are victims of its hypnotic charm?

Here the best and the worst of men are brought forth. The best, because anyone with a soul that responds must stand in that solitude, himself revealed; the worst, because where men congregate in the wilds

Here the best and the worst of men are brought forth. The best, because anyone with a soul that responds must stand in that solitude, himself revealed; the worst, because where men congregate in the wilds they take the law into their own hands. The primitive appears unhampered and uncontrolled. The veneer of civilization is gone and people are what they are.

. . . .

On the Mojave Desert, northeast of Mojave is a wide stretch of valley, a gray desert depression, called Fremont Valley because it is beneath the peak named for our great pathfinder of the West, Fremont. In the early days the Indians said it was death to cross this desert for the deceptive mirages created water where there was none and people wandered vainly searching for the desert springs and died in their search as is evidenced by the skeletons found in the sand dunes. Here we find Jawbone Canyon where it is said the mound of jawbones buried by the Indians was discovered; Red Rock Canyon, called by many the miniature Grand Canyon, so rich are its colored, wierd and jagged sides; and Castle Rock, a lonely sentinel dropped in the land that God forgot; and here, too, is the wonderful dry salt lake, miles of diamond, sparkling whiteness laid bare to the gaze of the unblinking sun and hedged with knots of rushes.

It is a peculiar and interesting fact that the first settler who should come to this magic land, years before the discovery of the Yellow Aster and consequent growth of Randsburg, should be a man who fled from Germany because he hated the rule of the Kaiser, but such it was. Charles Koehn was the pioneer of Fremont Valley after having left Germany for California in 1884. Having been on the desert once he could never be satisfied away from it and returned again some twenty-seven years ago and lives there to this day on his original homestead.

In those early days, which were lonely, the passing by the homestead of the twenty-mule borax team was a diversion to Koehn. The borax was hauled from the northeast in Inyo county to the railroad in Mojave. The distance was about sixty-two miles and from 1870 until 1894 a team of twenty mules and two horses would pass Koehn's home every four days. The round trip took eight days counting about twenty miles daily.

Behind the load of from twenty to twenty-two tons of borax, was a trailer for water and grub. High up on the seat above the mules lolled the driver, a friendly body under a huge Mexican hat who amused himself by snapping his whip and cursing his patient mules, as with tongues hanging from their mouths and sweat rolling from their hides they toiled on their painful way through the brush and the sage, in the hot sun. Every now and then the mules would burst into an uproar for water which jangled in the water cart and reminded them of it.

It is said that the road was lined with graves, with stones piled thereon to keep the coyotes from digging up the bodies.

With a shout of greeting and maybe a few minutes for gossip of the camp the team would appear and then resume its painful way. In 1894 the price of borax fell so low that the trip was made no more.

But the desert was destined for more than a trail for the twenty-mule borax team as has later been proved.

In Mojave Koehn was called the "Crazy Dutchman," for it did indeed seem as if a man were crazy to go on the desert so many miles from humankind and make his home. Koehn's idea was a goat ranch but this he has never attained, though today his ranch has some of nearly every other farm animal and fowl. It is veritably an oasis, a lovely spot of green on the edge of the crystal lake, with a large, thick-walled stone house made of boulders rolled from the hillsides, a house furnished with delightful comforts and a beautiful display of coyote and bobcat skins underfoot and on the lounges. The long low porch with hammocks and comfortable chairs; the tamarack hanging its heavy plumes of green; the cottonwoods, heavily leafed, through which the winds blow like the sound of a mountain storm; the view of green fields; the opaline stretch of lake and, beyond, the desert sage rolling into hills higher and higher and outlined against the white-blue sky as smooth and innocent from customary mountain trees as gigantic pieces of cardboard pasted up against the distant horizon.

. . . .

One bright morning Koehn was out looking across his world of sage brush. In the distance he spied travelers approaching. Nearer the strangers came and their forms indistinct in the distance materialized into three of Koehn's acquaintances from Mojave—Shipley, Bert Niles and Ed Starkey, employees of the general store and saloon.

"Hello Crazy Dutchman," they greeted him boisterously.

"Hello!" answered the good natured alleged crazy one.

"Can we leave a water barrel here?" questioned the three.

"Where are you going?" asked Koehn.

"Prospecting" was the curt reply.

The natural query followed: "What for?"

"For gold!" chorused the three with a greedy look.

Koehn laughed. He looked at the sweep of barren desert, hills and salt. "There is no gold in this country," he replied with force.

The three looked wise. "Oh, yes," they assured him, "there is lots of gold in this country."

Their secret, exultant look was too much for Koehn. His brain began to work. As the men began to unload their water barrel he spied a gold nugget used as a watch charm on Bert Niles's chain. eH thought—he rememered the many slurs cast on him by these same men who were now asking a favor of him. He remembered his name "Crazy Dutchman" that he had been christened on first appearance, a name gained before an acquaintance had been established confirming the unjustness of the same. He remembered something in his trunk—the result of a prospecting trip in Oregon—a few gold nuggets packed in a small box and smothered with cotton. But his face was guileless as these thoughts chased through his brain and evolved a plan.

He stepped up to Niles and fingered the nugget innocently, "What's this?"

"Aw, don't you know what that is, Crazy Dutchman?" the owner asked grandiloquently.

"No," replied the Dutchman.

"That's a nugget," said Niles.

"A nugget? What's a nugget?" queried Koehn, pursuing the conversation with zest.

The men burst into a hoarse laugh. They looked at him pityingly and probably thought that they had named him rightly. Then one explained:

"It's gold."

"But," argued the Dutchman, "I never heard gold called nugget before."

"That's the way you find gold, you Crazy Dutchman," one of the men told him, his patience wellnigh exhausted. "You dig it out of the ground just like that."

A light broke over Koehn's face, then a smile, simplicity itself the smile was, and full of a huge delight.

"So that is gold," he mused aloud and stood in deep thought.

"Yes, can't we learn you nothing?" cried one of the exasperated prospectors.

"That is surely gold," agreed another of the men.

"Then, if that is gold," said Koehn looking at the men, "I know where there is lots of it."

The three pounced on him as he continued. They were eager and breathless.

"I found lots of it. I went up in the hills to see how the country looked; on the ground I saw something I had never seen before. I jumped off my horse to look at it and touch it. There was a great lump of it. I could not lift it. It was too heavy so I just took two little pieces and put them in my pocket.

The eager listeners leaned forward, "Have you them still?"

"Sure," said the amateur prospector apparently proud of the excitement he was creating. "It's in my shack somewhere I guess."

Close on his heels the men followed him to his shack. Into the shack they went. Koehn was puzzled How could he get the gold from his trunk and show it to them all wrapped in cotton? Immediately they would be suspicious that he did know its value. He looked around the shack while thinking. He felt in obscure places. He looked as puzzled as he felt. At last he said he must have thrown them out. Disappointed the men left the cabin. When they were standing without wondering if he was not in truth a "Crazy Dutchman" to get up so much excitement over nothing, Koehn hurried back to the room, threw open the trunk and found the precious box. Hastily he opened it. There, snug in the cotton reposed two small nuggets worth about $11. Quickly he took them from their bed and with excitement in his face rushed out to the men.

"Look!' he cried, "nuggets, gold nuggets!" and he held them out for the men to see.

Closely the men examined them. Yes, they were gold sure enough. Greediness, excitement and lust for gold beat in their breasts and they burst out in a chorus of approval and anxiety.

"Where did you find it?" they demanded.

"Out in the hills I told you," reiterated the Dutchman.

"But where? Where?" questioned the feverish men.

With cunning in his expression he refused absolutely to tell where he had found the gold. He had implanted in their brains a vision of the hills covered with the precious stuff, he had filled them with the idea of lumps of gold too heavy for a man to lift and now he refused to divulge the secret. If it was gold he said he wanted it himself. Why should he tell them where it was?

But the insistent men were fully determined to find out. They took hurried trips to the hills and returned to Kane Springs to keep their eye on the possessor of so precious a secret. They dogged his footsteps. They plied him with questions hoping to take him unawares and so find out this wonderland of gold But the Crazy Dutchman was as firm as adamant.

At last he got tired of their company. A joke was a joke, but he had no idea of being haunted by these "old men of the sea" for the rest of his days. He determined to rid himself of them. One morning he harnessed his horse. The three brightened as they saw him do it. They made ready to follow him. It is bad enough to have one shadow. Three shadows are intolerable—three times as bad.

So off he started—and off started the triplet in hot pursuit. The leader drove to the southwest, and they followed. Hope was high in their bosoms, but alas it was not long before they recognized the trail they pursued through the brush. The outfit was headed unmistakably for Mojave. On they went. The town was reached

The news spread like wildfire. The Crazy Dutchman had found gold! All Mojave was seething with excitement. Where Koehn had before had three shadows he now had the town of Mojave at his heels. The population may not have been great as populations go but it was nerve-racking, to say the least, to be the target of all the eyes of the town.

There was considerable excitement afoot. Purchases of supplies were made and outfits hastily gathered together. Amidst it all the Crazy Dutchman took his departure. But not alone and not with merely three in pursuit. To this day he seems uncertain of the number but only knows he was followed home and a camping place was formed near his homestead. But if a man will not talk he will not talk and that is all there is to it. There was no use in spending day after day awaiting the opening of the Crazy Dutchman's mouth. Action was the thing.

They decamped. They had followed in wagons and on horseback. Once more they started on the move and with a thankful heart the oppressed practical joker saw his shadows desert him and leave him again to the company of the jackrabbits and sidewinders.

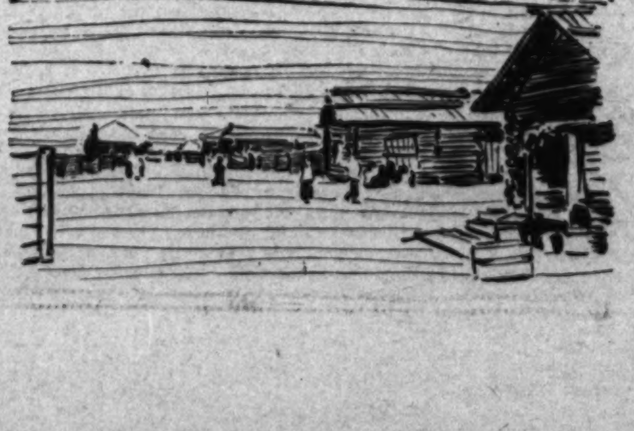
A few days later the Crazy Dutchman, happy in his new-found solitude, saw the approach of horsemen. This time it was a hurried approach—a joyous approach.

"What is it?" he called.

And the unexpected reply came from the jubilant messenger:

"Gold! We have panned gold up in the hills!"

A crushed Dutchman listened to the wonderous tales of how the many prospectors, discouraged at never finding out from him the information they desired, had gone forth on the hunt on their own accord. Some miles up a canyon in the hills they had started a search. Laughingly one had remarked that this was the last place on earth to search for gold—it would be their last chance if gold was not found. But gold was found. The canyon today bears the name of "Last Chance" Canyon.



majority of such ailments are diagnosed and treated as appendicitis. This magic word has attained such hypnotic power over the public mind that it sends the patients, without question or remonstrance, straight to the operating table.

"Says the surgeon, 'If it is appendicitis, only an operation will save the patient's life.' This we positively deny and have proved untrue in hundreds of cases. We have never had an operation for appendicitis performed on one of our patients and we have not lost a single case. Our own records and our reports to the Board of Health attest this fact. If our diagnosis be questioned, I answer that we have taken numerous cases which had already been treated for appendicitis by other physicians, who claimed that operation was absolutely necessary.

"What, then, are the uses of the appendix? Dr. MacEwen, an English surgeon who claimed to have performed more operations for appendicitis than any other surgeon in England, has entirely changed front on the question of operating, and now strongly warns against it. In an article on the subject he concludes:

"'The secretion of the appendix is a valuable aid to digestion, and the excision of that organ, except in a hopelessly diseased condition, is manifestly improper.'"

To the above I add that removal of the appendix is always followed, sooner or late, by more or less chronic constipation.

Going Too Far.

FOLLOWING is a press dispatch from Portland, Or.:

"For giving a cigarette to a girl, who he said was his fiancee, A. C. White was sentenced in the municipal court today to pay a fine of $25 and serve ten days in jail. The girl, who is 18 years old, was turned over to the woman's protective division."

This is another indication of the wave of sumptuary legislation that is just now sweeping over the country. The inevitable result of this growing interference with personal liberty will be to bring law into contempt, which is a dangerous thing just now, when anarchy is in the air.

A cigarette is harmful, but less so than a box of candy. The next logical step would be to forbid men to give their girls candy, or to take them to soda fountains.

Our legislatures are going too far. The people are getting restive and resentful.

Sanitation vs. Medication.

A LOS ANGELES woman correspondent writes:

"The stand you take in regard to our boards of health is correct. We people in the southwest part of the city have to endure the Japanese burning manure and other refuse night and day, preventing proper rest at night, and filling the air by day with stenches. We are in the city and there is an ordinance forbidding this, except between 7 and 9 a.m. At the local Board of Health we are told it is all 'imagination.' Every night I have to close our windows."

Again, a correspondent writes of intolerable conditions at a fruit cannery at Burbank, near Los Angeles, where she says there are overpowering odors from the cesspools. She adds: "The cannery inspector calls regularly with his microscope, and counts the number of 'bugs' in the cans, and recently ordered deodorizers placed in the toilets, covering up the bad smell."

As I have said before, we need more sanitation and less medication.

Ivy Poisoning.

NOW is the time of year when many go to the mountains for rest and recreation. Some are forced to forbid themselves this pleasure, on account of their susceptibility to the effects of poison ivy, or poison oak, which brings about a painful inflammation of the skin.

Poison ivy, the handsome vine so plentiful in the foothill and mountain regions of California, is, under the Latin name of "rhus toxicodendron," a popular homeopathic remedy. It belongs to the sumac family. The ivy of the Pacific Coast is rhus diversiloba. You may sometimes see "tenderfeet" carrying a bouquet of the leaves, which they promptly drop when informed of its baneful qualities. Some people are so susceptible that they will "catch" it from a distance of a hundred feet, while others are immune. To produce poisoning the ivy must be in flower, and the pores must be open through perspiration. Then, when carried by the wind, the minute spores do the business.

For many years I have published annually the following infallible preventive of ivy poisoning, which I obtained from my good old friend, Dr. Schwalbe, now deceased, who made a special study of this plant. It is simple and sure. File it for reference: One level teaspoonful of concentrated lye, in a quart of boiling water. Let it stand until cool, then bottle it for use. Before going where you expect to encounter the ivy rub the liquid over the exposed parts of the skin, and do the same when you return home. My wife, who is most susceptible to this plant, used the preventive on one occasion in Napa county, a few years ago. She forgot, however, to rub it back of the ears, in consequence of which those parts were badly swollen, while otherwise she was unharmed.

In case you have failed to use this preventive, and have become affected, the following treatment is said to alleviate the trouble. I know nothing of it personally:

"The inflamed skin should be copiously washed with lukewarm water and a soap that does not irritate. The parts affected should then be bathed with a watery solution of permanganate of potash as hot as can be borne. If the skin is broken a 1 per cent. solution should be used; if the skin is not broken, however, the strength of the solution may be increased up to 2 or 3 per cent. Treatment should begin the instant symptoms are observed."

"Pernicious Literature."

A LOS ANGELES woman writes that she got a book on fasting, by Upton Sinclair, from the Public Library, and the librarian warned her that she was reading "pernicious literature."

If no books in our public libraries were more "pernicious" than this, it would be good for the readers. I do not indorse all Sinclair writes, but "The Fasting Cure" is one of the best books on the subject.

"Soft Drinks."

THE monthly report of Internal Revenue Collector Carter of Los Angeles showed that in this district the revenue on "soft drinks," for the month of July were seven items greater than the total collections of May and June. Similar conditions doubtless prevail in other sections of the country.

Is this a subject for congratulation? Let us see.

As I have previously remarked, "soft drinks" are more harmful to health than pure light wine or beer. Following extract is from "Starving America," by Alfred W. McCann:

"Pineapple, strawberry, raspberry, banana, peach, cherry, plum flavorings for candy, pop and soda water are false. No chemist, prior to the year 1912, has ever

QUEER LITTLE CREATURES OF THE SEA.

BY CHRISTINE F. SCOTT.

LIKE the legendary bat with whom neither beast nor bird wished to be classified, the barnacles (Balanus) have hung upon the ragged edge of shell orders begging admission and recognition. The molluscas for a time endured their presence and remote relationship but when upon closer examination the barnacles were found to possess essential difference of anatomy beside a surfeit of swimming feet, outnumbering the quartette of the molluscas by two other pairs, they unquestionably cast them adrift.

The crustaceans then reached out a benevolent hand and drew them into their clan, oblivious to the fact that unlike most of their species, the barnacle permanently attaches itself to some fixed object in adult life.

Domiciled at last among this family of lobsters, crabs, sand fleas and a hoard of tiny creatures of both fresh and salt water, we find the barnacle as interesting and intelligent a member as any of them.

Being on a par with the waterfleas the barnacle has been placed in the lowest class of crustaceans, which is the sub-class entomostraca, where the body is formed of segments either similar or dissimilar to each other but not as sharply different as in insects.

The Crustaceans Have Armor Plate and are Very Strong.

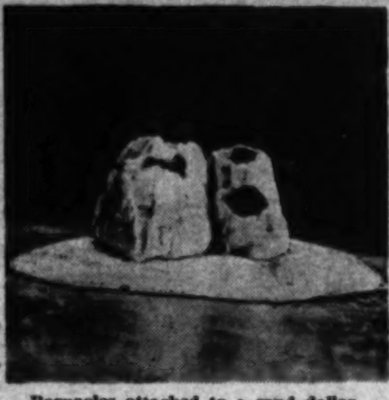
THE crustaceans have been produced principally in the water and from its combat lashings their bodies have become armored with a tough skin or skeleton composed of carbonate of lime. At the joints where the segments are held together the skin is very pliant and the muscles are so firmly attached that the freedom of motion and wonderful strength of insects and crustaceans lies in this characteristic. Taking into account their size, these are the most powerful of animals.

The young barnacles which are hatched from eggs deposited in the water develop into minute larvae called nauplius covered upon the back with a three-cornered shell shield, equipped with one lone eye, and three pairs of ridiculous limbs. In a very short time the larvae begin to molt again and continue this evolutionary process until they attain the desired results.

As the barnacle cannot grow larger while encased in its bony skeleton it takes advantage of the molting season to acquire additions to its anatomy when unhampered by its shell.

Through these different stages it develops a pair of stalked eyes, six pairs of swimming feet which enable the small creature to swim swiftly upon the surface waters, and two shell valves hinged down the back of the body.

At length the first pair of limbs have changed into antennae large and strong enough to fasten the young seaman by the head to a rock or wharf pile or to any solid substance that it chooses as a lifetime residence.



Barnacles attached to a sand dollar.

Having decided upon its location the barnacle inaugurates a season of feasting and severe activity. It now provides itself with a shell of several parts beautifully grooved and mitered together, and fitted with hinged lids.

The lids may close or open the shell aperture and are a barricade for the barnacle behind which it can fortify itself against intruders. Through this opening the barnacle thrusts its long many-jointed hairy feet at regular intervals waving them in graceful strokes for hours at a time to renew the blood with oxygen and to form a current upon which to hurry the minute creatures of the deep into its wide-open mouth.

The shell still consists of two valves but around these are molded six fanlike pieces which reach to the rock to which they are fastened. At first these pieces are soft and puttylike but become hardened with deposits of lime.

The shell is increased in size by adding to its edges as its occupant increases in dimensions. The barnacle retains the habits of molting in adult life, casting off the skin from the body from time to time.

The rock barnacles which cover the shores upon Atlantic coasts are found between tide-levels where for a part of each day they lie exposed to the sun. When the tide is out they quickly close their shells and remain hidden until the crumpling frill of the waves reaches out to them again when they unroll their curling scoops to wave a welcome to the calling of the sea.

One species of barnacle known as the whale barnacle (Coronula diadema) is so named because it has chosen that ponderous animal as its maternal support. Embedding itself in the skin of the whale with only a small opening left for its protruding feet, it rides the waves with the most profound unconcern.

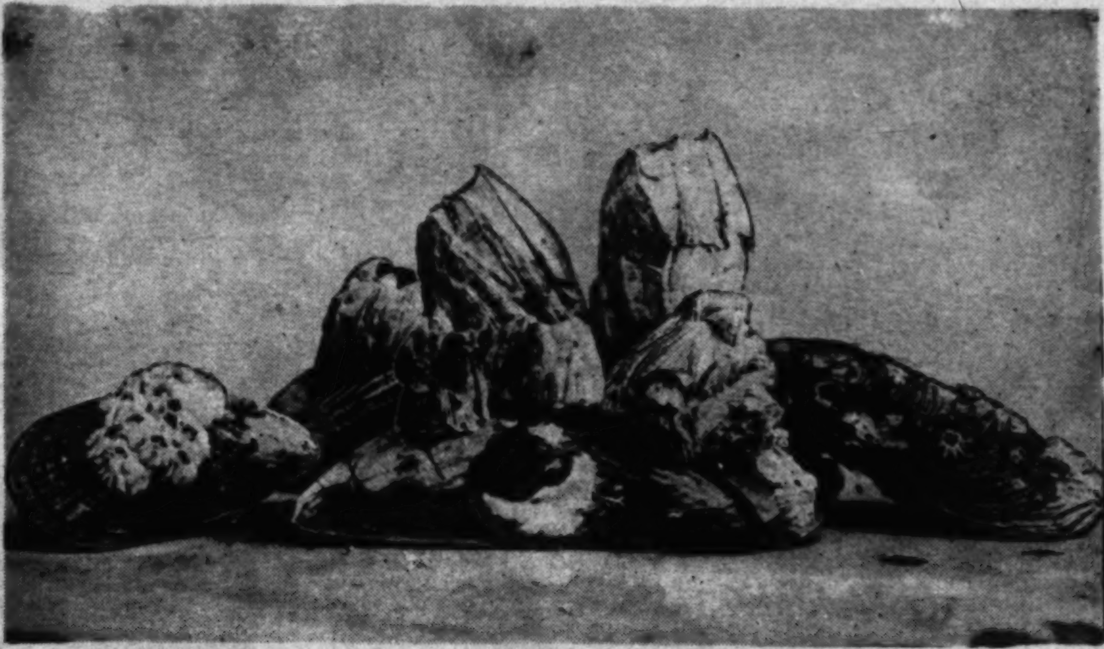
As the motion of the whale supplies the currents for the barnacle's fishing its life afloat is comparatively easy and lucrative, but not even in times of dearth will it draw upon the tissues of the whale for nourishment.

Barnacles attach themselves to the bottom of ships often doing serious damage, and almost any water-logged timbers, gulf weeds and buoys soon become beset with them.

In the Pacific Ocean is found a species of barnacle (pyrgoma, milleporae) which buries itself in the coral branches, distorting the beautiful forms of coral by numerous colonies of holes.

The barnacle like the oyster attaches itself for support and not as a parasite draining upon the vitality of its host for sustenance; and although its real value is not obvious its workmanship is peculiarly adapted to the humble station it has accepted.

Renouncing the empty pomp of mien and manner of the ocean aristocrats who sail in pearl-lined yachts, it bestows an alertness of fellowship upon its associates which unites them in uncounted hordes up on the gray sea shore.



The barnacle attaches itself for support, not as a parasite.

Our Great Debt to the Peaceful Indian

By Carl Clausen.

MOST of us are obsessed with the idea that the Indians of the America's, North and South, were a war-loving people. When anybody says Indian we immediately have visions of scalping knives, tomahawks and a stake surrounded by a very warm fire. So much has this been impressed upon our minds by Messrs. Cowper, Buffalo Bill, etc., that we have come to agree with a certain old frontiersman who once upon a time remarked that a good Indian was a dead Indian.

However, when we read of the accomplishments of the ancient Incas of Peru, we begin to think that perhaps after all the "good" red man's agricultural proclivities were not confined to a bird's-eye view of the under side of a daisy.

These people, the Incas, were a peace-loving lot. They did not even have a word to designate warrior in their vocabulary. If you were born with a beroerker temperament, they would put you in the phycopathic ward for observation. The word soldier or warrior was synomous with that of enemy—Bill of Hohenzollern please note. Virgin soil for dispossessed royalty. Good location for branch office.

How many of us know when we eat corn on the cob that we are indebted to the Incas for this juicy morsel, and what would Michael Hennessey say if you told him a red man invented the "Irish Potato?" Faith, and he'd say you were draming.

And how about the gentle bean—the vegetable variety not the ivory? When you wind your way, at the end of a perfect day, down to Aunty Coggins' Quick Lunch Emporium for a plate of Boston Baked you're treading the ancient trail of the Inca, for he was the first to be both pink and navy.

You buy yourself a denim shirt little suspecting that if it had not been for the Inca Indian, you'd be paying three times the amount of money for a shirt of wool, hides or tin; for cotton was first grown and cultivated on the slopes of the Andes Mountains about the time that Alexander the "Great" was bearing up half of Asia on Bucephalus. Also the United States would never have known the southern dialect, the negro folk songs and Mark Twain, if it hadn't been for cotton.

When you hand the man with the earrings a nickel for a bag of roasted peanuts at the park entrance, you're again in debt to the Inca, and the sweet potato was first raised on the sunny slopes of the tributaries that feed the Amazon River, as were the pineapple and the guava.

So you see you cannot get away from the influence of the Inca. He is omnipresent and yet this gentle, peace-loving people were ruthlessly butchered by the Spanish conquistadores. These red men to whom civilization owes so much have all but disappeared from the face of the earth, leaving us a heritage of inestimable value.

The great mountain ranges of the Andes with their valleys and streams will hear their voices no more. Their home fires are dead and the ashes are scattered to the four winds. But the spirit of this gentle people is still with us. Their work and ideals have taught us that he who lives by the sword must perish by it. Warlike tribes of the earth have passed into history limbo, but these lowly ones are with us whenever we break bread.

Periwinkle Street to Go.

London has its full quota of strangely named streets, one of which has recently disappeared into the limbo of the past. The London County Council has sanctioned the transformation of Periwinkle street into Ratcliffe Cross street. But there still remain other oddly named thoroughfares in the British metropolis, such as Beer Lane, Pickle Herring street, Shoulder of Mutton Alley, Hot Water Court, and Tiger Bay.

There was a time when London possessed a far wider collection of cacophonous thoroughfares than is now the case. Crackbrain Court and Cutthroat Lane were in Whitechapel, and Deadman's Place adjoined Dirty Lane in Southwark. Hangman's Gains stood near the Tower, and there was Bandyleg Alley off Fleet street. Breakneck Court, opposite the old Bailey, where Goldsmith lived when he first settled in London, has also disappeared.

A Bad Break.

He: What a strong family resemblance! It might be taken for you.—[Boston Transcript.

CARE OF THE BODY

CONDUCTED BY
HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

Care of the Insane.

JOHN S. McGROARTY, who does the editorial page in this magazine, recently criticised our brutal system of herding the unfortunate insane in asylums. They should have individual treatment.

Even if the inmates were always well treated, it would be a wrong method, but they are not. Cases of brutality to unfortunate patients in insane asylums are far too common. This is inevitable, so long as employees are chosen without any regard to their qualifications.

"Investigations" are usually a farce, because members of the medical fraternity stand in with each other, as they do in cases of medical malpractice—that is to say, if the offending member is one of the elect, belonging to the Medical Trust.

To this I add that three-fourths of the inmates of insane asylums might be discharged, if their colons were thoroughly cleansed, and they were properly fed. Absorbed poisons from the colon, and fumes from food that ferments produce alcohol and gas, poison the blood and further becloud the mind. That is why many outside of asylums are sometimes partially insane.

Said Dr. Lennox Wainwright, Honorable Physician to St. Michaels Medical Aid, and Physician to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children:

"I am quite sure of this, that the mental effect on many patients of prolonged intestinal toxemia is such as to make them almost demented, and I believe that if many of our asylums were invaded by a good, sound clinical physician, who would approach the subject without any preconceived idea, in many cases supposed to be hopeless, the melancholia and hypochondria would yield to common-sense treatment, and reduce the number of insane people."

The Council Police Commission of Chicago has asked the Rockefeller Foundation for a minimum of $250,000, for the establishment of a "brain laboratory" in Chicago. If they would pay attention to the colon they would accomplish more. Most brain diseases—except where there has been direct injury, as from a blow—are but symptoms of an abnormal condition of the bodily functions.

Several years ago, hydrotheraupetic treatment was introduced in a California insane asylum, with excellent results. Rational diet would do still more.

Medical Examination of School Children.

FOLLOWING is from the Public School Protective League Bulletin for July:

"Of all the many plans which have been devised by that branch of the medical profession which is determined to secure autocratic control of the bodies of the people, the one which is now most relied upon to fulfill that purpose is the physical examination of school children. It is, therefore, not to be wondered at that the greatest possible pressure is being brought in the endeavor to extend physical examinations, and the people of California are to be congratulated upon having secured the passage of the Evans bill at the last Legislature. This bill provides 'that a parent or guardian having control or charge of any child enrolled in the public schools may file annually with the principal of the school in which he is enrolled a statement in writing, signed by such parent or guardian, stating that he will not consent to the physical examination of his child, and thereupon such child shall be exempt from any physical examination.'

"The physical examination of school children has never justified itself from any standpoint. In the first place parents have rights in these matters and one of those rights consists in selecting the medical and religious advisers of their children. To allow young children to be physically examined in the absence of the parent by some one unknown to the parent and with, in many cases, doubtful qualifications for such work, is a condition which should not be tolerated.

"In the second place, medical examiners must, of necessity, in any democracy, be without the power to enforce treatment of any particular kind or at all for any so-called defect found by the examination. And to merely point out physical defects without the power to go further certainly does not solve the problem.

"From a legal standpoint, compulsory physical examination of school children without the consent of the parent is assault and battery. In commenting on the legal status of this matter, Peter V. Ross of the San Francisco bar has said: 'The person of an individual, whether child or adult, is peculiarly sacred and no one, under ordinary circumstances, has the right physically to examine him without first obtaining permission so to do. In the case of children the permission must, of course, be had from parents or guardians.

"'Physicians, health officers and school authorities are as much bound to respect the sacredness of the person of individuals as other citizens are. Their profession or official positions invest them with no authority to take liberties with the persons of school children or anyone else. They have no more right to go over the bodies of children for physical defects or go down their throats in search of germs or to take cultures, than has the janitor of the building.

"'A large part of the time in our public schools is being diverted from legitimate subjects and given to portraying disease, physically examining the children for it and generally frightening them to take refuge in the arms of medicine. All this in the face of the fact that medicine is experimental rather than scientific, not merely changing but even reversing its theories from year to year. It will not be long, if this tendency is not checked, before people find themselves under the domination of physicians exercising State authority and forced to make as vigorous a struggle for physical liberty as in the bygone ages they were compelled to make for religious liberty.'

"The people of California now have it entirely within their own power to forbid the physical examination of their children. This can be done by filing with the school authorities a statement to the effect that the parent does not consent to the physical examination of his child, and when such statement is filed the child is exempt from any examination, except for contagious diseases. It is probable that when school opens, cards to be signed by those parents who desire to take advantage of the law can be obtained at any school. In any event, however, the league expects to print a large supply of them to be distributed to members and all interested persons before the fall term of school commences. They will be sent to any address upon request."

The Public School Protective League is an organization established for the purpose of protecting the public schools and public school children from medical and ecclesiastical exploitation. It solicits the interest and welcomes the support of those who believe that the public school is and always must be subordinate to the home, that American citizens are still capable of choosing the medical and religious advisers of their children, and that: "It is the school that is public—not the children."

The general offices of the league are at 717 Van Nuys Building, Los Angeles. The Northern California division is at 1007 Chronicle Building, San Francisco.

This organization deserves the material and moral support of all right thinking, liberty loving people.

Appendicitis.

FOLLOWING remarks on this subject are from the "Philosophy of Natural Therapeutics," by Henry Lindlahr, M.D.:

"Apropos of appendicitis, the following story is told of Bill, the newsboy. He had been absent for some months from his favorite haunts, and on his return was greeted by his mates with, 'Hello, Bill, we hear you had appendicitis.' Bill replied, 'Huh, appendicitis nothing! didn't have money enough for that—it was just belly ache.'

"Like many another joke, this contains more truth than fiction. The time seems near when the vulgar throng will be spoken of not as the Great Unwashed but as the Great Unoperated. Already, at national conventions of physicians, at local gatherings, and in medical journals, the proposition has been made in all seriousness that appendectomy, together with the removal of tonsils, should be performed on all infants, 'in order to prevent affections of these organs later in life.' Why not save our progeny all future trouble by scientifically and dextrously removing their heads.

"According to the reports of prominent surgeons, not more than 15 per cent. of those operated upon for appendicitis really have this disease. The other 85 per cent. are found to be suffering with inflammations in the cecum, ascending colon, or in the small intestine. Sometimes the symptoms are caused by touches of peritonitis. The

HOW FAT FOLKS MAY BECOME SLIM

Fat persons will be interested to learn that they may easily reduce their weight without starvation diet or tiresome exercise. Eat all you need, but chew your food thoroughly, so that you will not overtax your assimilative organs, get fresh air and take a few drops of oil of korein four times a day.

Oil of korein (five drops to the capsule) may be obtained from the druggist. This preparation is absolutely harmless, pleasant to take and is purposed (in connection with the other simple directions) to reduce fatty accumulations in the system.

If you would like to obtain interesting booklet, free, by mail, write to Korein Company, N. D. 532, Station F, New York, N. Y. The free booklet is entitled: "Reduce Weight Happily," and will delight you. How to reduce pursy abdomen, double chin, large limbs, obese hips and other overstout parts of the body.

Even a few days' treatment has been reported to show a noticeable reduction in weight. Footsteps become lighter, the skin more firm and smoother in appearance, work seems easier, and a more buoyant feeling takes possession of the whole being as superfluous and unhealthy fat disappears.

If you are ten to sixty pounds over normal weight, you should give this treatment a trial. You will probably find that it's just what you need. A steady and very satisfactory reduction may be expected.—[Advertisement.

The Vengeance of Nawi-sam.

"My God! My God!" cried Densmore hoarsely, when the boy told of the doctors' verdict that Naid was stricken with the plague.

"Alas, Sahib!" interrupted the Hindu, sadly, "If it were only the plague! But the plague she has not—that I can swear to!"

"For God's sake speak," pleaded Densmore. "What is it then—what could be worse. Speak, Akbar, speak!"

"Forgive me, Sahib—forgive what I must relate."

"Go on!" shuddered the man, in an agony of dread.

"When Neeja left the chamber," said the Hindu slowly, "Nawi-sam, master of black arts, cast a spell on the maid. I beheld him, Sahib, with eyes burning as an angry serpent, his arms moving slowly like the arms of the devil fish—crouching stealthily as the cheeta of the jungle! Then he closed her eyes with his fingers, Sahib—closed them softly, gently, as people close the eyes of their dead—"

"Naid—Naid!" moaned Densmore, piteously, "My God, my poor girl!"

"—and as she called out to you, Sahib, called 'Dick, Dick,' like that, he bade her sleep. 'Sleep,' he said, 'sleep and never wake, till you hear the voice of the man you love calling you, Naid! Naid!' And she lay back, and slept, Sahib, and I went mad! I shrieked, and beat upon the screen. And then the beasts who serve the devil man Nawi-sam fell upon me, and I knew no more."

Richard Densmore, crushed, heartsick and hopeless, all vitality fled, lay supinely on the humid earth. Not a sound escaped his dry lips—and thus Nawi-sam found him.

Without warning the door swiftly opened, letting in the doctor, and an instant's flood of blinding daylight. Then the door as quickly closed again.

"Good morning!" greeted the Parsee, with mock politeness, the searching rays of his pocket lamp darting about the chamber, and falling on the gray, distorted face of Densmore.

"Permit me!" he requested, as he seized Densmore under the arms and dragged him nearer to the door. "You can hear better there," he explained, significantly.

Then he flashed his lamp on Akbar. The Hindu sat quiet, stolid, indifferent, his bound hands apparently clasped tightly behind him.

Densmore—who had till now uttered no sound—could restrain himself no longer.

"Tell me—for the love of God!" he choked, "Where is Naid?"

With maddening deliberation Nawi-sam took out his watch, held it to his lamp, and smiled.

"She should be near you, very soon," answered the Parsee, enigmatically.

"Near me, near me?" echoed Densmore, in bewilderment. "What do you mean—what—"

"Patience, Mr. Densmore!" interrupted Nawi-sam. "I will explain. You are now a prisoner in the Cave of Snakes, under Malabar Hill; you have been here some thirty hours. It is now nearly 6 o'clock a.m., Saturday—you were to have married today, I believe, and sailed on the Devanah!"

"For God's sake, Nawi-sam!" begged Densmore, "have mercy—tell me, I pray to you—tell me where Naid is, and what—"

"Listen!" warned the Parsee. "Hear the bells! That's the tolling of the bronze bells at the door to the Tower of Silence—you know it's just above us on the hill. That's why I put you here, by the door—where you can enjoy it. That bell, Richard Densmore, is tolling for the funeral of Naid Raporee-Wyndham. She is to be fed to the birds, true to Parsee custom, at 6 o'clock this morning!"

And as the Parsee paused, there came faintly to Densmore's straining ears the muffled tones of a bell, rung slowly.

"Hear it—Hear it!" gloated Nawi-sam, ominously, "it's the invitation of the birds to come and eat. And they'll be hungry, too, for no Parsees have died for a week!"

"You lie! You lie!" screamed Densmore, writhing on the ground, tearing impotently at the strong cords that bound him, struggling like a wild beast ensnared. "You lie in your soul—and before God Naid is not dead—I know—you hypnotized her, you monster, and now you come to torture me with this hideous tale! I tell you, Naid is not dead!"

"Of course she's not," agreed Nawi-sam, calmly, searching his pockets for his cigarette case. "But all the Parsees think she is Only I know that she is living—in a state of suspended animation. She spurned me," he suddenly broke out angrily, "and chose a man not of her people! So I give her body to the birds The beautiful, warm, virgin body that you thought would be yours—"

But Nawi-sam's words were lost—drowned in the roar of blasphemy that came from Richard Densmore—such oaths as never his tongue had framed before. And when he ceased, from sheer exhaustion, and lay panting, Nawi-sam resumed.

"Only one thing can save Naid's life," he explained calmly, "and that is the sound of your voice, calling her name! You alone could awaken her, by calling her name, 'Naid, Naid,' like that—That is why I put you here. You can hear her funeral bells—hear them tolling now? But she could not hear you, though you shout your life away!

"Naid Naid!" groaned Densmore, his reason tottering.

"That's it—That's what I came down to hear you cry," mocked Nawi-sam, leaning back against the door. "Hear the bell" he exclaimed, "now the vultures are coming—from over the bay—from the dead trees on Malabar Coast—to devour your Naid—to eat your bride on her wedding day!" And he leaned back, and laughed and laughed, long and contemptuously—laughed till the jagged stone in Akbar's freed hands fairly cracked his shapely skull and sent him reeling, to stumble backward into the dark cave, into the midst of the angry hisses.

"Quick, Akbar! Don't be so damned slow—Quick!" stormed Densmore, as the Hindu boy tore at the bonds that held his master.

"This way, Sahib!" panted the running boy, as he guided Densmore, weak and staggering, up the tangled hillside—to the tower. Black forms whirled above them—followed by long shadows that sped swiftly across the ground beneath—and to their ears came the sinister swish of giant wings—and the torturing toll of the bells.

In the madness of it all Densmore's stiffness seemed to fall from him. Like steel springs his muscles now flung him up the hill—through the strange assembly before the vaulted, yawning doors, and down upon his knees beside the premature bier of the girl he loved.

To this day Densmore cannot say just what happened. He only recalls striking down hooded, mysterious monks who opposed him, and calling out wildly to Naid—and that British soldiers, out for an early morning practice march past Malabar Hill, rushed into the melee and helped him, as one white man helps another in a savage land.

And that Naid awoke!

In the tumult none observed a Hindu boy, slipping steadthily away. Down towards the cave of snakes he skulked, and peered cautiously in. Long ond curiously he peered; then crept as stealthily away—away from a brown man elegantly dressed, a dead man into whose swollen neck the fangs of short, thick snakes had struck.

. . . . . .

From the rail of the Devanah her passengers watched the receding shoreline of Bombay.

"Come on Dick," coaxed a pale but singularly handsome girl, as she slipped her hand into Densmore's. "Akbar has brought up the steamer chairs. Let's talk about New York."

[illegible]

I would like to see the sunrise,
Herald of the coming day;
And I'd like to watch the sunbeams
Drive the silvery mists away.
I've been told its wondrous beauty
Is a thrilling sight to see,
But I wouldn't care to see it,
Unless you were there with me.

Once a traveler told a story,
Of a sight he saw in Spain;
Of the moon that rose in glory,
Through a gorge of mountain chain—
And he said it touched his heartstrings—
Such a charming sight to see;
But I wouldn't care to see it,
Unless you were there with me.

I would like to be quite famous,
And I'd like to win renown;
With a high degree of honor,
In the wealth of gold or crown.
But the plaudits of the people,
Or the cheers of victory,
Wouldn't carry half the glory,
Unless you were there with me.

There's an essence in the sunshine—
There's an atom in the air—
There's a need of every movement
And a part that must be there.
I have heard it comes in heaven,
Of God's sweetest melody—
But I wouldn't like the music,
Unless you were there with me.

I like to feel the sunshine,
And I like the touch of night—
I can find a certain pleasure,
In the things of love and light.
But there's always something missing—
There is lack of sympathy;
For no pleasure can be perfect
That you do not share with me.

OUTFITTERS OF DEPENDABILITY

Some Good Short Stories from Everywhere.

Compiled for The Times Illustrated Magazine.

Daniel Webster Was Not so Sure.

DANIEL WEBSTER, a statesman of a few generations ago, who represented the New England States, delivered an address in Washington, the capital, that resounded through our States and territories, adding to the fame that he had already won as an orator and a politician.

He found two of his colleagues sitting one day in the depths of discouragement.

"Cheer up," said Webster.

"You can say 'Cheer up,'" was the reply. "You are sure that your name will be handed down, never to be forgotten, beside the names of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin, while ours will rest in oblivion."

"Gentlemen," said Webster, "I am not sure."

"Last week, when I was traveling in the interests of our country, I saw an old man who used to be a neighbor of ours when I was a boy.

"I changed my seat, to be near him to converse, and directed my conversation to the growing crops and to the cattle grazing in the fields, as we traveled, thinking he would surely recognize me.

"I was sure that he was Hiram Atherholt, and gradually he told me his name and where he lived, and puckering my brow, as if trying to recall a distant memory, I asked him if a family by the name of Webster had not once been a neighbor of his?"

"'Oh, yes,' he said.

"Were there not sons in the family?" I asked.

"'Yes,' he said, naming them, but did not mention me.

"I thought there was another one." I added questioningly.

"'No, that's all,' he said.

"The train whistled, the name of the next station had been called; he gathered up his valise, and his cane, then said to me:

"'I do recall another boy, Dan Webster. He had entirely slipped my mind. He left home several years ago and has not been heard from since. I s'pose he has not amounted to anything.'"

His Definition.

MRS. SELFRED, wife of Capt. Selfred, one of the military attaches in London, in a letter to a friend in Los Angeles, describes an amusing episode that occurred in one of the London courts.

Seems a cabby had been brought before the magistrate for using violent and abusive language to a lady

"But she ain't no loidy," he protested fiercely.

"Indeed," said His Worship, "and do you know a lady when you see one?"

"Of course I do," answered the man indignantly. "Why, only the other day, I saw one. She give me a pound note for a shilling fare and walked away.

"'Hy mu'um,' I cries, 'W'at about your choinge?'

"'Don't be a blinkin' old fool,' she says. 'Keep it an' go an' git drunk enough to kiss your mother-in-law.'

"Now, Your Worship, that's what I calls a loidy!"

Easy Money.

NOT so long ago, four witnesses, all under 10 years of age, testified for a little friend in a $20,000 damage suit in Indianapolis. When they called at the office of the County Clerk after the trial, they looked mighty big and important. Acting for all the world like seasoned witnesses they approached the clerk and the 9-year-old spokesman demanded the fees.

"But you'll have to swear to the correctness of your claim," the clerk said.

A puzzled look crossed the brow of the spokesman. "Swear?" he repeated, "Oh, all right," and turned to his companions. "Hey, Bill," he cried, "stand out here and swear. You're the best one in the crowd."

Why Waste Time?

PATRICIA hurt the baby's fingers, for which she received a scolding, and began to cry. After a little time her mother said: "Now, Patricia, go and get a hanky and stop bawling. Your nose needs wiping."

Patricia: "But I'm going to bawl some more, so what's the use of getting a hanky now?"

Walking the Dog.

IN CITY court the other day a woman appeared and demanded a judgment of $10 for her dog, which had been killed by an automobile. Asked on what she based her claim she replied:

"When I paid the dog's license I figured that it entitled him to a certain amount of protection. He has a right to walk across the street."

The judge agreed with her and added, "the joy-walking ordinance does not apply to dogs."

"But what is the joy walking ordinance anyway?"

Wouldn't Forget.

AT THE Orpheum the other night while the news weekly was running, a picture of life in the navy was flashed on the screen. Two women nudged each other.

"My boy's in the navy. I'm so glad I saw this," said one.

"I'm glad I saw it, too," said the other, "especially those scenes where they scrub

"What's especially interesting about that."

"Well, my husband's in the navy too, and now that I know what they have to do, believe me I'll remind him when he gets home."

Something in a Name.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, in writing the story of his life, recalls his first law case. It was in Peekskill. The client was a farmer and he wanted an opinion on certain property rights.

Depew spent a week in looking up the points of law that had bearing on the case and when he had finished charged the modest fee of $5.

"Too much," cried the farmer.

"But it's taken me a whole week to prepare this," protested Depew.

"Don't make no difference," declared the farmer. "I figure $1.50 is all it's worth, and that's all you're going to get."

About a week later the man came to the office again.

"Mr. Depew," he said, "I had some doubts about that opinion of yours so I took it down to New York and showed it to Mr. ——. And what do you think he charged me, just for readin' that opinion of yours and putting his O.K. on it?"

"How much," demanded Depew, all excited.

"Five hundred dollars!"

Really Absurd.

WITH his induction into office, Mayor Snyder was immediately besieged by job seekers. Some were very open about it and others hedged.

"Yet it was obvious what they were after," remarked the Mayor, just as obvious as the young man who was calling on Maggie. When Maggie came down to breakfast next morning, quite late, her mother said severely:

"'Maggie, did that young man kiss you last night?'

"'Now, mother,' said Maggie blushing, 'do you suppose he came over here all the way from Pasadena just to hear me sing?'"

Joke on Funston.

THE late Gen. Funston had a favorite army story. He would tell it only on special occasions, but before the fighting genius died nearly every officer in the army had heard it.

While commanding a regiment during the Spanish-American War Col. Funston had occasion to conduct an inquiry in a near-by city. He went in civilian clothes, with the idea of getting better results. Returning to camp after dark, he wondered how he was going to get by his own sentries, for he had issued strict orders to allow no one to pass.

"Halt, who goes there?" sang a sentry as the colonel was trying to sneak through unnoticed.

"Oh, that's all right; I'm your colonel," said Funston.

"Oh, you are, eh! Haw-haw, that's good!" was the unexpected reply. "Say, mister, go tell that to Sentry No. 2; he's easy."

Cootie Wins Pasture.

SPEAKING of cooties, Col. Orrin H. de Wolfe, assistant adjutant of the Western Department of the Army, has a story that he got while in France in command of a fighting regiment of negroes who never were too busy fighting the Hun to have a joke now and then.

A big top sergeant while under fire felt a cootie gnawing at his back, and although the shells were whizzing by at an alarming rate, and rifle bullets were whining their way toward the rear, the sergeant had to stop and attend to Mr. Cootie. He reached over his shoulder to grapple the new enemy, and as he did so he inclined his head forward. At that minute a Big Bertha whizzed right over his head, barely touching his iron helmet.

The sergeant looked at the captured cootie a minute almost lovingly. He hesitated a minute, then remarked:

"Mr. Cootie, you shuah did save mah life dat time. Now I'se gwine to save youah's. Back you go to your black pasture foh life."

And back it went, right beneath the undershirt.

The Brute.

THE other day a woman entered the office of Lou Guernsey and asked him to be her lawyer in a divorce case. She said she had been married only a day.

"Married only a day, and you want a divorce?" gasped Guernsey incredulously.

"Yes," insisted the woman, and explained:

"When my husband came home from the office I was crying. He asked me why and I said:

"'Oh John, I baked a lovely cake and put it out on the porch for the frosting to dry, and the dog ate it.'

"And John said, 'Don't cry, dear, I know a man who will give us another dog.'"

A New One.

ONE of San Francisco's high army officers felt he wouldn't let June 30 get by without mourning at the bier of alcohol. So into his civies he jumped and stepped out, taking his 18-year-old daughter for a companion.

At one of the well-known beach resorts the officer ran across a brother navy officer, likewise attired.

"Why, hello, John," cried the second, "you steppin' out, too?"

"Oh, yes, got to celebrate, you know."

"Say, you ought to see the young chicken I got with me," confided the second as he nudged a little closer. "Some pip, I'll say, 'n the wife's away, too. But, say, who's that little infant you're steppin' around with? I'd like to meet her myself."

"Oh, that—that's my daughter," exclaimed the first, nervously and a trifle embarrassed.

"Your daughter! Say, that's a good one. I'm going to tell that myself next time. It's got the cousin stall beat a mile."

PRIVATE JONES was accompanied by a sergeant that, to hear him talk, was one of the brainiest men Uncle Sam had hired. One Sunday, in a certain town, a young woman they met on the street asked them if they cared to go to her house and have a cup of coffee. On arriving they were introduced to her mother, who made excuses in regard to her appearance. She remarked, "I'll go and put on the percolator."

The sergeant replied, "Oh, you look all right the way you are."

Aunty Would Help.

BILL BUSH of L.A.A.C. was showing an elderly lady the virtues of the car he sells. He made many turns and at the proper times extended his arm as a turning signal.

The old lady watched the preceeding for some time. Then she craned her neck and looked at the sky.

"Mister," she said sternly, tapping Bill on the shoulder, "you just tend to your driving. It don't look like rain no-how, but if it should, I'll let you know."

EVEN doctors make mistakes, as they at times admit, and sometimes they make many of them to the disturbance and at the expense of their patients. An occasional error can be forgiven, but an old practitioner told a class in medicine at the University of California recently that many mistakes could not be forgiven. He illustrated with this story.

"A surgeon called on a patient upon whom he had just operated for appendicitis. 'I'm sorry, John,' he remarked, 'but yesterday when I sewed you up I left my scissors inside, and I'll have to operate again to get them.'

"'That's all right, doc, go ahead,' cheerfully replied the victim.

"The next day the surgeon appeared and very nervously addressed the patient. 'John, I'm awfully sorry, but when I sewed you up yesterday I left some thread inside and it's awfully expensive, but of course it won't cost you a cent.'

"'Oh, that's all right, doc, never mind, go after it. I don't want to keep anything that belongs to you.'

"When the surgeon appeared for the third time the next day and with a red face announced that a pair of pliers had been left inside and that he would have to operate again, it was too much.

"'Say, doc,' the patient announced, 'I don't mind you operating all the time, even if it is free, but for Heaven's sake can't you put buttons on me this time so you can get at things easier tomorrow?'"

Still Thinking.

"WONDER if the fighting public realizes that there might not have been any Willard-Dempsey fight," said Tom Jones the other day, and when asked to explain, said:

"There's a chap named Wills who has fought Sam Langford many a time and oft. He's sparring in Chicago now and one day Dempsey's manager encountered him and asked him if he wouldn't like to go to Toledo and spar with Dempsey.

"'Ah doanna,' countered Wills. 'You see, I could lick either Dempsey or Willard easily, so I don't know as I'd do for a sparring partner.'

"'Is that so,' gasped Dempsey's manager. 'Well, I tell you what I'll do. I'll take you to Toledo and you can spar with Dempsey for a week. If I find you can lick him, I think I can arrange for you to take his place in the ring.'

"'I'll think it over,' decided Wills, and it is presumed that he is still thinking it over."

"No," exploded the Angeleno, "I've got a couple of aunts at home who can knit better pictures than these."

TIM and Pat had always been such good friends that, when one morning, they passed one another on the street without speaking, a man who knew them both could not repress his surprise and nailing Tim asked him if he and Pat had had a row.

"Sure, an' we have not," protested Tim. "We're better friends than ever."

"But," persisted the questioner, "didn't I see you pass each other this morning with every sign of coolness?"

"Sure," said Tim, and added, "but you see, sor, 'tis this way. Pat and me talked it over. We're both kind of hot headed and we were afraid that some day we might get into an argument that would break our friendship.

"In order that this will never happen, sor, we decided niver to spake to each other again."

MARRIED LIFE OF HELEN AND WARREN

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

Helen Takes A Determined Stand Against The Haughty Insolence Of Her Maid.

STANDING on tiptoes Helen ran an investigating finger along the top shelf. The finger withdrawn was black with dust.

An angry flush flamed her face as she closed the closet door. If she could believe that Nora had forgotten! But she knew it had been deliberate.

No, she must not speak of it. If she did—she would say too much. She must gulp this back, as she had many other things in the last few days.

Since Tuesday the situation had been acute. To have any words with Nora now would precipitate a crisis. And to be without a maid—when it was so hard to get help! The very thought was chastening.

She must put up with Nora's stubbornness, her sullenness—yes, and her impudence. She must put up with anything rather than have her leave.

All morning Helen had struggled against her smoldering rebellion. Nora was going about her work with a sort of silent insolence, which dated from Tuesday when Helen had insisted on her rewashing the ice box.

Turning to leave the room, a perverse impulse made Helen pause at the dressing table and lift up the scarf. Beneath, the polished mahogany was thick with powder and dust that had sifted through.

This was too much! Her indignation overcame her discretion.

"Nora!" from the door she called sharply "Come here a moment."

Plainly anticipating some criticism, Nora answered this summons with an air of surly defiance.

"Nora, you had all morning to give this room a thorough cleaning. You didn't touch the closet shelves—and just look at this!" raising the scarf.

"Must've forgotten it," with an impertinent shrug.

"Then you'd better do it now."

"I'm busy in the kitchen."

"It'll take only a few moments—I'd like you to do it now!"

Without a word Nora stalked out! Was she going for her dust cloth—or not?

A moment's painful suspense. Then hastily bending over her sewing basket Helen was straightening its disorder when Nora thumped back.

There was belligerency in her every movement as she marched over to the dressing table, jerked off the toilet things and dusted beneath the scarf.

The things replaced, she was flouncing out, when again Helen's temperish resentment surmounted her discretion.

"Nora, you're forgetting the closet shelves."

The girl hesitated. Then muttering something under her breath, she flung open the closet door and slapped the cloth over the top shelf.

It was the shrieking insolence of her manner that goaded Helen to a reckless,

"Nora, I'm not going to put up with your attitude. Things have been too unpleasant lately. Now unless you're more agreeable—we can't get along."

"Well, I won't have no trouble gettin' another place. Susie, my friend, gets $50—and she don't do no washing."

"And she has all the privileges you have here? Every Sunday off—and through her work every day by 2 o'clock?"

"She's gettin' $50," evasively.

"Very well, Nora, if you think you can find a place you'd like better—don't hesitate to take it. But if you stay here—you must be more pleasant."

In defiant silence Nora twisted her dust cloth and gazed out the window.

"Now think it over—and do just as you wish. If you decide to go, you don't have to wait until your month's up—you can go tomorrow, today, any time. I can get along—we're perfectly independent."

Again without a word Nora stumped out. Still standing by the work basket Helen rewound a spool. What had she done? If she only had waited until this particular tempest had blown over.

Would she leave? Her silence had been ominous. Then came a faintly cheering thought—all the privileges she had here. And her "friend"—the grocer's delivery man! He might persuade her to stay—for fear of restrictions at some other place on his biweekly call.

That afternoon Helen had planned to do some shopping and stop in at Warren's office, but now she was too anxious and worried to go out. Instead she stayed in and brooded over the harassing situation.

Several times on some pretext, she passed Nora's door. But it was always closed. She might or might not be packing.

"Thought you were coming down to the office today?" was Warren's greeting when he came home at 6 o'clock.

"I didn't get out—some things I had to do here," she evaded.

She did not want to tell him. If Nora should not go, it would only confirm his impression that she could not run the house without repeated clashes with the maid.

However, at dinner he detected her abstractedness.

"You don't look very chipper. What's wrong?"

"Nothing—I'm just tired."

But Nora's surly sullenness was unusually conspicuous. Each time she swung through the pantry door she gave it a vicious push.

"What's the matter with her?" demanded Warren, as she flung out after serving the roast and vegetables.

"Oh, dear, you don't know," Helen's lips quivered. "That's what I've had to put up with for days."

"So that's what's the matter?" buttering his diced potatoes.

"I had it out with her today. I don't know whether she's leaving or not."

"Well, if she's getting on your nerves—sooner she goes the better."

But for Helen this view point was impossible. She could think only with sick dread of the weeks they might be maidless—and then the difficulties of breaking in a new girl.

And she might not be honest, or clean, or careful with the good china. And most of them now were extravagant—Nora was at least economical.

All through dinner and through the rest of the evening she brooded over the possible delinquencies of a new maid—Nora's virtues looming largely.

As always, after long and continued brooding, Helen lost all sense of proportion. She now felt that their future peace and happiness depended upon her keeping Nora.

In bed, long after Warren was asleep, her mind beat against the same sickening problem. If she only had not spoken about the shelves and dressing table. How trivial it now seemed beside the increasing catastrophe of losing Nora.

Morning found her with a throbbing headache. She had had but a few hours' troubled, unrestful sleep.

One of Helen's rigid health rules was to drink two glasses of water before breakfast. And now as she went out to the ice box for the spring water—she passed Nora's half-opened door.

The bureau, always cluttered with knickknacks, was ominously bare! Her trunk was drawn out, and a bulging suitcase lay on the bed.

So she was going! She was already packed.

Warren, hurrying off for an early appointment, did not notice Helen's pale dejection. Having seen him to the elevator, with sick depression she went into her own room to decide what to do.

Should she make any overtures? Should she try to keep her? Her pride balked at that. Even if she did, it should be for only a little while. If she thought she was indispensable, Nora's arrogance would be unendurable.

It was half-past ten when Nora, having finished the dishes and dusted the apartment, came in to announce that she was leaving.

"You said it didn't make no difference when I went—so I'm going now."

"Very well, Nora, I think it's just as well." Her pride demanded that much. "I hope you'll get a good place."

"I've already got one," loftily. "Susie's gettin' married next month and I'm takin' her place. I just as soon have a rest till then."

So she had been intending to leave all along! Somehow the very finality of that lessened Helen's despair.

She wrote Nora a reference, paid her and said she might leave her trunk for several days. She felt that she had been both gracious and dignified.

When the door finally closed after her, Helen was conscious of a curious relaxing sense of relief. At least it was over. She hugged the thought that Nora had intended to go all along. Yesterday's happenings had only hastened it.

She had eaten no breakfast, and now as she went out to the ice box for a glass of milk, the place seemed restfully quiet and peaceful.

It was a bright sunlit kitchen. There was a cheerful look about the blue enameled pans, the porcelain table, the white tiled walls and the neat blue-checked linoleum. Free from Nora's frowning disapproving presence, it was a homey place.

It was her kitchen! For months Nora's sulky discontent had dominated it. But now it was hers—all hers! They would not go out to dinner tonight—she would get dinner herself.

The kitchen cabinet with its blue and white jars seemed alluringly attractive. It would be good to cook again—to do things for herself. Of course they would have to have another maid—but not now. Slipping on an enveloping apron she got out the recipe book. The very cover looked inviting. She would make a cake—a sponge cake, of which Warren was inordinately fond.

As she briskly sifted the flour she found herself humming. What had come over her? Nora had gone and she exepected to be wretched—in the depths of despair. Instead she was glad—glad!

Exuberantly heedless of her floury hands she caught up Pusy Purr-mew from her sunny perch in the open window.

"It's our home—our kitchen! We're not going to have any sulky Noras around! We're going to have a boo'ful time all by ourselves! Aren't we?"

And a vigorous shake brought an assenting "Mew."

Nymphland.

Every little valley has its shade of green,
Every little puddle has its different sheen,
Every little ripple wimpling o'er the lake
Makes a thousand echoes in my mind

Every little flower has its different hue,
Every little cranny has its drop of dew,
Every little birdie trills its different lay,
Everything is happy in the light of day.

Every little sunbeam peeping through the leaves,
Every little shadow on the cottage eaves,
Every silver color golden turns at eve,
Night has lock't up Nymphland, that is why I grieve.

The Vengeance of Nawi-san.

"My God! My God!" cried Densmore hoarsely, when the boy told of the doctors' verdict that Naid was stricken with the plague.

"Alas, Sahib!" interrupted the Hindu, sadly, "If it were only the plague! But the plague she has not—that I can swear to!"

"For God's sake speak," pleaded Densmore. "What is it then—what could be worse. Speak, Akbar, speak!"

"Forgive me, Sahib—forgive what I must relate."

"Go on!" shuddered the man, in an agony of dread.

"When Neeja left the chamber," said the Hindu slowly, "Nawi-sam, master of black arts, cast a spell on the maid. I beheld him, Sahib, with eyes burning as an angry serpent, his arms moving slowly like the arms of the devil fish—crouching stealthily as the cheeta of the jungle! Then he closed her eyes with his fingers, Sahib—closed them softly, gently, as people close the eyes of their dead—"

"Naid—Naid!" moaned Densmore, piteously, "My God, my poor girl!"

"—and as she called out to you, Sahib, called 'Dick, Dick,' like that, he bade her sleep. 'Sleep,' he said, 'sleep and never wake, till you hear the voice of the man you love calling you, Naid! Naid!' And she lay back, and slept, Sahib, and I went mad! I shrieked, and beat upon the screen. And then the beasts who serve the devil man Nawi-sam fell upon me, and I knew no more."

Richard Densmore, crushed, heartsick and hopeless, all vitality fled, lay supinely on the humid earth. Not a sound escaped his dry lips—and thus Nawi-sam found him.

Without warning the door swiftly opened, letting in the doctor, and an instant's flood of blinding daylight. Then the door as quickly closed again.

"Good morning!" greeted the Parsee, with mock politeness, the searching rays of his pocket lamp darting about the chamber, and falling on the gray, distorted face of Densmore.

"Permit me!" he requested, as he seized Densmore under the arms and dragged him nearer to the door. "You can hear better there," he explained, significantly.

Then he flashed his lamp on Akbar. The Hindu sat quiet, stolid, indifferent, his bound hands apparently clasped tightly behind him.

Densmore—who had till now uttered no sound—could restrain himself no longer.

"Tell me—for the love of God!" he choked, "Where is Naid?"

With maddening deliberation Nawi-sam took out his watch, held it to his lamp, and smiled.

"She should be near you, very soon," answered the Parsee, enigmatically.

"Near me, near me?" echoed Densmore, in bewilderment. "What do you mean—what—"

"Patience, Mr. Densmore!" interrupted Nawi-sam. "I will explain. You are now a prisoner in the Cave of Snakes, under Malabar Hill; you have been here some thirty hours. It is now nearly 6 o'clock a.m., Saturday—you were to have married today, I believe, and sailed on the Devanah!"

"For God's sake, Nawi-sam!" begged Densmore, "have mercy—tell me, I pray to you—tell me where Naid is, and what—"

"Listen!" warned the Parsee. "Hear the bells! That's the tolling of the bronze bells at the door to the Tower of Silence—you know it's just above us on the hill. That's why I put you here, by the door—where you can enjoy it. That bell, Richard Densmore, is tolling for the funeral of Naid Raporee-Wyndham. She is to be fed to the birds, true to Parsee custom, at 6 o'clock this morning!"

And as the Parsee paused, there came faintly to Densmore's straining ears the muffled tones of a bell, rung slowly.

"Hear it—Hear it!" gloated Nawi-sam, [illegible], "it's the invitation of the birds to come and eat. And they'll be hungry, too, for no Parsees have died for a week!"

"You lie! You lie!" screamed Densmore, writhing on the ground, tearing impotently at the strong cords that bound him, struggling like a wild beast ensnared. "You lie in your soul—and before God Naid is not dead—I know—you hypnotized her, you monster, and now you come to torture me with this hideous tale! I tell you, Naid is not dead!"

"Of course she's not," agreed Nawi-sam, calmly, searching his pockets for his cigarette case. "But all the Parsees think she is. Only I know that she is living—in a state of suspended animation. She spurned me," he suddenly broke out angrily, "and chose a man not of her people! So I give her body to the birds. The beautiful, warm, virgin body that you thought would be yours—"

But Nawi-sam's words were lost—drowned in the roar of blasphemy that came from Richard Densmore—such oaths as never his tongue had framed before. And when he ceased, from sheer exhaustion, and lay panting, Nawi-sam resumed.

"Only one thing can save Naid's life," he explained calmly, "and that is the sound of your voice, calling her name! You alone could awaken her, by calling her name, 'Naid, Naid,' like that—That is why I put you here. You can hear her funeral bells—hear them tolling now? But she could not hear you, though you shout your life away!

"Naid Naid!" groaned Densmore, his reason tottering.

"That's it—That's what I came down to hear you cry," mocked Nawi-sam, leaning back against the door. "Hear the bell" he exclaimed, "now the vultures are coming—from over the bay—from the dead trees on Malabar Coast—to devour your Naid—to eat your bride on her wedding day!" And he leaned back, and laughed and laughed, long and contemptuously—laughed till the jagged stone in Akbar's freed hands fairly cracked his shapely skull and sent him reeling, to stumble backward into the dark cave, into the midst of the angry hisses.

"Quick, Akbar! Don't be so damned slow—Quick!" stormed Densmore, as the Hindu boy tore at the bonds that held his master.

"This way, Sahib!" panted the running boy, as he guided Densmore, weak and staggering, up the tangled hillside—to the tower. Black forms whirled above them—followed by long shadows that sped swiftly across the ground beneath—and to their ears came the sinister swish of giant wings—and the torturing toll of the bells.

In the madness of it all Densmore's stiffness seemed to fall from him. Like steel springs his muscles now flung him up the hill—through the strange assembly before the vaulted, yawning doors, and down upon his knees beside the premature bier of the girl he loved.

To this day Densmore cannot say just what happened. He only recalls striking down hooded, mysterious monks who opposed him, and calling out wildly to Naid—and that British soldiers, out for an early morning practice march past Malabar Hill, rushed into the melee and helped him, as one white man helps another in a savage land.

And that Naid awoke!

In the tumult none observed a Hindu boy, slipping steadthily away. Down towards the cave of snakes he skulked, and peered cautiously in. Long and curiously he peered; then crept as stealthily away—away from a brown man elegantly dressed, a dead man into whose swollen neck the fangs of short, thick snakes had struck.

. . . . .

From the rail of the Devanah her passengers watched the receding shoreline of Bombay.

"Come on Dick," coaxed a pale but singularly handsome girl, as she slipped her hand into Densmore's. "Akbar has brought up the steamer chairs. Let's talk about New York."

And I'd like to watch the sunbeams
  Drive the silvery mists away.
I've been told its wondrous beauty
  Is a thrilling sight to see,
But I wouldn't care to see it,
  Unless you were there with me.

Once a traveler told a story,
  Of a sight he saw in Spain;
Of the moon that rose in glory,
  Through a gorge of mountain chain—
And he said it touched his heartstrings—
  Such a charming sight to see;
But I wouldn't care to see it,

I would like to be quite famous,
  And I'd like to win renown;
With a high degree of honor,
  In the wealth of gold or crown.
But the plaudits of the people,
  Or the cheers of victory,
Wouldn't carry half the glory,
  Unless you were there with me.

There's an essence in the sunshine—
  There's an atom in the air—
There's a need of every movement

But I wouldn't like the music,

OUTFITTERS OF DEPENDABILITY

Some Good Short Stories from Everywhere.

Compiled for The Times Illustrated Magazine.

Daniel Webster Was Not so Sure.

DANIEL WEBSTER, a statesman of a few generations ago, who represented the New England States, delivered an address in Washington, the capital, that resounded through our States and territories, adding to the fame that he had already won as an orator and a politician.

He found two of his colleagues sitting one day in the depths of discouragement.

"Cheer up," said Webster.

"You can say 'Cheer up,'" was the reply. "You are sure that your name will be handed down, never to be forgotten, beside the names of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin, while ours will rest in oblivion."

"Gentlemen," said Webster, "I am not sure."

"Last week, when I was traveling in the interests of our country, I saw an old man who used to be a neighbor of ours when I was a boy.

"I changed my seat, to be near him to converse, and directed my conversation to the growing crops and to the cattle grazing in the fields, as we traveled, thinking he would surely recognize me.

"I was sure that he was Hiram Atherholt, and gradually he told me his name and where he lived, and puckering my brow, as if trying to recall a distant memory, I asked him if a family by the name of Webster had not once been a neighbor of his?"

"'Oh, yes,' he said.

"Were there not sons in the family?" I asked.

"'Yes,' he said, naming them, but did not mention me.

"I thought there was another one." I added questioningly.

"'No, that's all,' he said.

"The train whistled, the name of the next station had been called; he gathered up his valise, and his cane, then said to me:

"'I do recall another boy, Dan Webster. He had entirely slipped my mind. He left home several years ago and has not been heard from since. I s'pose he has not amounted to anything.'"

MRS. SELFRED, wife of Capt. Selfred, one of the military attaches in London, in a letter to a friend in Los Angeles, describes an amusing episode that occurred in one of the London courts.

Seems a cabby had been brought before the magistrate for using violent and abusive language to a lady

"But she ain't no loidy," he protested fiercely.

"Indeed," said His Worship, "and do you know a lady when you see one?"

"Of course I do," answered the man indignantly. "Why, only the other day, I saw one. She give me a pound note for a shilling fare and walked away.

"'Hy mu'um,' I cries, 'W'at about your choinge?'

"'Don't be a blinkin' old fool,' she says. 'Keep it an' go an' git drunk enough to kiss your mother-in-law.'

"Now, Your Worship, that's what I calls a loidy!"

Easy Money.

NOT so long ago, four witnesses, all under 10 years of age, testified for a little friend in a $20,000 damage suit in Indianapolis. When they called at the office of the County Clerk after the trial, they looked mighty big and important. Acting for all the world like seasoned witnesses they approached the clerk and the 9-year-old spokesman demanded the fees.

"But you'll have to swear to the correctness of your claim," the clerk said.

A puzzled look crossed the brow of the spokesman. "Swear?" he repeated, "Oh, all right," and turned to his companions. "Hey, Bill," he cried, "stand out here and swear. You're the best one in the crowd."

Why Waste Time?

PATRICIA hurt the baby's fingers, for which she received a scolding, and began to cry. After a little time her mother said: "Now, Patricia, go and get a hanky and stop bawling. Your nose needs wiping."

Patricia: "But I'm going to bawl some more, so what's the use of getting a hanky now?"

Walking the Dog.

IN CITY court the other day a woman appeared and demanded a judgment of $10 for her dog, which had been killed by an automobile. Asked on what she based her claim she replied:

"When I paid the dog's license I figured that it entitled him to a certain amount of protection. He has a right to walk across the street."

The judge agreed with her and added, "the joy-walking ordinance does not apply to dogs."

"But what is the joy walking ordinance anyway?"

Wouldn't Forget.

AT THE Orpheum the other night while the news weekly was running, a picture of life in the navy was flashed on the screen. Two women nudged each other.

"My boy's in the navy. I'm so glad I saw this," said one.

"I'm glad I saw it, too," said the other, "especially those scenes where they scrub

"What's especially interesting about that."

"Well, my husband's in the navy too, and now that I know what they have to do, believe me I'll remind him when he gets home."

Something in a Name.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, in writing the story of his life, recalls his first law case. It was in Peekskill. The client was a farmer and he wanted an opinion on certain property rights.

Depew spent a week in looking up the points of law that had bearing on the case and when he had finished charged the modest fee of $5.

"Too much," cried the farmer.

"But it's taken me a whole week to prepare this," protested Depew.

"Don't make no difference," declared the farmer. "I figure $1.50 is all it's worth, and that's all you're going to get."

About a week later the man came to the office again.

"Mr. Depew," he said, "I had some doubts about that opinion of yours so I took it down to New York and showed it to Mr. ——. And what do you think he charged me, just for readin' that opinion of yours and putting his O.K. on it?"

"How much," demanded Depew, all excited.

"Five hundred dollars!"

Really Absurd.

WITH his induction into office, Mayor Snyder was immediately besieged by job seekers. Some were very open about it and others hedged.

"Yet it was obvious what they were after," remarked the Mayor, just as obvious as the young man who was calling on Maggie. When Maggie came down to breakfast next morning, quite late, her mother said severely:

"'Maggie, did that young man kiss you last night?'

"'Now, mother,' said Maggie blushing, 'do you suppose he came over here all the way from Pasadena just to hear me sing?'"

Joke on Funston.

THE late Gen. Funston had a favorite army story. He would tell it only on special occasions, but before the fighting genius died nearly every officer in the army had heard it.

While commanding a regiment during the Spanish-American War Col. Funston had occasion to conduct an inquiry in a near-by city. He went in civilian clothes, with the idea of getting better results. Returning to camp after dark, he wondered how he was going to get by his own sentries, for he had issued strict orders to allow no one to pass.

"Halt, who goes there?" sang a sentry as the colonel was trying to sneak through unnoticed.

"Oh, that's all right; I'm your colonel," said Funston.

"Oh, you are, eh! Haw-haw, that's good!" was the unexpected reply. "Say, mister, go tell that to Sentry No. 2; he's easy."

Cootie Wins Pasture.

SPEAKING of cooties, Col. Orrin H. de Wolfe, assistant adjutant of the Western Department of the Army, has a story that he got while in France in command of a fighting regiment of negroes who never were too busy fighting the Hun to have a joke now and then.

A big top sergeant while under fire felt a cootie gnawing at his back, and although the shells were whizzing by at an alarming rate, and rifle bullets were whining their way toward the rear, the sergeant had to stop and attend to Mr. Cootie. He reached over his shoulder to grapple the new enemy, and as he did so he inclined his head forward. At that minute a Big Bertha whizzed right over his head, barely touching his iron helmet.

The sergeant looked at the captured cootie a minute almost lovingly. He hesitated a minute, then remarked:

"Mr. Cootie, you shuah did save mah life dat time. Now I'se gwine to save youah's. Back you go to your black pasture foh life."

And back it went, right beneath the undershirt.

The Brute.

THE other day a woman entered the office of Lou Guernsey and asked him to be her lawyer in a divorce case. She said she had been married only a day.

"Married only a day, and you want a divorce?" gasped Guernsey incredulously.

"Yes," insisted the woman, and explained:

"When my husband came home from the office I was crying. He asked me why and I said:

"'Oh John, I baked a lovely cake and put it out on the porch for the frosting to dry, and the dog ate it.'

"And John said, 'Don't cry, dear, I know a man who will give us another dog.'"

A New One.

ONE of San Francisco's high army officers felt he wouldn't let June 30 get by without mourning at the bier of alcohol. So into his civies he jumped and stepped out, taking his 18-year-old daughter for a companion.

At one of the well-known beach resorts the officer ran across a brother navy officer, likewise attired.

"Why, hello, John," cried the second, "you steppin' out, too?"

"Oh, yes, got to celebrate, you know."

"Say, you ought to see the young chicken I got with me," confided the second as he nudged a little closer. "Some pip, I'll say, 'n the wife's away, too. But, say, who's that little infant you're steppin' around with? I'd like to meet her myself."

"Oh, that—that's my daughter," exclaimed the first, nervously and a trifle embarrassed.

"Your daughter! Say, that's a good one. I'm going to tell that myself next time. It's got the cousin stall beat a mile."

PRIVATE JONES was accompanied by a sergeant that, to hear him talk, was one of the brainiest men Uncle Sam had hired. One Sunday, in a certain town, a young woman they met on the street asked them if they cared to go to her house and have a cup of coffee. On arriving they were introduced to her mother, who made excuses in regard to her appearance. She remarked, "I'll go and put on the percolator."

The sergeant replied, "Oh, you look all right the way you are."

BILL BUSH of L.A.A.C. was showing an elderly lady the virtues of the car he sells. He made many turns and at the proper times extended his arm as a turning signal.

The old lady watched the preceeding for some time. Then she craned her neck and looked at the sky.

"Mister," she said sternly, tapping Bill on the shoulder, "you just tend to your driving. It don't look like rain no-how, but if it should, I'll let you know."

EVEN doctors make mistakes, as they at times admit, and sometimes they make many of them to the disturbance and at the expense of their patients. An occasional error can be forgiven, but an old practitioner told a class in medicine at the University of California recently that many mistakes could not be forgiven. He illustrated with this story.

"A surgeon called on a patient upon whom he had just operated for appendicitis. 'I'm sorry, John,' he remarked, 'but yesterday when I sewed you up I left my scissors inside, and I'll have to operate again to get them.'

"'That's all right, doc, go ahead,' cheerfully replied the victim.

"The next day the surgeon appeared and very nervously addressed the patient. 'John, I'm awfully sorry, but when I sewed you up yesterday I left some thread inside and it's awfully expensive, but of course it won't cost you a cent.'

"'Oh, that's all right, doc, never mind, go after it. I don't want to keep anything that belongs to you.'

"When the surgeon appeared for the third time the next day and with a red face announced that a pair of pliers had been left inside and that he would have to operate again, it was too much.

"'Say, doc,' the patient announced, 'I don't mind you operating all the time, even if it is free, but for Heaven's sake can't you put buttons on me this time so you can get at things easier tomorrow?'"

Still Thinking.

"WONDER if the fighting public realizes that there might not have been any Willard-Dempsey fight," said Tom Jones the other day, and when asked to explain, said:

"There's a chap named Wills who has fought Sam Langford many a time and oft. He's sparring in Chicago now and one day Dempsey's manager encountered him and asked him if he wouldn't like to go to Toledo and spar with Dempsey.

"'Ah doanna,' countered Wills. 'You see, I could lick either Dempsey or Willard easily, so I don't know as I'd do for a sparring partner.'

"'Is that so,' gasped Dempsey's manager. 'Well, I tell you what I'll do. I'll take you to Toledo and you can spar with Dempsey for a week. If I find you can lick him, I think I can arrange for you to take his place in the ring.'

"'I'll think it over,' decided Wills, and it is presumed that he is still thinking it over."

"You don't seem to be very much interested or very appreciative," said the host finally.

"No," exploded the Angeleno, "I've got a couple of aunts at home who can knit better pictures than these."

Saving It.

TIM and Pat had always been such good friends that, when one morning, they passed one another on the street without speaking, a man who knew them both could not repress his surprise and nailing Tim asked him if he and Pat had had a row.

"Sure, an' we have not," protested Tim. "We're better friends than ever."

"But," persisted the questioner, "didn't I see you pass each other this morning with every sign of coolness?"

"Sure," said Tim, and added, "but you see, sor, 'tis this way. Pat and me talked it over. We're both kind of hot headed and we were afraid that some day we might get into an argument that would break our friendship.

"In order that this will never happen, sor, we decided niver to spake to each other again."

MARRIED LIFE OF HELEN AND WARREN

Helen Takes A Determined Stand Against The Haughty Insolence Of Her Maid.

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

STANDING on tiptoes Helen ran an investigating finger along the top shelf. The finger withdrawn was black with dust.

An angry flush flamed her face as she closed the closet door. If she could believe that Nora had forgotten! But she knew it had been deliberate.

No, she must not speak of it. If she did—she would say too much. She must gulp this back, as she had many other things in the last few days.

Since Tuesday the situation had been acute. To have any words with Nora now would precipitate a crisis. And to be without a maid—when it was so hard to get help! The very thought was chastening.

She must put up with Nora's stubbornness, her sullenness—yes, and her impudence. She must put up with anything rather than have her leave.

All morning Helen had struggled against her smoldering rebellion. Nora was going about her work with a sort of silent insolence, which dated from Tuesday when Helen had insisted on her rewashing the ice box.

Turning to leave the room, a perverse impulse made Helen pause at the dressing table and lift up the scarf. Beneath, the polished mahogany was thick with powder and dust that had sifted through.

This was too much! Her indignation overcame her discretion.

"Nora!" from the door she called sharply "Come here a moment."

Plainly anticipating some criticism, Nora answered this summons with an air of surly defiance.

"Nora, you had all morning to give this room a thorough cleaning. You didn't touch the closet shelves—and just look at this!" raising the scarf.

"Must've forgotten it," with an impertinent shrug.

"Then you'd better do it now."

"I'm busy in the kitchen."

"It'll take only a few moments—I'd like you to do it now!"

Without a word Nora stalked out. Was she going for her dust cloth—or not?

A moment's painful suspense. Then hastily bending over her sewing basket Helen was straightening its disorder when Nora thumped back.

There was belligerency in her every movement as she marched over to the dressing table, jerked off the toilet things and dusted beneath the scarf.

The things replaced, she was flouncing out, when again Helen's temperish resentment surmounted her discretion.

"Nora, you're forgetting the closet shelves."

The girl hesitated. Then muttering something under her breath, she flung open the closet door and slapped the cloth over the top shelf.

It was the shrieking insolence of her manner that goaded Helen to a reckless,

"Nora, I'm not going to put up with your attitude. Things have been too unpleasant lately. Now unless you're more agreeable—we can't get along."

"Well, I won't have no trouble gettin' another place. Susie, my friend, gets $50—and she don't do no washing."

"And she has all the privileges you have here? Every Sunday off—and through her work every day by 2 o'clock?"

"She's gettin' $50," evasively.

"Very well, Nora, if you think you can find a place you'd like better—don't hesitate to take it. But if you stay here—you must be more pleasant."

In defiant silence Nora twisted her dust cloth and gazed out the window.

"Now think it over—and do just as you wish. If you decide to go, you don't have to wait until your month's up—you can go tomorrow, today, any time. I can get along—we're perfectly independent."

Again without a word Nora stumped out. Still standing by the work basket Helen rewound a spool. What had she done? If she only had waited until this particular tempest had blown over.

Would she leave? Her silence had been ominous. Then came a faintly cheering thought—all the privileges she had here. And her "friend"—the grocer's delivery man! He might persuade her to stay—for fear of restrictions at some other place on his biweekly call.

That afternoon Helen had planned to do some shopping and stop in at Warren's office, but now she was too anxious and worried to go out. Instead she stayed in and brooded over the harassing situation.

Several times on some pretext, she passed Nora's door. But it was always closed. She might or might not be packing.

"Thought you were coming down to the office today?" was Warren's greeting when he came home at 6 o'clock.

"I didn't get out—some things I had to do here," she evaded.

She did not want to tell him. If Nora should not go, it would only confirm his impression that she could not run the house without repeated clashes with the maid.

However, at dinner he detected her abstractedness.

"You don't look very chipper. What's wrong?"

"Nothing—I'm just tired."

But Nora's surly sullenness was unusually conspicuous. Each time she swung through the pantry door she gave it a vicious push.

"What's the matter with her?" demanded Warren, as she flung out after serving the roast and vegetables

"Oh, dear, you don't know," Helen's lips quivered. "That's what I've had to put up with for days."

"So that's what's the matter?" buttering his diced potatoes.

"I had it out with her today. I don't know whether she's leaving or not."

"Well, if she's getting on your nerves—sooner she goes the better."

But for Helen this view point was impossible. She could think only with sick dread of the weeks they might be maidless—and then the difficulties of breaking in a new girl.

And she might not be honest, or clean, or careful with the good china. And most of them now were extravagant—Nora was at least economical.

All through dinner and through the rest of the evening she brooded over the possible delinquencies of a new maid—Nora's virtues looming largely.

As always, after long and continued brooding, Helen lost all sense of proportion. She now felt that their future peace and happiness depended upon her keeping Nora.

In bed, long after Warren was asleep, her mind beat against the same sickening problem. If she only had not spoken about the shelves and dressing table. How trivial it now seemed beside the increasing catastrophe of losing Nora.

Morning found her with a throbbing headache. She had had but a few hours' troubled, unrestful sleep.

One of Helen's rigid health rules was to drink two glasses of water before breakfast. And now as she went out to the ice box for the spring water—she passed Nora's half-opened door.

The bureau, always cluttered with knickknacks, was ominously bare! Her trunk was drawn out, and a bulging suitcase lay on the bed.

So she was going! She was already packed.

Warren, hurrying off for an early appointment, did not notice Helen's pale dejection. Having seen him to the elevator, with sick depression she went into her own room to decide what to do.

Should she make any overtures? Should she try to keep her? Her pride balked at that. Even if she did, it should be for only a little while. If she thought she was indispensable, Nora's arrogance would be unendurable.

It was half-past ten when Nora, having finished the dishes and dusted the apartment, came in to announce that she was leaving.

"You said it didn't make no difference when I went—so I'm going now."

"Very well, Nora, I think it's just as well," Her pride demanded that much. "I hope you'll get a good place."

"I've already got one," loftily. "Susie's gettin' married next month and I'm takin' her place. I just as soon have a rest till then."

So she had been intending to leave all along! Somehow the very finality of that lessened Helen's despair.

She wrote Nora a reference, paid her and said she might leave her trunk for several days. She felt that she had been both gracious and dignified.

When the door finally closed after her, Helen was conscious of a curious relaxing sense of relief. At least it was over. She hugged the thought that Nora had intended to go all along. Yesterday's happenings had only hastened it.

She had eaten no breakfast, and now as she went out to the ice box for a glass of milk, the place seemed restfully quiet and peaceful.

It was a bright sunlit kitchen. There was a cheerful look about the blue enameled pans, the porcelain table, the white tiled walls and the neat blue-checked linoleum. Free from Nora's frowning disapproving presence, it was a homey place.

It was her kitchen! For months Nora's sulky discontent had dominated it. But now it was hers—all hers! They would not go out to dinner tonight—she would get dinner herself.

The kitchen cabinet with its blue and white jars seemed alluringly attractive. It would be good to cook again—to do things for herself. Of course they would have to have another maid—but not now. Slipping on an enveloping apron she got out the recipe book. The very cover looked inviting. She would make a cake—a sponge cake, of which Warren was inordinately fond.

As she briskly sifted the flour she found herself humming. What had come over her? Nora had gone and she exepected to be wretched—in the depths of despair. Instead she was glad—glad!

Exuberantly heedless of her floury hands she caught up Pusy Purr-mew from her sunny perch in the open window.

"It's our home—our kitchen! We're not going to have any sulky Noras around! We're going to have a boo'ful time all by ourselves! Aren't we?"

And a vigorous shake brought an assenting "Mew."

Nymphland.

Every little valley has its shade of green,
Every little puddle has its different sheen,
Every little ripple wimpling o'er the lake
Makes a thousand echoes in my mind awake.

Every little flower has its different hue,
Every little cranny has its drop of dew,
Every little birdie trills its different lay,
Everything is happy in the light of day.

Every little sunbeam peeping through the leaves,
Every little shadow on the cottage eaves,
Every silver color golden turns at eve,
Night has lock't up Nymphland, that is why I grieve.

THE VENGEANCE OF NAWI-SAM.

BY FREDERICK SIMPICH

III.

"SPAWN of Satan!" muttered Akbar, angrily, as the Parsee disappeared inside the wide entrance to Naid's home. "What brings you here—where dwells one who spurns you with her whole pure soul! What brings you here, at this dark hour?"

He was no common stupid coolie, this Hindu boy, whose sole aim in life at this moment was to find the missing American. From one of Bombay's mission schools he had come, months before Densmore's arrival, well versed in English and with some mechanical training. Through the Consul the American engineer had found him and taken him on as chauffeur. And during the months Densmore had spent in Bombay, busy with his big contract, a strong attachment had sprung up between him and the shrewd bright-eyed brown son of the East.

Like all Indian employees, too, Akbar knew his master's private affairs: he knew of Densmore's engagement to Naid, and he had heard the bazaar gossip—that the Parsee doctor also loved the beautiful Eurasian girl.

Hence the sudden appearance of Nawi-sam, whom Akbar knew to be an enemy of Densmore's, only increased the boy's anxiety—and added to his determination to fathom the mysterious disappearance of his beloved Sahib.

"The Parsee serpent may know," mused the boy, shrewdly. "I may learn something by watching him."

From where he crouched, near the corner of the great house, Akbar had a view of its front and side—and noted a beam of light slanting out from below a partially drawn curtain in a window on the ground floor. Determined to see what was going on inside, he stealthily made his way along the side wall, keeping in its black shadow. He quickly reached the window, and peered in.

Naid laid motionless on a couch, old Neeja bending anxiously over her. There stood Nawi-sam, too, one hand on the girl's wrist—his watch in his other hand—apparently counting her pulse.

Presently their voices, speaking in Hindustani, came audibly to Akbar.

"Yes, Mother Neeja," the boy heard the Parsee say, "I've already telephoned for the British doctor—he is coming now. But Ramsay can only confirm my diagnosis—it is the pest. Naid must die."

Akbar could hear the old woman moaning.

"Courage, mother!" sootned the Parsee. "It is the will of the gods. Did I not warn you—long ago—against their wrath? Did I not predict that they should smite the house of Darjee Muttra, should you permit a daughter of the devout Parsees to give her body to the overseas heathen!"

Akbar, strain his ears as he would, could not catch the muttered reply of the grief-stricken old woman.

The purr of a motor car broke the silence of the night, and Akbar pressed close against the wall to hide as its bright lights swept quickly across the jungle-grown yard. Turning into the driveway, the car swung up under the porte-cochere and stopped. A moment later Akbar, agam peering through the window, saw Dr. Ramsay enter the room.

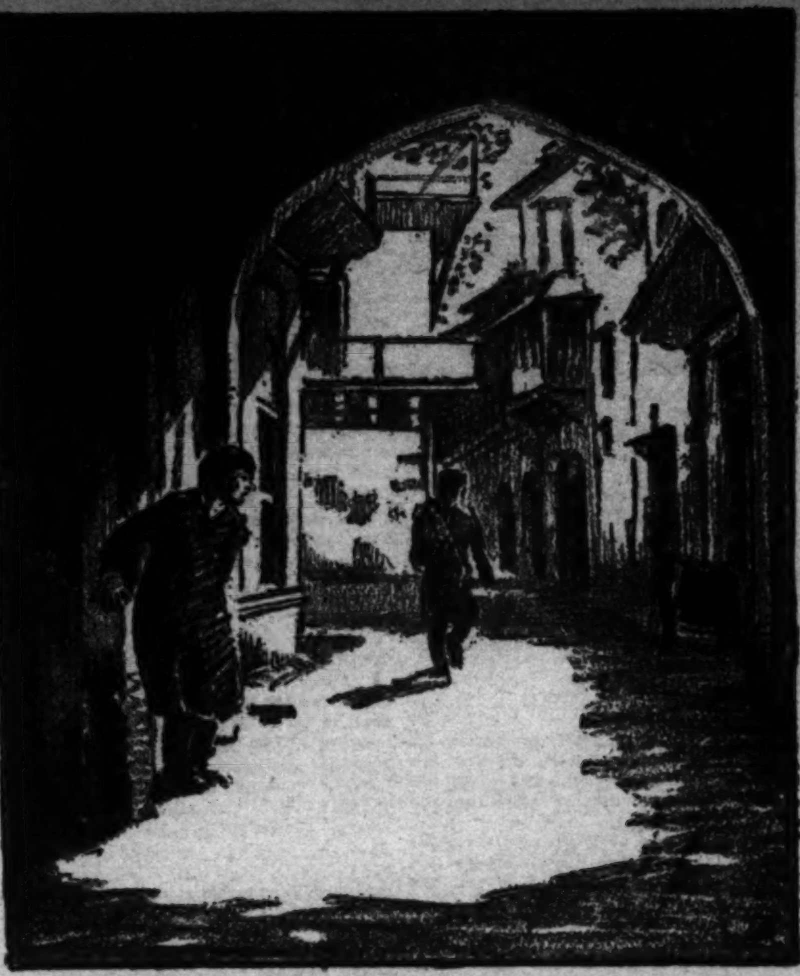
After a curt greeting the English doctor stooped over and made a brief examination of Nawi-sam's patient. Then the two physicians withdrew to the hallway, conversing in low tones. A moment later the front screen doors slammed, and Akbar heard the Englishman's car drive away.

"He agrees," the boy heard Nawi-sam say to old Neeja. "It is the plague."

Again the old woman, kneeling beside the couch, murmured incoherently.

Akbar, stunned by the horrible thought that the woman his Sahib loved was smitten by plague, stood trembling, his eyes fixed on Naid's pale face. Suddenly he beheld the girl open her eys, and stir slightly. In that moment, too, the watchful Nawi-sam sprang forward, seizing old Neeja roughly by the shoulders. It seemed as if this were the minute he had been waiting for.

"Neeja!" he commanded sharply, "Go to the holy chamber—light the incense—and apprise the gods of the coming of a soul!" And, half carrying the old woman he forced her from the room.



Akbar pressed close against the wall to hide.

Nawi-sam returned quickly to Naid's side, watching her closely. "I plan all things well," Akbar heard him mutter. "This is bridge night at the club—when Ramsay is always drunk. Plague!" he sneered. "Had I suggested measles, he would have agreed!"

For several minutes Nawi-sam waited, keeping his eyes fixed sharply on Naid. "After the hypo, the body weakens—but the mind is alert," the boy heard him say.

Suddenly Naid stirred, and sat up.

"Neeja," Akbar heard her call; then, perceiving Nawi-sam, she gave a start of fright. "What—what is it—Dick! Oh Dick!" There was terror unspeakable in her voice. Dread and horror of the Parsee monster—anguish and despair.

Fearing he knew not what—fascinated—dreading the climax of this weird drama being played out before his eyes, Akbar pressed his face against the screen and gazed, breathless, trembling.

"Oh—if the Sahib was only here—he would save her! He would save her!" thought the boy as he beheld the girl sink back upon the couch, strangely obedient to the darting, snakelike eyes of the sinister Parsee.

What followed was over in an instant. In vain Akbar tried to cry out—to scream. But he could only stand there staring—transfixed with rage and horror—his tongue cleaving to the roof of his mouth—as in some frightful nightmare. It was only when Nawi-sam called Densmore's name aloud, twice, thrice, that the spell fallen upon Akbar was broken. Then with a snarl of rage, he threw himself forward, tearing impotently at the wire screen with his nervous fingers.

"Stop! Monster—Fiend of Hell!" he shrieked. "Stop your black magic!" Heedless of where he was, forgetting all save that Naid Raporee-Wyndham, promised wife of his beloved Sahib, lay helpless in the clutch of the inhuman Parsee, he fought desperately to tear out the screen and break into the chamber.

At the first hoarse cry from Akbar, Nawi-sam whirled with lightning rapidity, the blue steel of an automatic flashing dully in his hand—and Akbar went down, flat on his face, on the wet, soggy turf. But it was not Nawi-sam's bullet that felled him. It was a blow from behind—the whack of a club—the same club that had dropped Densmore earlier in the evening. The three dacoits, hired thugs of Nawi-sam, having disposed of the American and returned to meet the Parsee by appointment in the shadowy park of Neeja's home, arrived just in time to discover the Hindu boy in his furious efforts to break through the window.

Akbar was quickly dragged back beneath the ferns, securely tied, and a chloroform pad placed over his face.

After a moment Nawi-sam came cautiously out.

One of the dacoits hailed him softly, and then went forward.

Nawi-sam gave the man a curt, whispered order, and returned quickly to Naid's chamber.

IV.

The sickening reek of a stale anesthetic poisoned the foul air as Densmore slowly opened his eyes to the dim light.

His head throbbed; his wrists and ankles smarted with pain from the chafing cords that bound them, and his jaws ached from the crude gag wedged between his teeth.

From his extreme stiffness of muscle Densmore became vaguely conscious that he must have lain for long hours on the damp dirt floor of the unknown chamber wherein he now found himself. Seeking to ease his cramped body he rolled awkwardly over, but at his very first movement the silence of his prison was broken by a chorus of angry hisses—coming from the darker space behind him. Dreading the menace of the unseen, the man struggled to drag himself nearer to the faint light which seemed to filter in through the narrow cracks of what appeared to be a closed door. But securely tied as he was, trussed up like a dressed fowl, his efforts to crawl were fruitless—and he fell forward, striking his face on the edge of a sharp stone.

With a groan of pain he lay still again, curiously alert to the continuous, ominous hissing sounds. But the sharp blow in the face had somewhat aroused his torpid mental faculties, and slowly his normal wits were returning.

"Where am I? What has happened?" Persistently these questions recurred. But try as he would, he could recall no more than that he had left Naid, and started afoot for the Taj-Mahal.

Wracking his brain thus, straining his eyes to discern something of his darkened surroundings, Densmore made a startling discovery. He was not alone in his mysterious chamber! Lying on its opposite side, maybe twenty feet from him, was another human—whether dead or alive the American knew not.

And as his eyes gradually grew accustomed to the shadowy place, something in the outlines of the other body—grotesquely huddled up as it was—struck Densmore as oddly familiar. For some minutes he lay there, peering at his silent neighbor, calmly curious, striving to remember. Then all at once the truth flashed on him—why hadn't he recognized his companion sooner!

"Good Lord!" he tried to cry, in astonishment, biting desperately at his gag. "It's Akbar!"

The pain in his jaws, as he pressed his teeth against the gag, was excruciating. With a strangled oath he flopped clumsily on his side, scraping his face roughly against the earth, seeking to dislodge the block that gagged him. Heedless of the pain, he rubbed his mouth roughly against the earth till blood flowed from the scratches in his lips. In the dark he bumped his head against the same stone that had cut his face when he fell—but now he made good use of it. By shaking his head up and down, pounding the gag upon the stone's sharp narrow edge, he at last loosened the obstruction, and finally dislodged it entirely. But his jaws had been pried apart so long that they were numb and half paralyzed. It was some minutes before he could close his mouth—and then only in agony. Then he cried out loudly, seeking to arouse Akbar.

But the oddly huddled figure of the boy lay quiet—there was no answer.

Only the mad hisses replied to Densmore's hoarse call.

He must have shouted aloud, entreating, then threatening, maybe twenty times before a low groan came from across the chamber.

"Thank God he's alive!" exclaimed Densmore, fervently.

"Hurray there, Akbar! Wake up—it's me—Densmore!" he shouted.

"Akbar! Akbar!" he called again, when no response had come.

Then the boy stirred, and groaned again. "Sahib" he appealed, huskily. "Sahib?"

"Yes—Akbar—here I am!"

"Sahib—help me—I am bound!"

"So am I, boy," explained Densmore; but there was a note of hope in his voice. Surely between them they could find some way of escape! "Where are we, and what's happened?" he questioned, anxiously.

"I hear the serpents, Sahib. We must be somewhere along the coast—maybe in the Malabar caves," suggested Akbar—whose wits were already busy.

"Are you hurt?" queried the man.

"My head aches—where Nawi-sam's men hit me. Are you injured, Sahib?" pleaded the boy.

"Nawi-sam!" snapped Densmore, ignoring the boy's query. "Is this his dirty work?"

"Of course," asserted the Hindu, calmly, as he dragged himself up into a sitting posture, and began fumbling at the cords that bound his wrists.

"For Heaven's sake, go on and talk—if you know what's been happening. What did they get you for—what were you doing?"

"I was seeking the Sahib."

"Well, where?" demanded Densmore, irritated.

"At the home of the maid, Naid. It was last night—maybe the night before—it seems long ago."

"Go on—Go on," ordered the man, impatiently. "You were at Miss Wyndham's hunting me—was Nawi-sam there?"

"Yes, Sahib," reluctantly admitted the boy, still tampering with his bonds. "But let us first find some way to escape; then I will tell the Sahib everything."

"You tell me right here—now—I want the whole story!" commanded Densmore, threateningly.

"The Sahib has spoken," apologized the Hindu, evenly.

And, still twisting carefully at his bonds, Akbar related, clearly and in detail, all that transpired after Nawi-sam surprised him as he sought Densmore on the night of his disappearance.

THE LIFE STORY OF A MOLOKAN GIRL.

BY CLARA VOSTROVSKY WINLOW.

I MET Manya several months ago but it was only last week, just before she moved North, that she told me the story of her life.

Manya was for many years a member of the Los Angeles Russian colony spreading over Utah, Gless, Clarence, Pecan and other streets in Boyle Heights, east of the river. This is a colony of religious persons who suffered great persecutions in Russia because of their beliefs. We call them Molokans, which means milk drinkers, but among themselves they are known as Holy Jumpers. They come from the Caucasus Mountains. As they are a particular sect from a particular part of Russia, it naturally follows that what applies to them does not necessarily apply to Russians in general. This is especially true of many of their customs and of their outlook on life.

There is much that is picturesque in this colony, and strangers to Los Angeles generally pay it a visit. They find hosts of dirty, tow-headed children, and catch glimpses of pleasant-faced brown-bearded, brown-haired men, and even more glimpses of foreign and spotlessly clean-looking women, who generally dress in immaculate white, with a long, very wide skirt, a loose blouse, and a head covering of lace or wool. Sometimes an apron is seen, edged with lace or embroidery. Wash day comes frequently and is a big affair in this district. Fashion never changes, despite the rebellion of the younger generation at the fact.

Manya is a typical Russian in appearance. She is a blonde, of medium height, and rather slender. There is something very attractive about her face; perhaps it lies in the unadulterated good-nature that shines out of her blue-gray eyes and lingers about her firm, smiling lips. The simplicity of her story and its confinement largely to the telling of mere facts, is characteristic of these people's mode of thought. It forms an interesting contrast to the overflow of imagination and memory of feeling found in the stories of Russian Jewish immigrants.

Manya's Own Story of Her Life in Russia.

I WAS brought up in a little village in the Caucasus Mountains, where our people were exiled because of their religion. There were many such villages there, the nearest to us being three miles away. The houses were very near together, with little ground around, but most of the people owned farms some distance away. It was a hard life and some of the people were very poor. We had one neighbor to whom we gave meat and soup daily; we could not see her go hungry.

Both men and women, boys and girls, worked on the farms, but I had other work. I was a goose girl, and sometimes had as many as seventy geese to tend. My sister who was a little older than I, did not work on the farm either; instead she helped my mother in the home. There was always much to do, for our family consisted of twenty persons, including grandparents, father, mother, sister, married brothers and their children and myself. Yet our house was a very little one. We were taught from childhood never to be idle. Both sister and I could hardly yet hold a needle, when in the winter we had our set sewing, knitting and crocheting to do.

Although herding geese is slow, lazy work, it is tiresome and stupid, and I did not like it except at the beginning of spring when the grass just begins to show and all of the goose girls would meet together with our goslings. Then we played. But when the geese grew older, we each had to herd her own flock. When I complained to my mother, she would say: "Never mind; just tend to your geese, and when you marry, you will have lots of down for your pillows and feather beds."

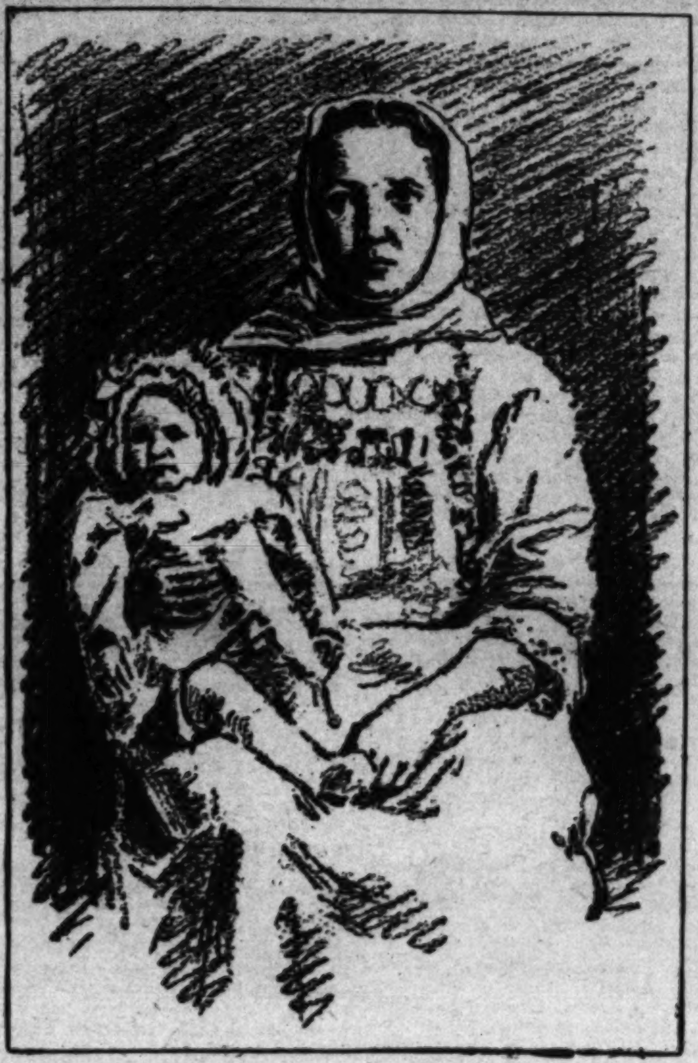
On the first day of real winter, most of the geese were killed and pickled in salt or hung up in an outside shed where they would freeze and so stay good until wanted. We ate all our own geese; it was almost the only meat we had.

Community Life Made Work a Pleasure and Recreation.

WHEN we decided to kill our geese, we would invite all of the older girls of the neighborhood over to help. Then we would prepare a lunch and a big supper, with cabbage soup and other things, for them. We had fun, for the work of picking and drawing the geese went fast, and we sang and told stories. Then we would go in turn to somebody else's house to help.

We used to come around like that also in the spring when everybody plastered his house anew. There were many jokes. Sometimes a mischievous girl would slip out, get some mud, and slyly drop it on some girl's hands. Then she would ask the latter sternly if she expected to do clean work when her hands were so dirty.

We never had any boys come out at such times or at any other times. Our parents forbade it. A girl now and then would meet a boy outside but if her father learned of it she would receive a beating, no matter what her age. All the parents were very strict about this, but some more than others.



The spotlessly clean women in immaculate white, with a head covering of lace or wool.

I knew one family where they let their daughter's young man come, but he always sneaked in the back way after dark so that no one would see him.

Marriages Made by Parents are Not Always Successful.

WHEN my sister came to be married she had never seen her husband. All the arrangements were made by his parents and our parents. It was a good match for her but some of the marriages like that in our village were very unhappy, especially since the Holy Jumpers do not believe in divorce.

We came to America shortly after, first going to Vladivostok, in Siberia, and then straight to Los Angeles where some of the Holy Jumpers were already settled. We liked it here from the beginning, for in our village a person could only earn from 25 to 60 cents a day; and here it was so much more. I went to school until I was 15 and so learned American. I would have liked to have gone longer, but my mother would not let me. Our parents do not like our going to school too long for fear it will take us from our religion.

I had rather a sweet voice for singing and one of the teachers had a friend who offered to give me singing lessons for nothing. But my mother explained to her when she came to ask, that it couldn't be, that if God had given me a pleasing voice it must be used only for singing the songs of our faith. "If my daughter goes to learn singing, she may grow away from the religion and thus lose her soul." The teacher was disappointed but nothing could change my mother. Our people are very firm.

After I left school, I worked in a factory. Once I had an opportunity to get a position in a department store, but my mother was quite angry with me for wanting to take it. She feared that it would change me as it had the daughter of one of our neighbors who gave up our religion and married an Irish boy with whom she did not live happily.

All our people really care for is the Bible. My father would study it every night. He had taught himself to read in order to know it but he never read anything else. There is hardly a Molokan family that has not a big Bible in the house.

Just One Little Fling Into the American Ways of Life.

I DO not know how I ever got permission—I think it was during some sickness in the family, when we needed money—but for a while I worked for a nice American lady, and wore American clothes. It was not for long. My mother and father did not like my being away for there was much gossip about it, and they told me I must come home. When I did, the elders of our church called on me and talked to me about how terribly our relatives and friends had suffered in Russia for their belief. They asked me to consider this and then see if the part required from me was not very little. I felt ashamed and went back to the Old Country clothes.

Although I changed my dress for a while, I never did the things that some of the girls do. I never dressed in silks and satins and I never went to dance halls. Some of our young women and young men, too, never go to church. Many mothers and daughters have big quarrels about these things. The young people are no longer as they should be. It is very sad.

My mother—wrongly, I think—blamed the schools partly. She would say that it started the children badly by taking away their respect for old ways and giving them nothing really helpful with the new. But sometimes I have thought that the girls and boys break away because the parents are too strict with them and do not understand them.

I first saw my husband in the church, which was not far from our first house on Clarence street. We had been in Los Angeles over a year, when one day I asked a girl I knew, who was a Russian but belonged to the Russian Orthodox Church, to attend our services with me. She came and as we stood near the door, one of the older men jumped into the air—as often happens with us—threw up his arms, and continuing to jump, swung one arm back and forth above his head. The girl had never seen any one act so and was frightened. She thought that he was pointing at her because she did not belong to the church and meant to attack her. I did not understand and whispered to her not to laugh, that it was the Holy Spirit. She said that she didn't want to laugh, that she was afraid.

Love Finds a Way With the Young the World Over.

JUST then I noticed some one on the other side watching us. It was a young man and as he caught my eye, he smiled, but at once became serious and looked away. At the close of the meeting, when my acquaintance had slipped away, and everybody was kissing everybody else, he came near and spoke to me. I don't know what I answered, but after that I met him several times and he always stopped to say something. Our parents were not able to be so strict with us here, so it was possible to meet him.

Then one day he asked me if he could come himself, since he had no parents or relatives here, to ask my parents if he could marry me. I said yes, and that night told my mother.

It was on a Friday night that he came and after I had opened the door for him, I left the room. However, I heard my parents ask him all that they wanted to know! Who his parents were, their family names, whether he belonged to the church, and would promise to attend and let me attend, and other things.

"Have you enough to get married?" was a question from my father.

"I am not rich," he answered, "but I have $200 for the wedding."

"We want only enough for the church dinner," my mother remarked kindly.

Then three elders of the church and some of their relatives and some of my girl friends came over. The elders questioned us separately, and asked each if we loved the other.

I then handed my betrothed a scarf of silk, and he gave me $5 for it.

"How much do you give for the table?" asked my mother.

He laid down $25.

Then we kissed, and after being blessed, sat down to the betrothal feast.

A few days after, he went with me to buy my wedding dress, for which he paid. My mother used the $25 which John had put on the table to buy me other nice dresses so that I would not need any for a year.

There is no Selling of Girls Among the Molokans.

SOMETIMES the Americans say that the Molokans, as they call us, sell their daughters. This is not so. The money that the young man leaves with the parents is all given back to the bride, in clothing or other things, as it was in my case.

For a week girls would come every night to my house to help mother and me sew. And then on a Sunday afternoon, after confession, we were married in the church.

As soon as the ceremony was over, the girls surrounded me and rolled up my hair, which was hanging down my back in a braid, covered it with a cap made with beads and lace, and no one could any longer take me for a girl.

Then came as big a feast as my husband could afford, after which a collection was taken up for us to start housekeeping on.

Since we could not go to live with my husband's people, as is customary, we lived with my parents. It was a help to them, for although my mother, like most of the women of the colony, worked by the day, as did my father, they were getting old.

I was happy the first few months as I am happy now, but I wanted my husband to

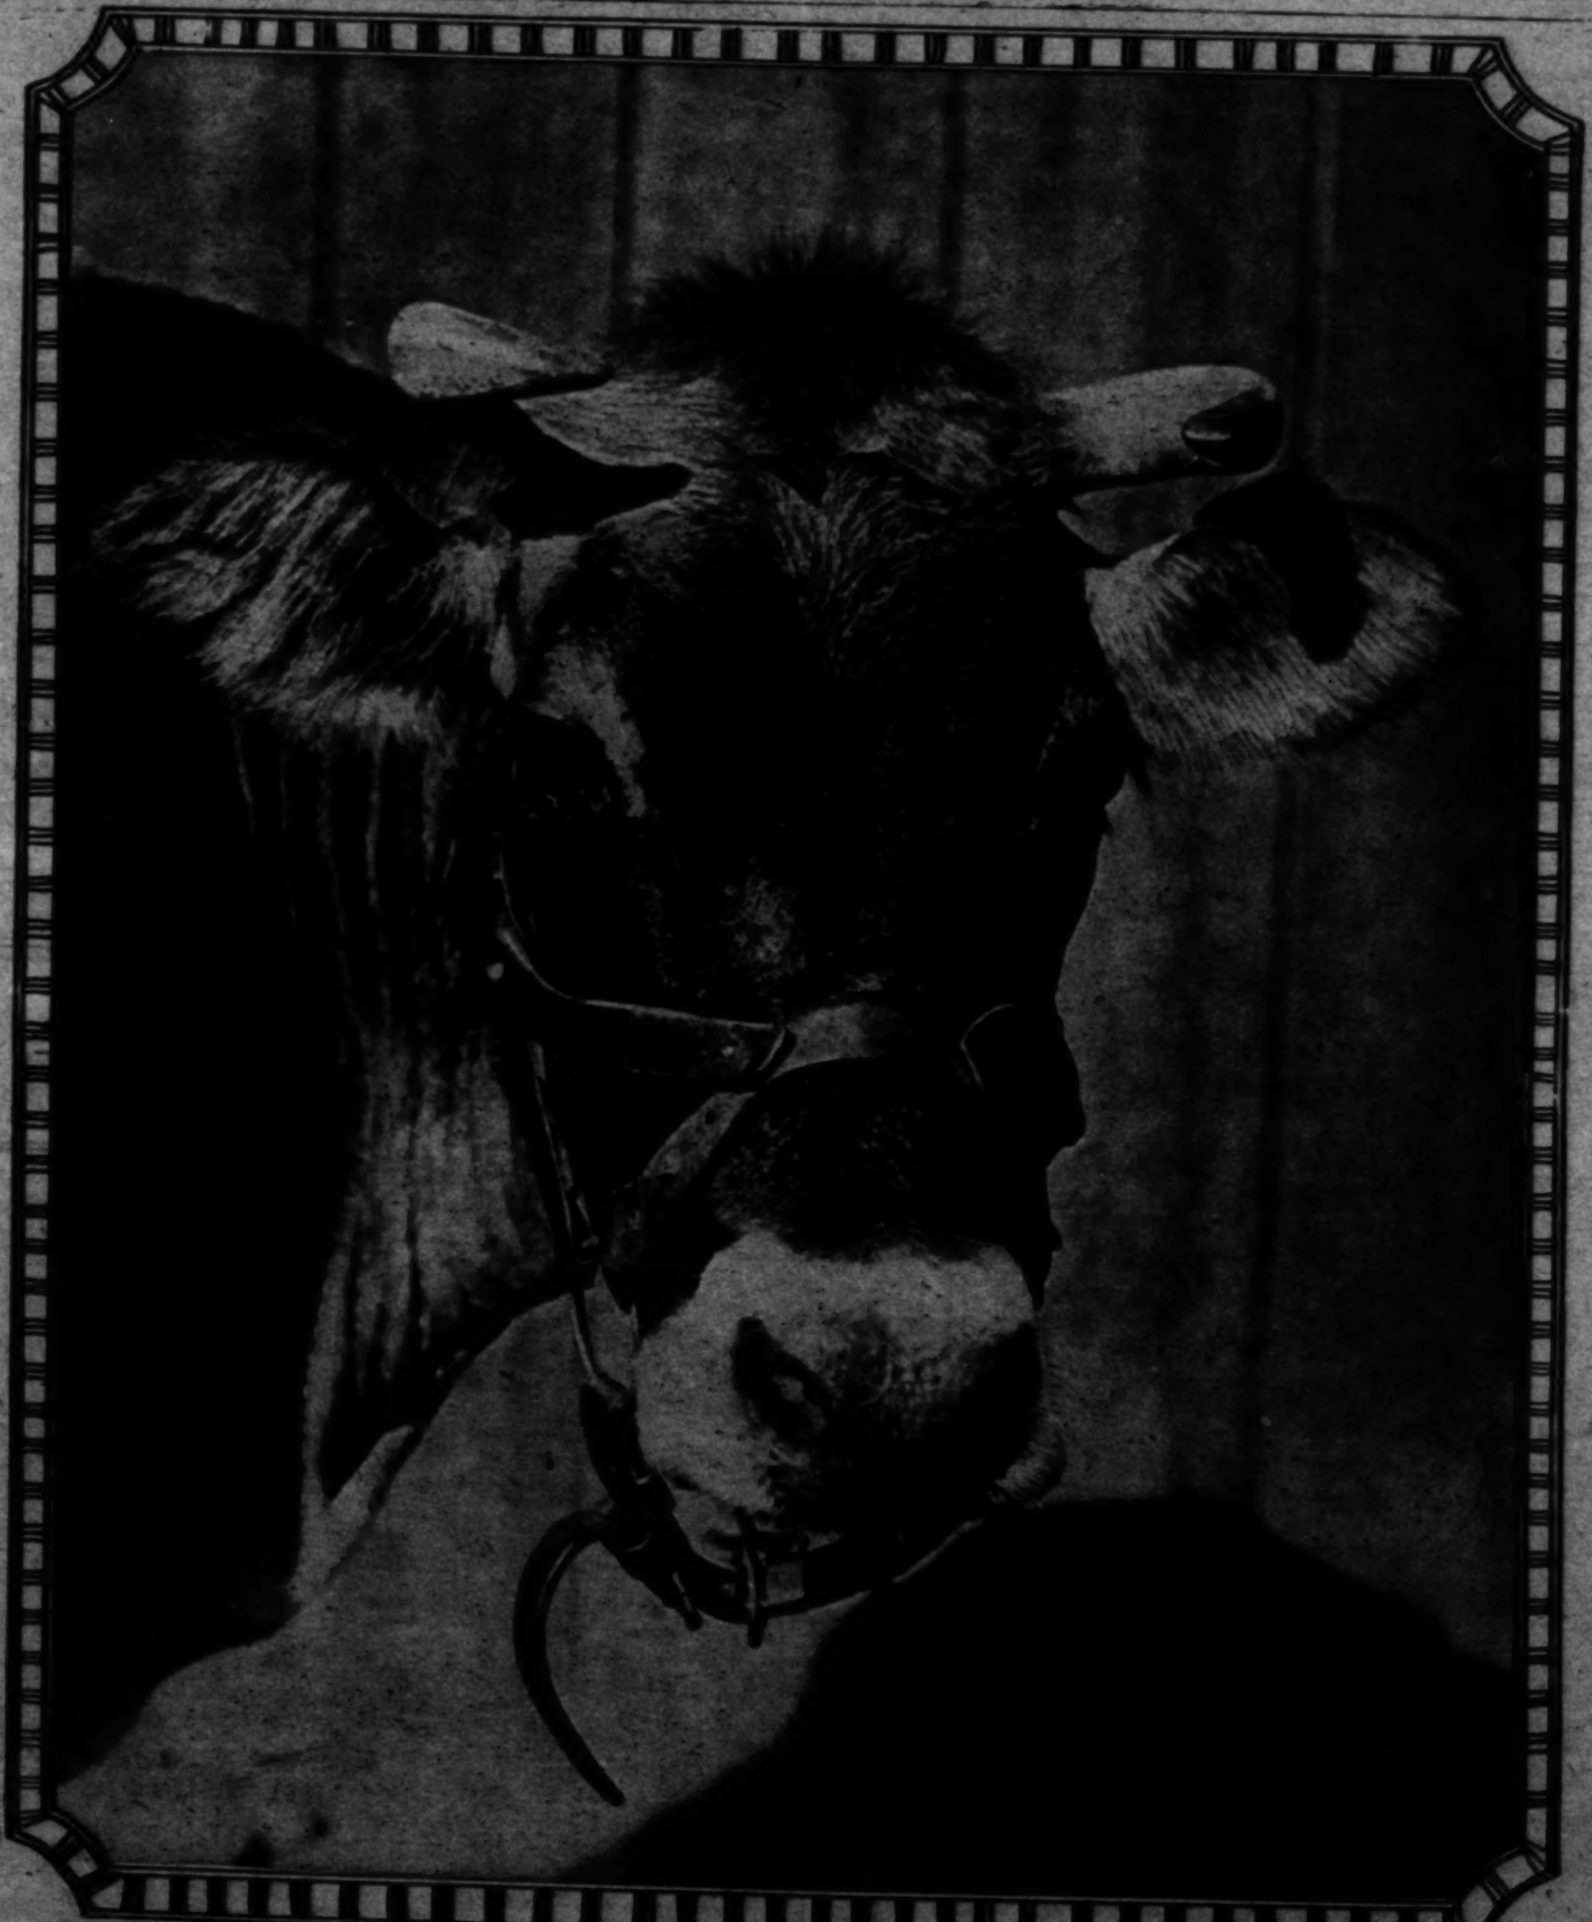
PROGRESS AND PRODUCTION

SUNDAY MORNING, AUGUST 17, 1919.



PROHIBITION AND THE FARM HAND

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.

ALL who will may aid in the progress of plant improvement and the acquisition of new varieties. Nearly all the improved forms of plants have been obtained through selection of the best, and propagation either by seeds or cuttings. But all new varieties are brought into being through hybridization or cross-breeding. This is done by crossing individuals of different varieties in the same species or by crossing two distinct species, generally the latter. Rarely does one obtain a cross between different genera. (Genera is the first name of a plant; species is the last name.) The writer has made a few such and so has Fred Howard and one or two other local cranks.

In order to cross two plants it is simply necessary to place pollen from one flower on the stigma of another. What's a stigma, you say? It is the organ in the center of each flower. In a few flowers there are more than one, in many it is divided or compound, but in the majority of plants it is simple or undivided, or nearly so. The pollen is on the stamens and you can find the stamens by looking for the pollen; for even small children do that trick. Put pollen on the top of the stigma and no doubt you will succeed in crossing the more common plants. In order to make sure of the cross we generally take away the pollen-bearing organs of the flower we wish to impregnate before the pollen is free enough to fall or blow about. In this way we are then sure the plant cannot pollenize itself. It is also best to cover the fertilized plant with a paper sack and tie it tightly about the mouth so other pollen cannot reach it, by bees or other agencies. Be careful not to remove the stigma with the stamens.

Let us briefly describe the essential organs, for the petals or showy parts of the flower amount to nothing in the life process. The pistil or group of pistils occupies the very center of the flower. (In lilies the three pistils are far apart; also in some other flowers.) Pistils have three parts. At the base is the ovary, where the seeds eventually develop. Above this is usually a stalk, known to botanists as a style and at the top of the style is the stigma, usually a knob-like structure, and on this the pollen must be placed. The stamens may be few or many, rarely less than three. Like the pistil, the stamen has three parts. It has a thread-like or slender stalk, known as a filament and on top of this is the anther, often nicely balanced and in this anther is the pollen, which sheds as soon as it becomes powdery. Unless this pollen gets on the stigma no seed can be formed, so that control is in your hands.

Save resultant seeds and get new sorts.

Easily Cultivated Orchids.

In little conservatories built as wings to houses, in enclosed bay windows, and similar places the writer often sees the mistress of the house attempting to grow orchids of the better class. In this line there is nothing better than the lycastes, ranging in native habitat from Southern Mexico to Brazil. Anyone who will keep the winter night temperature from going below 45 deg. may grow lycastes. Though they are epiphytes the best success is had by growing them in pots. The drainage must be perfect so that pots should be filled half full of broken pots and on top use a soil of three-fourths good leaf mold and one-fourth finely chopped sphagnum moss and add a little silver or white sand. Keep moist at all times. Lycastes have the handsomest of flowers and L. Skinneri [illegible] best in Los Angeles.

Tenacity of Life.

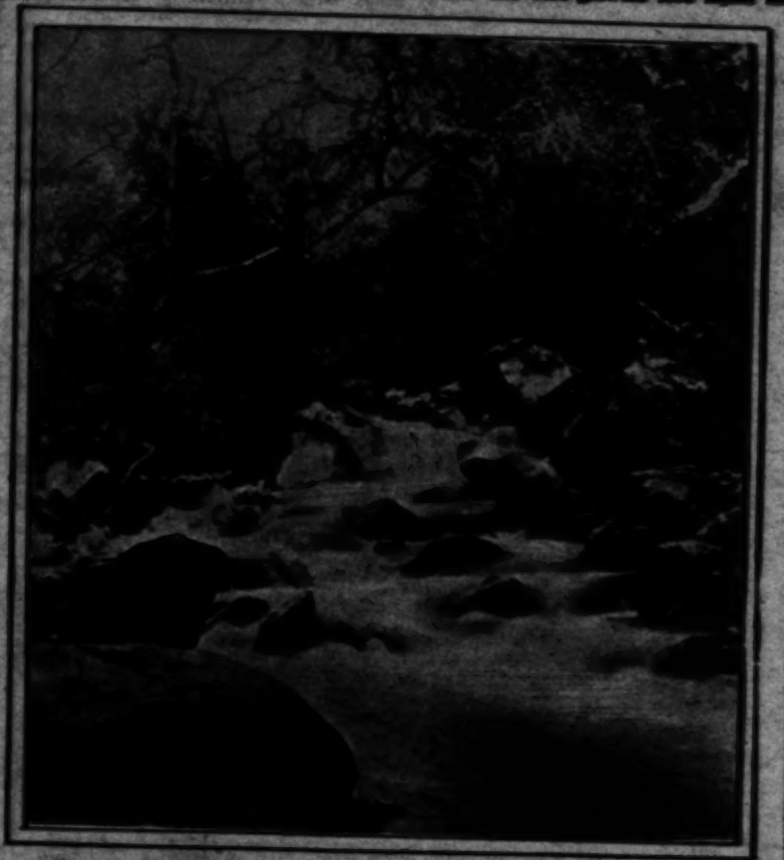
A tree of Pinus sylvestris, known as the Scotch pine, was girdled when about three inches in diameter by removing the bark for a space of six inches. Above the girdled portion, which was as dry as a Patent Office report, the tree continued to grow for many years, or until cut down, each year making new layers of wood and perfecting seeds. The top was in perfect health, but as it was evident a heavy wind would snap the tree off at the "neck," it was cut down and preserved as a curio. It was two inches in diameter at the girdle and seven and one-fourth inches above, the latter alive and growing. This action is not uncommon in resinous trees. This precious wood grown by downward flow of sap, the growth stopping where the cambium had been removed. Resinous wood dries but slowly and so the pores in the wood supplied life for eleven years after girdling.

The American Papaw.

Asimina triloba is the name of the American papaw; the latter name was given because of a fancied resemblance in the fruit to that of the tropical papaw, or papaya, which may be seen in fruit at all times in the Lincoln Park conservatory, Los Angeles. Our papaw grows wild in the woods from New York and Michigan south to Florida and west to Texas. It is not hardy along the northern line of the United States and thrives best in the southern half of the Mississippi Valley. In California it should have deep, rich, moist soil in a shaded position, or at the foot of steep hills sloping to the north. A few persons are fond of the fruit, many children will eat it. It is closely allied to the tropical custard apple or cherimoya.

Our Illustrations.

It is still vacation time and so we present views of the tangled wildwood, the rippling brook, and the cool retreat. It is [illegible] for one to [illegible] the city and all its [illegible] and hurry for staying out a brief period away from the turmoil of traffic and the hustle and bustle of business.



Glimpses of [illegible] land.

Mexican Jumping Beans.

The Mexican shrub Sebastiania Palmeri is known to the native local as Brincador (Jumper) and the seeds as "brincadores." The singular activity of the seeds (which are not [illegible] in appearance) is due to the presence of the larva or worm of a lepidopterous moth by the name of Carpocapsa saltitans. The plant belongs to the Euphorbia family, the members of which have a milky juice, that from some species being used as a violent purgative. The Mexican Indians dip their arrows in the juice and they are thereby rendered poisonous. In fact, some natives call the plant Yerba de flecha (Arrow weed.) Every year street vendors have these jumping beans for sale in Los Angeles. Local Mexicans will say it is the Palo de la flecha, [illegible] de los brincadores. (Arrow tree, which produces the jumping bean.)

Growing Good Pansies.

Not all gardens may grow good pansies except a great deal of care be given. The drainage must be good. The soil must be rich and finely pulverized. If grown in winter, a sunny exposure is good. If for summer bloom partial shade is necessary and a good mulch should be spread over the bed. Weeds must be kept out from among the plants and high feeding will bring best results. The best growers feed liquid manure twice each week and pick off the first blooms until the plants get vigorous; after which dead blossoms and seed pods are kept off. Pansies need water nearly every day and respond readily to daily care. The present day pansies are grand flowers compared with the type, originating in 1810 in the garden of [illegible] at Walton, Eng. The French have for many years excelled in pansy culture, and so do some American seed growers.

Ornamental Cherries.

Whenever the word cherry is heard it conjures up thoughts of luscious fruits, but in Japan cherries are planted extensively that never bear a fruit. Everywhere the Japanese plant cherry trees for flowers. In parks and gardens, singly and in groves. In blossoming season they hold festivals as they do in the autumn for the chrysanthemum season. These flower festivals are both private and public and are great ceremonial occasions with the Japanese nobility. This strain of cherry tree, which contains many varieties, is all from one species, Prunus Pseudo-cerasus and all do very well in Southern California.

Blooms All the Year.

Watch the pink "sand verbena" down at the seashore and you will find blossoms every month in the year. It is not a verbena but belongs to the four-o'clock and bougainvillea family. By the way, we have a true four-o'clock native to this end of the State, but it does not "four-o'clock" at all, but stays wide awake. Its name is Mirabilis Californica, while the garden one is M. [illegible], or "Marvel of Peru." Ours is a much smaller plant than the Peruvian species and bears flowers of the same hue as the floral bracts of its near relative, the common bougainvillea. It grows on dry hillsides and is really a pretty little flower, though not a favorite for picking.

Properly Planted Places.

Do the grounds about our better class of homes look as though they were properly planted? Will they make a good appearance in after years? Too few realize the importance of planting right and having a plan, even if said plan be one of your own. But have a plan. If you cannot afford to purchase a plan, have the planner come and look at your garden and pay him a consultation fee. Few real gardens but could afford such a fee and it would prove money well spent. Then map out your own plan. But have a definite plan.

Fuchsias.

A majority of those who try to grow fuchsias fail on them. For a tropical combination of flower and foliage they are very effective. To succeed one must plant them in a rich soil of good humus content and leave them in the same position for several years. Not until three years of age do they attract attention. Twenty or more years ago Fuchsia [illegible] was somewhat common in Los Angeles, but now are as rare as any of the species. The writer has had good luck in growing them in shaded spots.

Mildew on Roses.

Mildew should be attacked when it first attacks for it is not easy to combat after once getting well spread over the bushes. Therefore the first indication should bring immediate treatment. One prominent rose grower offers this simple and easily mixed spray. Dissolve one-half ounce of good soap in a little hot water, and one-fourth ounce of flour of sulphur in cold water. Mix these thoroughly and add enough water to make a gallon. Spray in early morning, the earlier the better.

The Best [illegible].

For street planting [illegible] is far ahead of any other species. It is the tallest, most majestic, of the best form, does not shed its leaves when blooming, as does the "[illegible] tree," and has many other points of excellence. It will attain a height of eighty or more feet and hold its foliage down to the ground. In flower it is covered with huge bunches of [illegible] flowers. A very fine specimen grows at Alhambra and the writer recently saw a large one in bloom at Santa Barbara.

Giant Fig or Rubber Tree.

For wide streets having wide parkways there is no better tree than Ficus macrophylla, known locally as a rubber tree. With large size it is the most majestic tree locally grown. Large specimens are quite common; there are two in [illegible] Court, while the one at Twentieth street, on the highway running to Long Beach is known to thousands who travel on the boulevard [illegible] cars. William Hood, on the writer's advice, planted some many years ago at the extreme south end of Vermont avenue.

R. H. TAYLOR APPOINTED.

R. H. Taylor, author of University of California Bulletin No. 297 on almond growing, began work with the new State Department of Agriculture on August 1, having been appointed by Director G. H. Hecke as assistant to the Chief of the Division of Plant Industry, with duties relating to practical horticulture. Mr. Taylor has had a wide experience in horticultural work in California. His acquaintance with the different fruit growing sections will admirably fit him for his work in the department.

Roup Among Fowls---Some of Its Causes.

TIMELY HINTS. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

JOHN LEWIS WILSON, an experienced breeder of poultry in New Zealand, has contributed a short monograph to the general poultry literature of the day on the subject of the causes of roup that merits more than passing notice. In a rather emphatic way it indorses the opinion often advanced in this department, that conditions and environment mean everything to the poultry keeper. Improper conditions lead to disease and failure; unsanitary environment is the means of spreading many of the ills that fowl are subject to; good sanitation (meaning cleanliness and wholesome feeding) stands for success. But to return to our authority. "Ask the average breeder what roup is," says Mr. Wilson, "and he will tell you that it is a disease affecting the air passages and air chambers." And he is right. Ask him what causes the roup, and he will probably tell you "it has its origin in a long-neglected cold." In this, too, he is right. Ask him to describe the air passages, etc., in a fowl, and he finds himself almost entirely "at sea." There is a widespread lack of knowledge of the physiological characteristics of birds in general. "You may have heard the story of the old Indian who, on being asked by a white man why he did not catch cold as he went about in winter with so much of his body exposed, answered by asking the white man if he often caught cold in his face by its being uncovered. When told he did not, the Indian replied: "Indian all face." Now, fowls do not take cold by being compelled to live in the open air. They take cold in much the same manner as human beings—because we have acquired the notion that, in order to lay well, fowls must be given a warm place to sleep in, and to scratch in, so we proceed to build tight houses; to equip them with a system of so-called scientific ventilators, which serve no other end than to set in motion a number of deadly air currents (draughts;) to fill the south front of these houses with glass, so as to let in the maximum of sunshine with the minimum of fresh air—the minimum of the very best element in which all things attain to the highest degree of health and efficiency. We take our fowls out of their natural element, which is in the open air, and place them in these tight houses, and then spend a large amount of our time in dipping, dosing and doctoring the ones with swollen heads and sore throats.

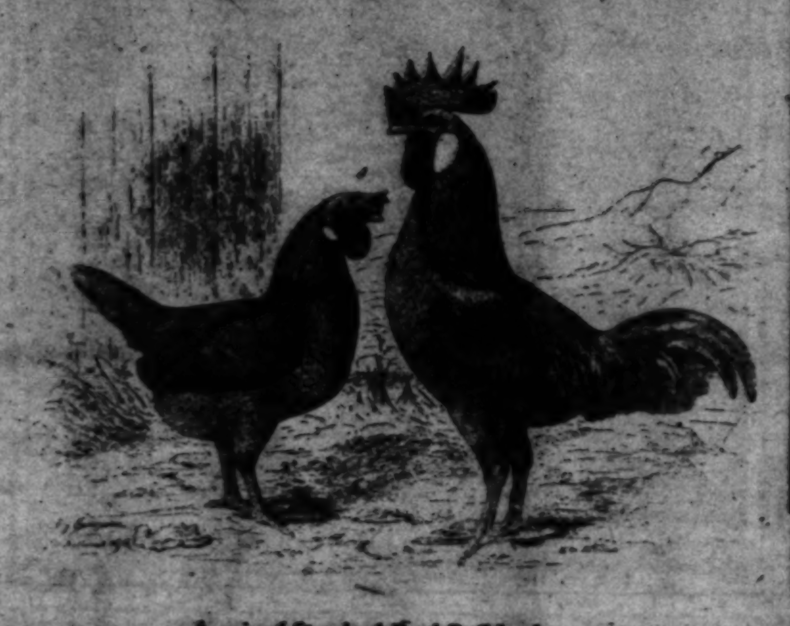
"Dust thou art, to dust returnest;" may not have been spoken for the soul. It is almost certain that it was not spoken with any reference to poultry culture. Nevertheless, it behooves every poultry-keeper to look to the kind and quality of the dust that his fowls are compelled to live and wallow in, to eat and to breathe. Dust bears the same relation to a fowl's body as water does to that of human beings; with it they cleanse their bodies. If you have ever seen an old hen wallowing in a pool of dust in the road, notice how she works it into her plumage, and by a peculiar movement of the feathers, scours off the dead skin and waste tissues of her body. This is how she makes her toilet. In this manner she also rids herself of lice and mites. Notice also how, when she has finished her toilet, she gets up and with a few shakes of her body sends a cloud of dust into the air. For this reason every pen should be provided with a dust box and for the same reason the box should be emptied often, and refilled with clean dust or ashes. Who would think of allowing every member of a family of ten or twelve to bathe, one after another, in the same water? Then repeat process with the same number of persons and the same water for weeks, and imagine, if you can, the condition of the water at the end of that time. Fowls also eat a large amount of the dust thus placed before them. In making the foregoing illustration, do not think that I have drawn too heavily upon the imagination, for herein lies one of the most fruitful breeding-grounds of that second kind of roup which I have endeavored to describe. When fowls are compelled to breathe the air that is thus charged with this contaminated dust, they are almost sure to fall victims to some pulmonary disease."

August Operations.

The moulting season usually takes its inception in August; more especially is its advent noticeable in the young stock. The older birds may continue a month or six weeks longer before commencing to shed their feathers. As the experienced breeder knows, the hen's period in refurnishing her body with a new suit of clothes is at best more or less trying. At this time hens do not lay freely—the surplus energy all going to the making of new feathers. For this reason it is best to feed well and provide physical comforts for the birds. There may [illegible] at this period [illegible] always that it is not [illegible]. [illegible] a general flock it is not advisable to feed short, and it is also quite as wrong to feed too liberally of highly nitrogenous rations. Of course, the moult the birds will require a fattening carbonaceous diet; they also need nitrogenous food for the building of feather structure and additional heat producers to overcome scanty clothing while the new covering is in the growing. It is safer to have birds above regular condition rather than under. Under careful management at this period, hens will often lay fairly well, but the eggs are apt to be small—this also applies to the early "coming-in" pullets. But it is best, in the long run, not to force normal laying until after the birds are fully over the moulting season.

Have you culled down your flock to what hens you want for laying, the number of birds for breeding and show purposes? If not, don't you think it economy to convert the surplus cockerels into cash, and if you are shy on room, to cull down to the yard room you have available for a given number of birds? It saves feed bills and also time and labor for caretaking. August is even a little late for this operation; if you have not attended to it, do so at once.

August is a good time to overhaul your houses and put your yards in first-class condition, so that when the hens commence to lay they will be in seclusion and quiet. Nothing so interferes with egg production as a change of conditions, or a disturbance from the even tenor of their ways.



A pair of Standard Bred Buff Leghorns.

Keeping Hen Fruit in Summer.

Nothing is more detrimental to the keeping qualities of eggs than hot weather, hence the importance of exercising extra care in the storage of this product on the farm and in the family larder. Eggs during August and September should be harvested daily and kept in a cool, dry situation free from bad odors and sudden changes of temperature; where the number of hens is sufficiently large to warrant the practice; it is advisable to market often, and to do the transporting to town in the early morning or late evening rather than during the heat of the day. Preferably eggs should be the product of hens from which the male birds have been removed, as infertile eggs keep much better than those with germs. The hen lays a good wholesome product; it is the owner's fault if the same reaches the market in an inferior condition.

Health Indications.

As an indication of the health of the flock, watch the droppings. If they retain a round form and are not discolored, assimilation and digestion is working properly and conditions are quite apt to be normal and healthy, unless vermin is in evidence. If the droppings are soft and watery, emitting a bad odor, and greenish in color, look out for bowel trouble. Sloppy rations, too much animal food, filthy quarters, are causes of ill health, which should be remedied at once. Wholesome feeding and cleanliness in yards and houses are things to observe during the warm season when fowls are in the moult and the weather is at best more or less enervating.

Guarded Feed Buying.

With the present upward tendency in the price of feeding stuffs, the poultry keeper with any quantity of fowl should exercise judgment in his purchases, not only as to price, but more especially as to quality. In this connection it is well to remember a few "don'ts" that may not be amiss when buying in the open market. For instance:

Don't buy a feed that contains much in excess of 5 to 6 per cent. ash.

Don't buy a feed that has noticeable quantities of grain hulls, hay or weed seeds.

Don't purchase one guaranteed to contain less than 15 per cent. of protein.

Don't purchase a feed that is bitter, mouldy or sour.

Don't fail to make a careful examination of both guarantees and physical condition before ordering.

Feeding the Chickens.

Some poultrymen feed their flocks twice a day, while others feed them three times a day. The best plan is to feed fowls in confinement three times a day and those having free range in summer twice a day. When there is a very long interval between feeds it is difficult to keep fowls busy which are kept in confinement. Idle fowls often contract bad habits, such as feather pulling and egg eating, besides going out of condition from lack of exercise.

In case it is not convenient to feed three times a day, the moistened mash may be fed in the morning, and at the same time the noon feed of grain may be scattered in the litter, which will keep the fowls busy a great part of the day.

Some poultry keepers can look after their fowls only once a day. If this is in the morning, moistened mash may be fed, followed by throwing grain in the litter to furnish feed for the remainder of the day. If it is in the evening, before dark, a moistened mash may be given, and either after the fowls go to roost or in the morning before daylight, grain may be scattered in the litter for eating during the day.

Cleanliness Vital.

Everything about a poultry house should be kept reasonably clean. As a rule droppings should be removed daily, for the accumulation of excrement harbors parasites, contaminates the air, and breeds contagion. After the dropping boards have been cleaned, they should be sprinkled with road dust, coal ashes, land plaster, or air-slaked lime to absorb the liquid excrement. Nests in which straw or other similar material is used should be cleaned out and new straw put in about once every three or four weeks, or oftener if it becomes damp or dirty.

The quarters should be thoroughly whitewashed at least once a year, late in summer or early in the fall. The whitewash can be made by slaking lime in boiling water and then thinning to the proper consistency for applying. The addition of four ounces of carbolic acid to each gallon of whitewash will increase its disinfecting power. The runs should be plowed occasionally in order to bury the contaminated droppings and also to turn up fresh soil.

Treatment of Diseases.

All diseased birds should be isolated.

Colds and Roup.—Disinfect the drinking water as follows: To each gallon of water add one teaspoonful of [illegible] or as much potassium permanganate as will remain on the surface of a dime.

Chicken Pox.—Put a touch of iodine on each sore and apply carbolated vaseline.

Gapes.—Fresh ground and vigorous cultivation will often remedy this trouble, which is caused by small gapeworms that live in the soil and attach themselves to the inside of the throat.

Diarrhea in Hens.—Low-grade wheat flour or middlings is good for this trouble. A teaspoonful of castor oil containing five drops of oil of turpentine to each fowl is also good.

Bumblefoot.—When the feet are badly swollen, a small cut should be made with a clean, sharp knife and the pus removed. Wash the wound out with equal parts of hydrogen peroxide and water, grease with vaseline, and bandage.

Limberneck.—A teaspoonful of castor oil given to the fowl will sometimes effect a cure.

Scaly Legs.—Apply vaseline containing 2 per cent. of creolin to the affected parts and after twenty-four hours soak in warm, soapy water. Repeat treatment until cured.

The Poultry House Site.

If the farm poultry house can be built in the lee of a windbreak or a hill, or in front of farm buildings, so much the better. A dry, porous soil, such as sandy or gravelly loam, is preferable to a clay soil, for the former is more easily kept in a sanitary condition. If it is impracticable to select a soil that is naturally dry, the soil should be made dry by thorough underdrainage. A purely sandy soil should not be selected, for a soil not good enough to support plant life is unfit for poultry.

As sunlight and warmth are essential to success, the buildings should face the south; other things being equal, they will be warmer and drier. When a direct southern exposure can not be obtained a southeastern is preferable to a southwestern exposure, for fowls seem to prefer morning to afternoon sun. A gentle slope facing the south is the most suitable. Provide natural or artificial shade for the fowls.

Green Feed Helps Hens.

Hen obesity and hen languor are opposed to profitable poultry production because excessively fat hens, as well as languid, lazy hens, lay few eggs and devote their energies to storing up surplus avoirdupois instead of concentrating on the manufacture of an egg every other day. Hustle yourself, old lady hen, and do not develop ennui to the extent that you become portly and ambitionless. Remember that all the consumers love a fat hen on the table while all the producers deplore too fat a hen in the flock. Hence, be forewarned and forearmed and shake your sluggish, phlegmatic tendencies or else you'll have to execute some clever dodging to escape the ax.

Early molting hens may lay well during the spring season, says the United States Department of Agriculture, but when the summer is on in all its glory they slump and decline in production to the extent that it is extravagant to keep them longer in the flock. Good spring layers often are not good summer layers.

No hen should be sold while she continues to lay. Occasionally a hen that has become broody may again resume laying after a brief period and continue profitable production throughout the summer. Generally speaking, all hens that begin to molt in June or July should be disposed of as soon as they stop laying, advise United States department of Agriculture specialists.

Where a full egg basket is desired, it is essential to provide the flock with plenty of fresh air and sunshine during the summer as well as an abundance of shade, as hens can not withstand excessive heat. It is necessary to provide plenty of green feed, such as beet, turnip, carrot and onion tops, as well as waste leaves from cabbage and lettuce and also such material as potato peelings, watermelon and cantaloupe rinds and grass clippings.

Practical Poultry Pointers.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

The Only Way Out.

FORTUNATE indeed is the family that has a successfully producing and well-planned garden in these days of terrific costs and heartless profiteering. For many a family in Los Angeles today the back-yard garden represents the only relief from almost intolerable living conditions. Many another family, if it had had the initiative to spade up otherwise unused ground and plant and care for a vegetable plot, would now be in a much better position to make ends meet. If there is any immediate way out for the average family that has acquired the habit of eating every day, aside from the home production of as much as possible of the food that it consumes, The Times Farm and Tractor Section would be glad to receive and publish the formula.

The public grew almost weary during war times of being constantly admonished to plant gardens, even though fully appreciative of the big and vitally important idea back of the government's urgings. Thousands who had never wielded a hoe before in their lives made a gallant attempt to do so at the earnest plea of Uncle Sam. That the home gardeners helped in an important way to release for shipment to France the compact foodstuffs needed by the expeditionary forces is now a fact of history. The "Victory" garden followed the war garden and was urged upon people until the very word "gardening" came to have a tin-panny sound. The ceaseless urging to raise gardens and cut down the so-called "H. C. L.," of course, antedates both and has been harped on year in and year out. The public, gardeners and non-gardeners alike, it is safe to say, has listed the gardening plea among the most tiresome of the bromides.

Things have come to a pass, however, where home gardening stands forth as the only definitely available refuge for the family man struggling along in a losing fight against ever-mounting living expenses. There have been times since the insistent admonition to grow gardens and cut down living costs was first started when for many men the cost and trouble and time incidental to producing vegetables would have amounted to the equivalent in value of the same products purchased in the market, but that is not the situation today. For all except the well-to-do the buying for the table of the common vegetables so easily produced in the garden now represents a formidable problem in domestic economics. The family without a garden of its own can only groan and pay.

Blame it onto the Japs, the high cost of labor, the manipulations of the middleman or the spirit of profiteering greed with which all who have any commodity to sell seem to be imbued, fix the responsibility as one will, the fact remains that the prices of the easily raised table vegetables have mounted so high that there is no longer any method by which anyone can really live cheaply. The mere cutting out of meats will not solve the problem these days. The situation is a desperate one; what with high prices and the diminished purchasing power of the dollar, the higher wages that almost everyone is now receiving become for the average family a mockery. And yet it costs the householder but little if any more to raise a garden now than in the days when, on account of the comparative cheapness of vegetables, it was a question as to whether it would pay him to spade up his back yard or the adjoining vacant lot. The seed costs more, but the seed is the small part of it. Water is just as cheap and the gardener's own labor as available and, incidentally, as beneficial to himself, as ever. And the vegetables that come to the table fresh from the home garden, one may be sure, do not pass through the hands of any opportunist profiteers.

Better see the seedsman, Mr. Family Man, and get in a garden. Your neighbor who gets out and cultivates and irrigates mornings and evenings is also having his hard sledding, but he's having an easier time making his salary cover his expenses than you are. If you wait on Congress to straighten out your living problems, you are probably destined to wait a long time.

And garden planting time is all the time in Southern California.

The Demonstration.

ONE needs not remind a farmer who has raised crops under both eastern and western conditions that western agriculture is radically different from that of the East. California and adjoining States, moreover, raise such a variety of crops under all kinds of climatic and soil conditions that experiments are constantly developing new and valuable methods of growing crops. Therefore the coming public tractor and farm power demonstration to be given in Los Angeles by Southern California tractor and implement dealers is almost sure to attract more interested farmers and land owners than did the National demonstration at Wichita, Kan., in July.

The farmer of the Middle West knows that the tractor will plow and cultivate his corn and grain fields efficiently, and will fill silos and saw wood. But the western farmers who raise besides corn, cotton, milo, rice, fruits, alfalfa, beans, nuts, berries, truck crops, grapes, live stock, poultry, sugar beets, grains and cantaloupes, are glad of a chance to learn more of how the tractor and other improved machinery can help them in growing their various crops.

It may be that the coming demonstration will be the last public field trial of the tractor, chiefly because the tractor is no longer on trial and its merits are now generally known. But the varied agricultural conditions of the Southwest assure for the coming show a large attendance. There will be new features to this show; the steel steeds will be seen in new agricultural stunts, and altogether it will be of great value to the Southwestern farmer.

POP CORN AS FOOD.

Besides being a source of entertainment for the children, pop corn, which is the corn kernel cooked whole, instead of being ground and then cooked, obviously has a high food value, as well as a good taste and when properly prepared for the table it may acceptably take the place of many of the breakfast foods now on the market. Pop corn may be eaten with milk and sugar like other breakfast cereals, or the parched kernels which do not "pop out" can be ground like coffee, and eaten with cream and sugar or can be boiled with water and served like oatmeal.

San Fernando Valley ranchers are finding large profits in the growing of one crop of potatoes a year, preceded by the growing and plowing under of a cover crop.

HOW PROHIBITION LAWS AFFECT THE QUALITY OF FARM LABOR.

LAWS to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor have probably had as marked an effect in the agricultural districts as in the cities of the Southwest. While dwellers in the city have been adjusting themselves to new conditions imposed by these laws, on the farms the effect on labor appears to have been quite measurable.

In reply to questions by a representative of The Times Farm and Tractor Section as to what had been the effect, if any, of the passing of prohibition laws on the quality of farm labor, large employers of labor in agriculture have failed to unanimously agree on certain points. That the attempt to kill John Barleycorn has as yet had a beneficial effect on all who formerly indulged in intoxicants is questioned by some ranchers. The great majority, however, unqualifiedly say that since the war-time prohibition law forbade the public sale of intoxicating liquors their men have been more steady and reliable workers.

Nearly all of the Southern California farmers or ranch managers who report either a negligible effect or a bad effect on farm labor from attempted prohibition remark on the tendency of the workers to seek substitutes for liquor in other harmful concoctions. The workers, it is presumed by most of them, will soon see the folly of drinking extracts, Jamaica ginger and alcohol-containing nostrums and will give them up after a series of disastrous trials. One employer declares that some of the men now laboring overtime on weird tipples of one kind and another once found beer and light wine strong enough for their tastes and that thus far the prohibition of the latter seems to have made for discontent.

Following are expressions anent the effect of prohibition laws on farm labor from men engaged in managing farms and hiring farm labor:

SHOW UP ON MONDAY.

Clarence Coe, Palms: I note a better quality of farm labor since July 1. This is especially manifest in the line-up in the field on Monday morning. The men are more steady, and the capacity of the worker is greater.

Volney H. Craig, San Fernando, an employer of 400 men: There is no change that I can see in the quality of work done by farm laborers since July 1, but, although I am not a prohibitionist, I have never tolerated heavy drinkers on the premises. Some of my helpers, I have noted, are inclined to try various concoctions as substitutes for liquor, and I understand they suffer thereby.

Mr. Craig adds interesting sidelights on this subject, stating that the composite farm worker throughout the country is doing about two-thirds as much work as he did before the war.

It is rather early to judge of the effect of nation-wide prohibition, according to Merritt H. Adamson, proprietor of the Adohr Stock Farms, Owensmouth, who says that some of his men seem to be able still to commune whenever they desire with the spirit of old John Barleycorn. It is Mr. Adamson's belief, however, that farm labor will be more steady and dependable after prohibition has become a fact as well as a law and the privately-stored supplies of fire water have been consumed.

"Unquestionably, the closing up of licensed liquor selling establishments has bettered the farm-labor situation," says F. T. Gatton, manager of the Diamond Bar ranch, Spadra. This ranch employs scores of men in raising live stock. Since July 1, Mr. Gatton says, there has been a much larger percentage of men present on the ranch each day after pay day.

STAY ON THE JOB.

The Azusa Foothill Company, owners of nearly 700 acres of citrus groves and employers of large numbers of Mexican orange and lemon pickers, has been favorably affected by the prohibition law. C. A. Griffith, general manager of the ranch, states that since the law became operative his Mexicans stay on the job much better. He had always before counted on a certain percentage of absence on Monday, pay day being every Saturday evening. Very few of the men, he says, now fail to show up at the beginning of the week.

In some instances farmers report no change in the quality of work or the steadiness of workers because of the ban on liquors. In such category is placed the experience of E. P. Taylor of the Santa Anita ranch, Arcadia. Mr. Taylor states that he has always made an effort to hire workers who do not indulge to excess in liquors, and that the change from wet to dry has had no effect on the labor situation at the ranch.

One of the most serious handicaps to employers of farm labor before prohibition went into effect, it seems to be conceded by the great majority of farmers, was the susceptibility of some workmen to indulgence in liquor when off duty. "Now that prohibition has gone into effect," says Harrisan Lewis, superintendent of the 22,000-acre Santa Monica Mountain Park ranch, "a marked change is noticed by farmers and ranch managers on Monday mornings. It is pleasing to the employer to observe that his men now have the appearance of having rested over Sunday and that they do not require one or more days to recover their equilibrium after a day off."

CONCOCT OWN DRINKS.

Some live-stock raisers in particular, however, take the opposite view and state that the effect of the prohibition law is either negligible or harmful. D. O. Brant, manager of the Elliott-Brant ranch, Owensmouth, says that if anything, he is having more trouble keeping men in good physical condition than before July 1. Some of his herdsmen, milkers and general hands, he declares, have sought so diligently for substitutes for bar drinks that they have suffered seriously. Two men whom he employed were certified to the Lunacy Commission after they had taken alcohol and formaldehyde to get the sadly-lamented "kick." Others have sought solace in Jamaica ginger, lemon and vanilla extract and other mixtures of like harm to the human system and have been less efficient workmen as a result.

Walnut growers generally feel that prohibition has resulted in better work and better workmen, says Carlisle Thorpe, manager of the California Walnut Growers' Association. There is more of a disposition on the part of employees to report promptly for work Monday morning in the walnut groves, Mr. Thorpe says.

A better quality of work is now done by those farm workers who were prone to indulge in liquor before prohibition went into effect, says F. H. Scribner of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, who, in his rounds, visits many large employers of farm labor. Very few of these employers, he says, report anything but a favorable change in the quality of work done since July 1.

Where steadiness and reliability of farm help mean everything.

Prohibition, according to the concensus of opinion of large employers of farm labor, has already resulted in a measurable improvement in the working morale of farm hands.

GRASSHOPPER CONTROL.

Advices from County Horticultural Commissioner Kellogg indicate that Santa Barbara was fortunate in that grasshopper damage occurred in only isolated spots. Poisoned bait was used successfully in combating this pest. The formula was as follows: Twenty-five pounds bran, two quarts molasses, one pound Paris green, one-half dozen lemons, four gallons of water. The hoppers now seem to be disappearing, and no great damage is expected.

SELECTION OF SEED IN HOME GARDENS.

Many of the spring-sown vegetables in the home and farm garden are now mature, and it is therefore timely to select seed for another planting. If the grower has been successful with his vegetables, under the same conditions of culture next year he will probably do even better if he saves the best vegetables from the best plants for seed. Many of the home-garden vegetables will not produce the best seed, as some seed must be grown under special conditions and have special care. But in most cases the home gardener can save money and better his crops by selection of seed.

Allow the longest, straightest, best-formed beans from the healthiest and most prolific vines of bushes to remain on the plants and let the pods dry before picking. Then shell and place in jars or paper containers in a dry place for future use. Spring potato seed may be saved for the fall crop, allowing at least six weeks' interval between cropping and planting. Do not select the largest, but the medium-sized, smoothest tubers, those most easily handled. Find the longest and best-formed ears of green corn, regardless of height—although they will, in most cases, be found on the tallest ears—and store away after the ear has dried on the stalk.

In France gardeners have a way of saving cucumber seed and utilizing the vegetable. Allow two or three of the best-formed cucumbers to fully ripen until yellow and until the seeds are fully formed. Cut open the cucumber, scrape out the seeds and pickle the flesh, using three changes of salt brine and boiling vinegar, drying the seeds in the sun for an hour or two before storing.

Lettuce, radish, spinach and cabbage seed is very easily raised if the plants are given sufficient water, but it is not practicable to raise beet seed in the ordinary garden because of the space and time demanded for the crop. Sometimes it is desirable to tie a paper sack over the seed to prevent shattering and attacks by birds.

SPRAYING FOR LEAF BLIGHT OF TOMATOES.

Spraying improves color and solidity of tomatoes, reduces rot and sunscald, and increases the yield of ripe fruit 39 per cent. and of both green and ripe fruit 55 per cent.

A small knapsack compressed-air sprayer may be used in this work. Such sprayers are light, easy to operate, and produce a fine misty spray. Several different kinds, varying somewhat in shape and construction, but built on the compressed-air principle, are now offered for sale.

A good spray formula is 5-5-3-50 Bordeaux soap mixture, composed of five pounds copper sulphate, five pounds stone lime, three pounds resin fish oil soap, and fifty gallons of water.

To reduce the work of preparing spray mixtures the following stock solutions were made: Five pounds of copper sulphate (blue stone) were dissolved by suspending it in a wooden vessel containing five gallons of water. Copper sulphate corrodes iron and tin. Five pounds of stone lime (quicklime) were slaked in another vessel by slowly adding water at first and later increasing the volume to five gallons. Three pounds of resin fish oil soap were diluted in a third vessel by stirring it in hot water until thin and increasing the volume to five gallons by adding water of ordinary temperature.

THE DEVASTATIONS OF GRAIN BUGS.

Grain bugs have increased in numbers so rapidly during the past few years that they are now a serious menace to growing grain in the intermountain and Southwestern States. Their recent development as an economic pest is due to the change from the natural vegetation in the Western States to cultivated food plants, according to entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture. This condition has been brought about by the cultivation of large areas formerly devoted to grazing, which practically eliminated many of the native food plants, and caused the insect to attack cultivated crops. They cause damage by piercing the newly formed heads of cereals and feeding on the liquid contents, which prevents the formation of the grain and reduces its weight 10 to 50 per cent. from normal.

Wheat, barley and rye are the preferred food plants of the grain bug, but it also feeds on other cereals and on cabbage, cotton, peas, beans, tomatoes and lettuce, in addition to many native plants. Weather influences and the work of parasites in each locality where damage has occurred generally have restricted the destructive outbreaks of grain bugs to periodic intervals of two or three years.

The heads of small grains that have been injured by this pest are conspicuous in the field, especially those of wheat, barley, rye and oats. Soon after attack, and long before the normal period of ripening is reached, the damaged heads assume a dull, yellowish-white color, which is a sharp contrast to the bright green of the undamaged heads. They appear normal in size, but upon being crushed between the fingers are found to be nearly, if not entirely, empty.

In a wind or rain storm many of these stems are broken and the heads fall to the ground. People not familiar with the work of grain bugs frequently attribute the damage which they cause to hail or other weather influences. The grains of affected heads are withered and much reduced in size and weight. Frequently the extent of damage is not appreciated by the grower until the crop is threshed. In extreme cases entire fields of small grain have been destroyed.

The most effective and practical method of control is the destruction of the adults while they are concentrated in their winter quarters. This is best accomplished by plowing under or burning rubbish and weeds in and about cultivated fields. These control measures should be included as a part of the regular farm practice, and any special work required may be carried on during the inactive season at a time when farm labor and equipment ordinarily are idle. Severe winters result in the death of a large percentage of the hibernating adults and constitute one of the most important factors in restricting destructive outbreaks. During the normal winters at least 95 per cent. of the bugs survive when hibernating in protected locations. Usually after midsummer the numbers of the insects are greatly reduced by a tiny wasplike parasite of the eggs and by certain flies which are parasitic on the adult bugs.

OPENS COAST BRANCH.

The Coleman Lamp Company of Wichita, Kan., manufacturing gasoline lamps, lanterns and farm lighting systems, has just opened a western branch establishment at No. 120 South Los Angeles street. All business in the Coleman line originating in California, Arizona and Nevada, will be taken care of through this branch. The Coleman Lamp Company of California, as the local concern will be known, will also go after export business. The new company has purchased the established gasoline lighting business of the Cole Lite and Sales Company, which concern has enjoyed a large patronage in the West. Floyd Cole, fomer owner and proprietor of the Cole Lite and Sales Company, has been elected president and general manager of the new corporation.

BOYS AND POULTRY.

The average youngster takes to poultry keeping with interest, particularly when he is allowed to sell the surplus meat and eggs and invest the income in the savings bank or in better foundation stock for the improvement of his flock. The training and experience which the children realize from their daily association with hens is of great all-round value to them and is of special help in developing a love for country life and in keeping rural boys and girls on the farm.

Rabbit breeders, many of them, believe that the New Zealand Red is the best all around breed for home consumption and market.

Farm News of the Great Southwest
DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

SAN FERNANDO.—A carload to the acre is what the first big commercial season of cantaloupe growing has demonstrated the San Fernando melon fields can produce. Although cantaloupes have been grown in the valley for the local markets for a number of years this is the first summer that shipments by the carload have been made to the eastern markets from the valley. And although 1919 will always be regarded as the experimental year for cantaloupes, at least 600 cars will be shipped to Chicago, Colorado and other Rocky Mountain States and the north and northwestern markets, from the 900 acres of the district. The San Fernando Valley season begins about ten days after the Imperial Valley season has closed and picking and shipping in the fields to the west and south of town has been going on for about three weeks. The cantaloupes are of excellent quality and shippers state that this valley produces with the best of them. The output has been prolific beyond the expectations of the ranchers and shippers, and from some vines as many as thirty melons are picked. The season will last at least six weeks and possibly until the first of October. From ten to fifteen cars are being shipped daily from the two packing companies which are handling the output. The "experiment" has proven in this first year so successful that every indication points to the planting of from 5000 to 10,000 acres next season. The crop, coming as it does later than the Imperial melons and earlier than the Colorado melons, is in real competition only with one section, the Turlock district.

TREE SHORTAGE.

PORTERVILLE.—Because many varieties of plums and peaches are not to be had in quantities from the nurseries of California, several big orchard projects for which plans had been virtually completed have been halted and the tracts will be put into field crops for the ensuing year at least. Reports from all the leading brokers in trees tell the same story—that quantity delivery of canning peaches, Wickson and Santa Rosa plums and some varieties of prunes cannot be made. Small lot orders are being accepted, but with a clause providing for cancellation on notice. Because of this shortage, peach trees are listed at [illegible] cents each for one or a thousand, if obtainable, and the same relatively high price is being demanded for all classes of figs. Grape cuttings are showing the general tendency as to price, and stock which could be bought last year for $10, and up, per thousand is now selling at $30 to $35 per thousand. Various factors are blamed for this situation. The supply of peach pits, usually secured from Louisiana by the nursery men, was exhausted by purchases from chemical manufacturers. Demand has been heavy from all parts of the country to supply the market for canning peaches of all varieties. Belgian and French supplies of resistant stock for plum and other pit-fruit stock are not available this year. Planting projects on an unexampled scale have been planted. No relief is expected from this condition until the planting season of 1921, according to the leading dealers of this season.

APRICOTS GO OVERSEAS.

POMONA.—More than half a million cans of Pomona apricots are to tickle the palates of thousands across the seas. This interesting fact became known when it was announced at the Golden State Cannery that already eight carloads of apricots had been shipped to San Pedro, where they had been loaded aboard ship and started on their journey through the canal and on to London, from which place they will be distributed. Not only have eight carloads been shipped for the overseas trade thus far this season, but eight or ten more cars are already booked for London, and will be shipped out of Pomona as soon as convenient. The English are particularly fond of apricots, and the canned product finds a ready market there. Altogether it is estimated that half a million cans of Pomona apricots will find their way across the water from the two local canneries this year. Because of the war, there has been no foreign trade in canned apricots in the past two years, but with the return of more normal conditions, the export trade is opening with great prospects. The Golden State Cannery has begun the regular season's run on peaches, and until the middle of October, the crop will continue to come in, and the canneries will run steadily. For the first few days, peaches were received from the outside, and then the local peaches began to come in. The quality is fine this year, and the crop is large, while the prices are better than ever before. Before the canneries are through with the peaches, the work of canning a big tomato pack will be on and this will last well into December, giving steady employment to a large number.

BEE MEN PROSPER.

BRYN MAWR.—Beemen who live in the orange-growing district of San Bernardino county are reporting the most prosperous year in the history of beekeeping, according to County Bee Inspector B. H. Stanley. Charles Taylor of Highland, who has some 200 stands of bees, reports that his sales of honey this year will reach $5000 which is believed to be a record honey production. Ben Southers reports over ten tons of honey from his apiary and he has received close to $400 a ton for it. Prices have ranged from 17 to 20 cents a pound, but the apiarist who brings out good clear honey can be sure of the top-notch price this year. Some are holding for a higher figure but most beemen believed that the top price has been reached. Sage and wild buckwheat, two of the greatest honey-producing plants in California, will be of little help this year according to Inspector Stanley. The lack of late rains is responsible for this. Beemen who have their stands where the bees could work in the orange groves profited greatly because the blooming season was drawn out this year giving the bees a chance to work longer than usual. Orange honey is greatly in demand also American and European foul brood are still giving a great deal of trouble through the bee stands in the county, but a determined effort is being made to stamp them out.

PEACHES FOR EAST.

REDLANDS.—Redlands peaches will soon be selling in the New York market, probably for 20 cents a pound. The handling of the 1100-ton crop on the 21,000 trees of the Mentone Heights Orchards Company 200-acre peach orchard here has begun. The fruit is being carefully packed at Sunshine Heights packing-house and shipped in precooled cars to New York. The crop on the trees will be worth probably $80,000. The J. H. Hale peaches, to which the larger part of the orchard is planted, will be ripe in two or three weeks.

A LIGHTNING FREAK.

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—D. C. George, Plant Pathologist of the State Commission of Agriculture and Horticulture, describes an interesting observation made in an Egyptian-American long staple cotton field in the Salt River Valley. A field located ten miles southeast of Phoenix near the foothills exhibits a characteristic lightning-struck spot. When visited by Mr. George a dozen or more plants in the center of the spot were completely killed. The area over which the stroke distributed itself was nearly circular in outline, the greater diameter being approximately 120 feet. Dead plants only occupied the exact center of the spot, the injury diminishing toward the periphery.

DAMAGE OVERSTATED.

DINUBA.—Reports of severe damage to muscat grapes by the three weeks of unusual heat during July are shown to have been exaggerated by canvass which has been made of the Alta vineyard district by packers, who report that the total reduction in tonnage will not be to exceed 10 per cent. The previous estimate of the probable output of muscats was 125,000 tons. Despite this loss, it is still believed the total for the year of all classes of raisin grapes will set a new mark, in excess of 200,000 tons.

NEW ASSOCIATION.

TERRA BELLA.—In preparation for the coming orange season and to care for an expected large tonnage of citrus fruits from newly-developed orchards in that district, organization has been undertaken of the Terra Bella Citrus Association, which is to be affiliated with the Tulare County Citrus Fruit Exchange, and the California Fruit Growers' Exchange. The articles of incorporation have been signed by F. C. Ensign, S. H. MacKeen, R. C. Gunnison, W. C. Bradford and Will F. Phillips. Cash capital of the organization has been placed at $25,000, the major portion of which will be expended for a packing-house equipment which the directors purpose to have completed in time for the pack of fruit this coming season.

OLIVE CROP HEAVY.

REDLANDS.—It is getting along so far in the season that predictions of reasonable exactness can be made in regard to the olive crop for the coming year. This fall, it is believed, one of the largest olive crops handled in this section for some time will be harvested. The olives now are of good size and the trees are in excellent condition, the crop being so much larger than last year that there is no comparison. Packers are predicting, however, that there will be such a demand for pickled olives that not nearly the amount of olive oil usually made will be rendered. The average yield per acre for olives in this section has been half a ton per acre but this year some groves will have close to a ton an acre. This is due largely growers say, to the season of blooming being just right with succeeding warm days that developed the fruit rapidly. The olive is a native of warm, dry countries and thrives in such temperatures as we have had recently. Olives sold to the buyers last fall for about $170 a ton in the orchard. Never before had the price been higher than $80 a ton, but imports were cut off, and the domestic supply was light. The Kubias olive factory here did not make oil last year, devoting all energies to pickling olives. Some oil will probably be made this year.

BEET HARVEST.

OXNARD.—Another one of Ventura county's great crops is now being harvested. The plowing out of the sugar beets for the 1919 campaign began two weeks ago and the hauling of the beets to the sugar factory is now on in earnest. The American Beet Sugar Company's factory is in readiness for one of the best, if perhaps not the biggest, campaigns this factory has ever had. The tonnage expected at the factory is considerably larger than that of last year and the campaign in consequence will be longer. The beets tested this year show a higher sugar percentage for the corresponding period before harvesting than for several years past. Tests taken two weeks ago show a range of from 18 to 20 per cent., where usually they show 4 or 5 per cent. less so long before harvesting. While some of the beets in the higher sections in the county have not done as well as in other years, many beets in the Oxnard district give promise of being fully up to the standard. It is expected that the campaign this year will run about ninety days.

MILO IN ARIZONA.

Arizona milo acreage shows an increase of 10 per cent. About 37,000 acres were planted this year, compared with 34,000 acres last year. Based on conditions July 1 of 94 per cent. of a normal crop, the total production should be about 1,358,000 bushels. This compares with 952,000 last year and 864,000 bushels two years ago.

SUB-NORMAL PIGS; HOW TO RAISE THEM.

Take all sub-normal, weakling pigs from the litter and keep them separate from all other pigs, being sure to take them in the house at night, housing them in a suitable box. Set them out in the sun during the day, if the day is not too warm, in which case provide shade for them. After two weeks or so, fix a pen for them outside, and keep the pen scrupulously clean.

Never take sub-normal pigs from the mother until they are a week old. Boil separated cow's milk each day and start them drinking it warm, with a teaspoon. When they will drink readily from the spoon, gradually lower the spoon until you get their noses in the pan of milk and they will soon drink out of the pan. Don't give the pigs too much milk. You must use your judgment in gauging when they have had enough. A pig drinks fast. When he slows up, take the milk away. Feed them every hour during the day until three weeks old. If you want to save the pigs, get up in the middle of the night and feed them until they are three week old.

When the pigs get old enough to crack corn, a little ground corn or milo should be given them. They should be allowed to pasture on alfalfa after four weeks. When they are old enough to eat grass and corn they need be fed milk but three times a day. Use separated milk from the beginning; the other kind would be too rich. When the pigs weigh fifty pounds the milk need not be boiled.

PROTECT HOGS FROM HEAT OF SUMMER.

Hogs suffer during the summer months unless they are protected from the hot sun. Plenty of shade and a sanitaary wallow should be provided. The rate of mortality in shipping hogs is greater in summer than in winter.

Shippers have found the "ice-water shower" successful in shipping cars of hogs. They suspend 500 pounds of ice in gunny sacks at regular intervals from the ceiling of each car. The motion of the train sprinkles the cold water over the animals. Other shippers have placed a three-inch bed of sand in the cars, wetting the sand thoroughly at the shipping station and once again en route.

If a wallow is constructed of concrete in an unsheltered position, a sunshade may be built of straw or boughs laid over a framework of two by three inch pieces built about four feet above the wallow. Every hog raiser should make maximum use of the green feeds that are abundant at this season.

PLACE CORN STALKS ON TOP OF SILAGE.

Several years ago it was a common practice to cover the silage with some material, such as dirt or cut straw, in order to prevent the top layer from spoiling. At present when any provision at all is made for this purpose it consists usually in merely running in on top cornstalks from which the ears have been removed. By this method some of the corn grain is saved. The heavy green cornstalks pack much better than straw does and so exclude the air more effectually. The top is thoroughly tramped and then wet down. Sometimes oats are sown on the top before wetting. The heat generated by the fermenting mass will cause the oats to sprout quickly and form a dense sod, which serves to shut off the air from the silage beneath, and in consequence only a very shallow layer spoils. Whenever possible, it is better to begin feeding from the silo as soon as it is filled; by doing this no covering is necessary and there should be no loss on account of spoiling, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

A donation sale of Berkshire hogs will be held during the California State Fair at Sacramento, by the Western Berkshire Congress. The purpose of the sale is to raise funds from which to pay the special premiums offered by the association at the three big livestock shows in California.

Livestock Bulletin.

Los Angeles Live Stock Fair, in October, as it is estimated that all the Holstein breeders of Southern California and many from Northern California will be here during fair week. Announcement of the date of the meeting will be made later.

W. H. Dupee, owner of the fine Edgemoor herd of Guernseys at Santee, San Diego county, reports a rapidly growing interest in Guernsey cattle in Southern California. He has recently sold two magnificent young bulls to the Adohr Stock Farms at Los Angeles, a bull calf to A. Morrow, Oceanside, and one to Russell S. Cox, Escondido.

California is fortunate in having such a source of outstanding "seed stock," as the Edgemoor Farm and the breeders of the State are not permitting the Wisconsin and eastern Guernsey breeders to come here and take the cream of this herd back East.

The Burr Farm, Los Angeles, reports that the heifer, Carnation Rag Apple DeKol, has been steadily increasing in milk flow since freshening two weeks ago. She is a royally bred heifer, being a grand-daughter of Rag Apple Korndyke 8th, the $100,000 bull, and Johanna McKinley Segis, the $25,000 bull. She dropped a heifer calf, sired by Matodor Segis Walker, the noted bull owned by the Carnation Farms at Seattle. G. M. Brown of the Burr Farms purchased this heifer at the Guarantee Sale at Sacramento a few months ago.

Ireland's Cherry Reformer,
Fine Duroc, which, at ten months weighed 455 pounds.

The Ireland Ranch at Owensmouth has great hopes for the success of the young Duroc boar, Ireland's Cherry Reformer, in the show rings this fall. At ten months of age he weighed 455 pounds. He was sixty-two inches long, thirty-four inches high and measured fifty-nine inches around the heart girth. He will enter as a senior pig. You other Duroc breeders better measure and weigh up your senior boar pigs, and if they do not come up to these measurements you had better crowd them along. If you have a larger one than this, send us his weight and measurements.

The Ireland Ranch reports that sales have been very good. They recently sold four fall gilts to T. B. Tupman of Bakersfield. These were sired by Cherry Volunteer 2nd and bred to Ireland's Joe. Three January boar pigs were sold to Mr. Forbes of Durbin & Forbes.

H. H. Braly, managing partner of the Conejo Ranch, has just gone East to make purchases of registered livestock for the ranch. While East he will visit all of the large herds of Duroc and Hampshire swine and Hereford cattle. He will purchase a large number of both Duroc and Hampshire sows, gilts and boars and Hereford bulls.

The Canejo Ranch reports a very heavy demand for both Duroc and Hampshire breeding stock. Four fine Duroc sows were recently sold to W. H. Dupee for his ranch at Santee. During the past week eight Duroc boars were sold to the firm of Willets, Patterson & Green of Los Angeles; four Hampshire sows to A. Goldsmith of Los Angeles; one Duroc sow to R. Watts of Perris, and a Duroc boar to A. W. Talbot of San Miguel, Cal.

The Diamond Bar Ranch at Spadra recently received the consignment of Duroc breeding stock recently purchased by the manager, Walter I. Gatton, when in the Middle West a few weeks ago. This herd of Durocs under Mr. Gatton's supervision promises to be one of the largest and finest herds on the Pacific Coast. The new hog barns are rapidly being completed, and they will make this one of the most practical breeding establishments in the West. A full herd is now being fitted for exhibition at all of the leading livestock exhibits on the Coast.

Secretary Carmichael of the National Swine Show has advised Prof. J. I. Thompson of Los Angeles that he has been selected to judge Berkshire swine at the National Swine Show to be held at Des Moines, Iowa, September 29 to October 4. California is fortunate in having a man of Prof. Thompson's ability connected with the livestock department of the Davis Farm School.

The Duroc gilts recently purchased by Prof. J. I. Thompson of the University Farm, for the Elliott Rancho, are as fine a lot of individuals as can be found in any one herd in the State. They are due to farrow in September, and some outstanding youngsters are looked for. The herd boar, May Rose King, is [illegible] exceptionally fine animal. [illegible] of age he weighed [illegible] pounds. The [illegible] herd boar, [illegible], is growing out in fine shape, and at eleven months of age weighed 440 pounds.

A fine young boar was recently sold to W. H. Dupee of Santee.

NEW GOAT BOOK.

An interesting addition to goat literature is a new booklet, "Money in Goats," by W. Sheldon Bull, who has written a number of pamphlets on the "back-yard dairy cow" in the past few years. Besides containing much valuable advice relating to the keeping of goats, the book is replete with historical and biblical references to this animal.

If there is doubt in your mind whether goat raising pays, just price goat milk, or a good doe.

OVER A QUARTER MILLION FROM IMPERIAL VALLEY MELON CROP.

EL CENTRO.—Imperial's watermelons are not one of this wonderful valley's major sources of revenue, yet this year's crop brings the neat little sum of $260,000 to the pockets of Imperial Valley ranchers.

The principal varieties grown are the black and white Angeleno, together with the various kinds of Chilean and the Florida melons. The white Angeleno is pronounced to be the best flavored melon. However, public sentiment demands a black seeded melon, and the black seeded Angeleno and the Chilean are those principally favored by the market demand.

This year's crop from 1200 acres, the earliest watermelons produced in the West, has approximately all reached the market. Some 1200 cars have been shipped to various points throughout the West, and at present from twelve to fifteen cars are leaving the valley daily. Most of these go to the Los Angeles market and some are shipped from there to various other localities.

The watermelons are planted about February 15, some being planted as late as March. They are planted in rows ten feet apart and about six seeds dropped in hills eight feet apart in each row. They are planted at a depth of two inches into the moist soil and continually cultivated. After the vines are thoroughly established, the plants are thinned out to two vines to each hill. Cultivation is continued during the early stages of the plant, but irrigation is practiced very little. The vines are hilled after the roots become thoroughly established, and irrigation is then practiced down the furrows and between the veins. As soon as permissible, cultivation is carried on after each irrigation. The vines produce very heavy foliage and fruit, especially on the medium and heavier types of soil, if proper cultivation is continued.

The yields are about twelve to fourteen tons per acre, although occasionally certain fields will yield eighteen to twenty tons. The yield seems to depend on the fertility of the soil and the amount of care and cultivation given them by the grower. Irrigation should only be practiced once during the early stages, but when the plant is blossoming and the melons are seeding, the field should be irrigated quite frequently at intervals of fourteen to eighteen days

The total shipments of melons will probably reach 1500 cars for the season. As no other melons are as early as those of Imperial Valley they have the monopoly of the market at the time they are being shipped.

The watermelon growers of Imperial Valley include Americans, Greeks and a few Japanese. However, most of this product is grown by Americans. Most of the cantaloupes are produced by Japanese. Most of the watermelon growers are tenant farmers. They rent the land for from $15 to $25 per acre and hire their own labor during the picking and the shipping season. They sell the melons on a commission basis, although occasionally some buyers will pay cash for them when they are being loaded. The price varies at different times of the season, according to the supply and the demand. The average price is from $17 to $18 per ton, but at certain times the price exceeds $25 per ton.

From twelve to fifteen tons are loaded in the car and cars are bedded with straw previous to loading in order to insure delivery in good condition at the point of distribution. The melons are hauled to the market by large trucks and are usually picked into rows before these trucks reach the field.

Watermelon growers are learning how to grow a better and a sweeter watermelon, thereby creating a greater demand, and accordingly a better price. Everybody in Imperial Valley seems to be fond of watermelons. The watermelon is not only grown for the colored man, but is demanded by every class in the valley. Ranchers have their own little watermelon patches to supply the family and the labor during the haying and the grain season. Those not growing melons are supplied by the local markets and the commercial producers. A good yield and a good melon produced by proper care and cultivation will bring a handsome return to the grower. This year's watermelons are sweeter and better than any yet produced in Imperial Valley. This was undoubtedly due to the better methods of cultivation, less irrigation and the cool climate during the spring of the year. Next year's acreage is expected to exceed 2000 acres.

Utilizing vacant land.

N. C. Gillmore, a Civil War veteran, of San Diego, has been using vacant lots in the downtown district of that city for the growing of beans. He is growing the Australian Wonder variety and is said to have cleared a tidy sum as the result of his labor.

GREAT FUTURE FOR LOCAL ROOTSTOCKS.

"The wealth of varied soil conditions; the climate, usually lacking the extreme of temperature suffered by other parts of the United States and Eastern Europe; the natural barriers afforded by the mountain ranges on the east and the ocean on the west, all contribute to produce ideal conditions for the production of American rootstocks in California," says G. H. Hecke, State Director of Agriculture.

"It is fortunate, at this time, that steps already have been taken to promote this important phase which contributes so largely to the interest of our fruit-growing industry.

"Opportunity is knocking at the doors of the nurserymen of California. Here can be grown the rootstocks not only for the ever-increasing demands of the State, but for those of the United States. Many nurserymen have been quick to see the possibilities for the future in this direction, as the large plantings will attest, and there is every reason to believe that the near future will furnish the ultimate satisfactory solution and the State of California will contribute rootstocks not only to the State itself, but to the entire country."

THE "BIGGEST GRAIN FIELD OF THE WEST."

CORCORAN.—"The biggest grain field west of the Rocky Mountains" is a fit description of the Tulare Lake region, where a crop of wheat and barley estimated at 2,000,000 sacks was produced this year. More than fifty combined harvesters have worked day and night garnering the precious grain, while every available man, team and auto truck has been pressed into service in the gigantic task of hauling the enormous tonnage to the railways for shipment.

Corcoran, Stratford, Guernsey, Angiola and Alpaugh are the principal shipping points, and the warehouse facilities are already overburdened at all these places. The railroads are unable to furnish an adequate supply of cars to move the grain, causing a considerable delay all around.

This record-breaking crop was made possible by the drying up of Tulare Lake, which is now being farmed over nearly the entire area. Last year sufficient water remained in the lake to make possible the irrigation of a vast acreage for fall planting. The water was conveyed over the land by a system of canals, being lifted to the higher levels by huge pumps and water [illegible] drained, and as the past winter was so deficient in rainfall that no water found its way from the mountains, the thrifty farmers planted the entire lake bed to grain, with the result mentioned above. Thousands of acres of this moist lake bottom land were planted without plowing or other preparation, the seeders following the receding water until May, when grain planting ceased and the farmers turned their attention to seeding the balance of the lake bed to milo maize.

Many Southern California capitalists are interested in the Tulare Lake farming operations, among those having large holdings being Stoddard Jess, president of the First National Bank of Los Angeles; C. W. Gates, H. L. Heffner, H. S. Hubbard and J. J. O'Brien, Los Angeles; C. W. Post, a Pasadena banker.

FRUIT IN FILM.

Why the people of the Eastern States always associate the name of California with the idea of something good to eat is shown in a moving-picture film recently issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. This film shows many phases of the fruit-growing industry of California—from the tree to the car—and it has some scenes remarkable as much for their beauty as for what they teach. Peaches, apricots, prunes and cherries, play the star parts in this film of fruitfulness. Many a person is likely to learn through it that apricots don't grow in a box, but on trees, like peaches; that they are picked in the same way, and then are spread out to dry in the warm sun of the Pacific Coast.

FORECAST A RECORD SUGAR BEET CROP.

The sugar season of 1919-20 begins, with a forecast of production of about 1,108,000 short tons, made by the Bureau of Crop Estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture, or about 73,500 tons more than the average of the preceding six years, during which time the total of the two crops of beet and cane sugar has slightly exceeded 1,000,000 tons every year except in 1914-15.

The beet-sugar forecast for this year is higher than the record crop of 1915-16 by nearly 75,000 tons and is above the average of the preceding six years by about 169,000 tons, but the cane-sugar crop of this year is forecast at only 159,069 tons, compared with which is the average of about 254,500 tons of the preceding six years. During many years the cane-sugar crop of only 1915-16 has been lower and of only 1912-13 has been nearly as small. The low prospects of this year's crop, at the date of July 1, are due to a wet, cool spring and to a somewhat low acreage. In recent years cane sugar has usually been about one-quarter of the total of cane and beet sugar produced in contiguous United States, but this year the prospect is that it will be only about one-seventh.

The area planted to sugar beets this year is the largest one on record and, it is estimated, reaches 890,400 acres, or 200,700 acres more than last year and 83,800 acres more than the largest previous area in 1917. The condition of the crop July 1 was low, on account of adverse weather conditions.

LIVESTOCK BULLETIN.

BY H. S. HOARD.

The Elliot-Brant Rancho is fitting a herd of twenty of their fine registered Guernseys to exhibit at the California State Fair, the Riverside Fair and the Los Angeles Fair. They are contemplating showing at the National Dairy Show in Chicago, if a suitable herdsman can be obtained to take the show herd East, as they have a large number of cows on official test on the ranch, and do not wish to spare any of the regular men. A full herd from aged animals to calves will be shown.

The firm of Ellenwood & Ramsey, progressive sheep herders of Red Bluff, Cal., have just received a consignment of nine Corriedale ewes and six rams from New Zealand. These were selected from four of the leading and best-known flocks of New Zealand by R. H. Harrowell, an expert in his line, and a friend of Mr. Ellenwood. Mr. Harrowell had instructions to purchase the best yearling Corriedale ram in New Zealand, and he followed instructions, but it cost the firm $1000 to get him.

Ellenwood & Ramsay are now fitting a flock of twenty-five range sheep to be taken to the annual ram sale, to be held in Salt Lake City, by the National Wool Growers' Association, from August 26 to August 29.

George A. Smith & Son, Holstein-Friesian breeders of Corcoran, are firm believers in the yearly test. Every cow that frshens is started on a year's test. At the present time there are sixty-five cows now on test for one year. Nearly all of these are two-year-old heifers with first calf. There is not a cow over 3 years sold in the herd. Four 2-year-old heifers have just completed their year's test, and estimating their milk [illegible] and handled for a big yield, nor were they milked more than twice a day. They had the ordinary herd feed and care. What they would have done had they been pushed for a high record, and milked four times a day, is, of course, hard to estimate. What such heifers will do when they reach maturity at 5 or 6 years old is also hard to say. It must be admitted that, as two-year-olds, they are wonders and will probably be heard from later.

Hereford cattle are seen on many of the hillsides and in the valleys of Southern California. R. L. English has recently purchased ten bred heifers for his ranch at Chino from W. D. Johnson & Son, Kansas City, Mo. He plans to establish one of the best Hereford herds on the Pacific Coast. He will be remembered as one of the leading exhibitors of saddle and show horses in the West.

The Pacific Coast Hereford breeders will hold a meeting during the State Fair week at Sacramento, to formulate plans for a public sale, to be held in San Francisco during the livestock show in the Bay City. John A. Buntnig, secretary of the association, states that there will be a fine exhibit of Herefords at all of the leading livestock shows on the Coast this fall.

The meeting of the Holstein Breeders which was planned to be held in Los Angeles on August 8 has been postponed, due to the fact that it was impossible for a number of the men who were invited to address the meeting to be present. It is now planned to hold the meeting during the

A NEW COW-TESTING ASSOCIATION FORMED.

SANTA ANA.—The cow boarder must go. And those cows which do not work shall not eat but shall be eaten. This is the edict of Orange county dairymen, who have just formed a co-operative cow-testing association. Sixteen dairymen are members of the association. They own 487 cows, and they have entered into an agreement with the county farm bureau for regular testing of their herds. E. S. Lewis of Los Angeles is to do the testing.

By these tests each dairyman will know which of his cows are paying their way. The cow that is not making money for him will be culled out, and the butcher will get her. The cow that is making money will continue to live in this wonderful climate in peace and contentment, and her calves will help build up the herd.

There are approximately 1500 dairy cows in Orange county, and when the result of the milk tests become known some of them will go to the slaughter house.

The sixteen dairymen forming the testing association, with the number of cows in their herds, are as follows: In Santa Ana, F. H. Finney, forty; E. W. Harmon, fifteen; H. L. Wakeham, thirty-eight; William Segerstrom, forty-five; L. Roggia Company, twenty; L. E. Platt, fifty; F. L. Franco, forty; Janus Maiola, seventeen; J. T. Raitt, forty; T. Aitken, fifteen; N. Babylon, twenty. In Anaheim, P. H. Krick, forty. In Fullerton, A. W. Purdy, sixty. In Buena Park, P Cady, twenty; David Mitchell, ten; L. N. Cookson, seventeen.

Organization of the local association was assisted by F. H. Scribner of the Los Angeles farm bureau, G. E. Gordon, assistant farm adviser of Los Angeles county, and E. S. Lewis, who will carry on the tests.

"The improvements of herds is the biggest thing in dairying," said Mr. Scribner, who recently returned from a trip East during which he bought four carloads of fancy dairy stock for the dairymen of Los Angeles and Riverside counties. "In the East, one has to use a crowbar to pry them loose from their pure-bred stock. Europe and Mexico are scouring the country for high-bred stock and prices are going up. Easterners don't want to sell to anyone. Some of them will not put prices on their stock. They know that if they sell off their best, their herds will deteriorate, and that means a big loss to them."

A few years ago dairying was a big industry in Orange county, and there were dairies all through the lowlands to the southwest. Some delivered their milk to Los Angeles, others to near-by creameries. Then the sugar factories came, and bean growing began to get a foothold in the lowlands. Prices of land became higher as beets and beans were widely planted, and almost within two years the dairying business was of little importance. Cows were sold in carload lots, many going to Tulare county and the San Joaquin Valley, and former dairy land was planted to beans and beets.

Now dairying is coming back in this locality, gradually, to be sure, but there is a noticeable enlargement of the business, and Farm Adviser Wahlberg and others in touch with the situation are confident that the dairy business will continue to grow until it is again a big industry. The recent purchase of blooded stock for the county farm, and constant enlargement of many herds in this vicinity, shows that the wind is blowing toward a bigger and better and busier milk and butter production than for several years past.

WOULD REGULATE GRAZING LANDS.

ALBUQUERQUE (N. M.)—A bill for the Federal regulation and improvement of grazing on the unappropriated public domain has been introduced in the United States Senate by Senator King, according to advices received at the local office of the Forest Service. The bill, which is very brief, provides that it is for the purpose of protecting, improving and securing the fullest possible use of the grazing lands of the United States and promoting the production of live stock. If the bill is passed, the [illegible] the unreserved unappropriated public lands chiefly valuable for grazing. The bill further provides that thereafter these so-called grazing commons shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and provides that all laws applicable to the national forests, including the distribution of moneys received, the entry and survey of agricultural homesteads, and the right to prospect for and acquire mineral lands, are made applicable to these grazing commons. Under the provisions of this bill, according to the District Forester, the States of Arizona and New Mexico would receive approximately 45 per cent. of the entire gross revenues accruing under the proposed law and other States would receive 35 per cent. This contribution would be in lieu of taxation, and would be comparable, according to Forest Service officials, to taxing a private business undertaking 25 per cent. of its gross receipts.

At a recent joint conference of representatives of the Idaho Wool Growers' Association and the Idaho Cattle and Horse Growers' Association, preliminary to the convention of the public land States held in Salt Lake City on July 21, it was unanimously decided to work for Federal control of grazing on the public domain, preferably by the Forest Service or by the Department of Agriculture.

WEED PREVENTION.

Weed prevention in alfalfa fields has become one of the pressing problems of the San Joaquin Valley rancher, indicating the necessity for care in the selection of seed; the need for a constant warfare against contamination of crop from ditch water and the necessity for neighborhood control of all roadside weed pests. Johnson grass appears to be the most troublesome of these pests and in some districts plowing and reseeding of the alfalfa tracts at frequent intervals appears to be the only remedy. In some districts ranchers are maintaining small herds of goats for the sole purpose of keeping down weed pests along irrigation ditches, a scheme which has been marked with some success.

TO SELL NOTED HERD.

The noted herd of Guernsey cattle on the Palo Alto Stock Farm at Palo Alto is to be dispersed at private sale at an early date, it is announced by President Tichenor of that firm. The establishment has grown to such an extent, it is declared, that it is no longer possible to give the herd proper attention—hence the decision to break it up. The Guernsey is increasing in popularity throughout the country and on the Pacific Coast it has been found extremely difficult to secure high-class females for foundation stock. The Palo Alto sale will place many fine animals at the disposal of would-be Guernsey buyers.

STUDIES PEAR THRIPS.

Prof. A. L. Lovett, State Entomologist for Oregon, is reviewing the pear thrips situation in California, particularly with regard to control methods which may be applicable against the pest in Oregon. He has made an extensive survey of the pear orchards in Santa Clara and Contra Costa.

The Poland China breeders of the San Joaquin Valley recently held an organization meeting at Lodi. It was decided to hold a public sale of bred sows, gilts and boars on September 19.

M. C. Allen of the Winsor Ranch, Bonita, recently purchased a number of fine registered Jersey cows as the nucleus of a large dairy herd. Registered Duroc swine and Jersey cattle will be bred exclusively on this ranch hereafter.

GETTING BETTER ACQUAINTED WITH THE LITTLE ROCK-PALMDALE PEAR.

LITTLE ROCK.—Attracting an attendance of more than five hundred growers and visitors from all parts of the county, the Farm Bureau Pear Day celebration held at Little Rock on August 2 was a success in every sense of the word. Although but the second undertaking of the kind, the first Pear Day festivities having been inaugurated last year in the midst of war activities, the large attendance and interest shown in this year's celebration bid fair to make it an annual event. Farm Bureau Pear Day may well be said to mark the beginning of a phenomenal development in pear raising in the Little Rock-Palmdale district, coming as it did just preceding the beginning of work on the new irrigation district, intended to supplement and reinforce the modern and efficient pumping plants owned by growers of the region and which is certain to bring with it a rapid extension of planting.

The main purpose of the festivities was, of course, to bring to the attention of residents in Los Angeles county and Southern California in general some of the peculiarly unique advantages of this section for the raising of pears, advantages received as a gift of nature and which are bound to ultimately make this fertile desert region a center for raising this delicious fruit.

For those characteristics which make California pre-eminent among pear-growing States are present in the Little Rock-Palmdale section to a most remarkable degree. To the world-famous California climate must be attributed her supremacy in pear production. Chief among the climatic factors operative in producing this supremacy comes our dry summer heat which makes it not only possible but profitable to fight blight—that nightmare of the pear grower—and to do it successfully. This same world-famous summer climate serves to produce a fruit unrivalled in the world in quality and imparts to it a capacity for successful storage and shipment to long distances possessed by but few other fruits. As a result, California produces two-thirds of the nation's pear output.

Of all the California pear growing districts it is probably safe to say that the Little Rock-Palmdale section possesses these valuable qualities to the most remarkable degree. Nestled in the fertile alluvial fan belt region of the east slope of the Sierra Madre Mountains, on the edge of the Antelope Valley, this section is protected from the prevailing winds of the farther out sections, yet still experiences that rare combination of summer heat, atmospheric humidity, and altitude, so necessary to produce fruit of the highest eating quality and carrying capacity.

KEEPING QUALITIES.

For the Little Rock pear, practically seedless, is famous for its eating quality and its ability to stand up and keep under storage conditions. Pears from this section have successfully vied with the local grown product even in European markets. In the past, practically the entire crop has been marketed as a Christmas cold storage product—proof positive of special keeping qualities.

With favorable climatic conditions conducive to the production of fruit of the highest quality and exceptionally large quantities, with large areas of virgin soil remaining still untouched, with plenty of water developed under its newly organized irrigation district, and with marketing facilities well provided for, the Little Rock-Palmdale section is bound to become one of the most important centers of pear production in the United States.

Problems there are yet to be solved, to be sure, but they are problems capable of satisfactory solution and worthy to challenge the best brains. They include the questions of the maintenance of soil fertility, the working out of a pruning system best calculated to avoid breakage under wind and the avoidance of infectious blight, and these and other problems are still to be finally worked out to the most satisfactory conclusion.

The pear will always be a popular favorite. There is practically no wastage in handling the fruit. It can be shipped fresh, dried, canned, or preserved. The cores and peelings and unmarketable cull fruits can be made into vinegar. "Perry," a choice drink similar to cider, made from the crushed cull fruit furnishes a desirable outlet for unmarketable stuff. Used in so many ways, a popular favorite among Americans, and with production limited to but comparatively few sections, pear growing in the Little Rock-Palmdale section may reasonably be expected to have a rosy future.

NEW WATER SUPPLY.

The new Little Rock-Palmdale irrigation district, upon which construction work will soon be under way, will contain approximately 3500 acres. Water will be supplied from a reservoir formed by the erection of a mammoth dam in Little Rock creek canyon which will impound some 9250 acre feet of water, or nearly three acre feet for each acre in the district, an ample supply for all purposes. The cost of construction is estimated at approximately $300,000, but water will thereby be supplied growers at an average cost of less than half that paid by citrus growers on the other side of the Sierra Madre Mountains. This water supply will suffice for all future needs of the district, including domestic, intercropping and cover crops. The dam site and the form of structure have been approved by the State Railroad Commission and by the State Department of Engineering, and the districts hope to break ground in the fall or winter of 1919. This dam, of a height of 150 feet above the surface of the stream, will form a beautiful mountain lake of several miles in length which, doubtless, will be one of the objective points of Sunday auto parties by way of Mint Canyon boulevard.

New roads under construction or planned for and which will materially aid in the development of the section include one to be built under county authority in the new valley system of modern roads, namely a macadam highway running from the Mint Canyon boulevard at Palmdale, through the heart of Little Rock Creek Irrigation district to the Big Rock Creek settlements, some twelve miles easterly. Construction is expected to begin in 1920. This project was started in 1917, but was delayed on account of the war. The San Gabriel mountain highway, now building out of Azusa, will join the road above referred to, at a point about midway between the Little Rock and Big Rock setlements. It will be some time before this road will reach the valley, but on its completion visitors may come to Little Rock by way of Azusa through some of the most magnificent mountain scenery in the West, going home in the evening by the easier way of the Mint Canyon boulevard.

BRING GOOD RETURNS.

Pear growing has been found to be extremely lucrative in the Little Rock section, as indicated by a survey recently made. Bearing orchards have recently sold at prices ranging from $800 to $1150 per acre. One young orchard of 160 acres recently was sold at $350 per acre, spot cash.

For the season of 1918 five orchards were averaged, and it was found that the owners got for their pear crops of that year above $500 per acre each. One orchard not included in the foregoing is said by its owner to have produced at the rate of $1400 per acre. One acre of old trees holds the record at $2000. Good and intelligent care here, as elsewhere, is the measure of production.

Figures show that a good Bartlett pear orchard in Little Rock is a better money maker than many an orange grove south of the Sierra Madre range.

It was for the purpose of driving these facts home to the rest of the county that the local Farm Bureau center, under the able leadership of Director W. J. Kling, decided to hold the second Pear Day celebration. An invitation to be present and see what is being done in the way of development was therefore extended to everybody. When lunch was served under the grateful shade of spreading umbrella trees on the place of J. P. Glendenning, just north of town, more than one hundred automobiles could be counted lined up outside.

PEAR DAY SUCCESS.

Following the lunch, a short programme of speaking was held. Farm Advisor Hodgson spoke on farm bureau work in general, and in Los Angeles county in particular, assuring the local center of the interest and backing of the county organization, and its board of directors. Horticultural Commissioner Ryan addressed the gathering on the new fruit and vegetable standardization act which will vitally affect growers in the section now that shipments East are contemplated and planned for this season. Out of a total of some hundred cars for this season's crop, the Pacific Fruit Exchange expects to ship approximately thirty-five cars to eastern markets.

Dr. J. C. Whitten, head of the Division of Pomology at the State College of Agriculture, was the speaker of the day and delivered a splendid address on the pear industry of the United States with special reference to advantages possessed by California and specially the Little Rock-Palmdale district. He also discussed some of the cultural problem still unsolved.

Following the programme, the remainder of the day was spent in sightseeing trips through the district and the celebration ended with a dance at Palmdale in the evening. All who attended went away with the feeling that pear growing in this section is an attractive and lucrative business. Much credit for the success of the day is due to W. J. Kling, director of the local farm bureau center, J. W. Scott, chairman of the publicity committee, W. C. Petchner and J. P. Glendenning for unselfish expenditure of time and effort, and to the good ladies who so ably served the excellent lunch.

ALFALFA LEAF SPOT APPEARS IN FIELDS.

In some of the alfalfa fields, leaf spot has made its appearance. Leaf spot is caused by a fungus which lives over the winter in the fields, usually on dead leaves and branches. Although it has given little trouble as yet, this is one of the most serious of alfalfa diseases and should be checked in time by a change in irrigation methods.

There are two characteristics of leaf spot, one being a small circular yellowish spot; the other is distinguished by a raised disc in the center of the spot. Leaf spot causes loss when the fields are over-irrigated, especially in cloudy weather. The source of infestation still furnishes an interesting problem and methods of control have not been fully worked out.

Ordinarily, the average annual egg production of small flocks of hens is ten dozen eggs per hen.

PEANUTS VALUABLE HOME GARDEN CROP.

A row of peanuts in the home or farm garden, providing the soil is friable enough for the penetration of the pistils, will produce valuable food and enrich the soil. James A. Denham, South Park avenue and Thirty-second street, Los Angeles, in his vacant lot garden, has raised two forty-foot rows of peanuts for many years, and considers them one of the most valuable crops in his selection of wholesome edibles. The soil in Mr. Denham's garden is a sandy loam, quite light, and the tips of the pistils which grow downward into the soil and produce the nuts find easy going.

Mr. Denham sows two or three peanut seeds in each hill, a foot apart, in rows three feet apart. About thirty-five pounds of peanuts in the hulls plant an acre. The straw is valuable as stock feed. From 1100 to 1800 pounds of peanuts to the acre is the usual crop on fairly soft land. Many ranchers plant peanuts as an intercrop in orchards, but not enough of the goobers are raised in Southern California to supply the local demand.

Home gardener says peanut raising is easy.

FUMIGATION FOR DATES.

The Coachella Valley Date Growers' Association has purchased a vacuum fumigation machine, for use in their new packing house at Indio, upon recommendation of D. B. Mackie, entomologist of the new State Department of Agriculture. This machine destroys infestation or infection in one hour's time. It is stated that the Coachella date harvest this year will be approximately twice as large as any other harvest in that region. Prices for fresh California dates still range high, those who are fond of them paying 80 cents to $1 per pound for the best varieties.

UNITED STATES DOMINATES THE WORLD IN SWINE PRODUCTION.

WASHINGTON (D. C.)—The United States contains considerably more than one-third of all the swine in the world. Swine are less numerous than either sheep or cattle in the world at large, but are more numerous than either in the United States, which this year has more hogs than its ten nearest competitors combined.

These facts showing the vast extent of the American hog growing industry are cited by Dr. J. R. Mohler, chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, as "an anchor of confidence for weathering periods of adversity in pork production." He concludes that pork products have become as well established in the diet of the American people as hogs have become established on farms, and that as more than two-thirds of the total 1918 exports of meat were pork products and more than five-sixths of the animal fats exported were lard, there is a great potential pork-absorbing ability in the densely populated European countries.

"We must take care of that business properly and realize that conditions are constantly changing both at home and abroad," says Dr. Mohler. "We must study carefully what to do next and then to do it promptly."

Latest reports from department representatives in Europe indicate that pork importation by the United Kingdom may be considerably smaller in the future than during the war, price being an important factor. In general, it appears that American fresh pork products have met with favor on the British markets, but there is room for improvement in the curing of hams and bacon. It is reported from France that the swine industry there decreased most rapidly between 1913 and 1916, but the decrease since 1916 has been comparatively small. Rapid recuperation seems possible with a good grain and potato crop this year and a continuation of present high prices. While the best grades of American hams and bacon met with French approval, it is said that these products are too expensive for the average French family. It is not likely that France will import breeding swine to any large extent, although continued importations of meats and fats are expected.

South America, on the other hand, is imporing swine from the United States with considerable regularity. Since the first of this year there have been seven purchases and shipments ranging from about thirty to seventy head each of pure-bred stock for breeding, in addition to a number of smaller shipments.

A good type of sire.

REPLACING INFERIOR SIRES.

"The most recent activity of the department likely to affect the swine industry, as well as other live stock, is the proposed new plan for hastening the replacement of inferior sires by good pure breds. Early in June an outline of the plan was mailed to about 1200 prominent breeders, live stock officials and extension workers, soliciting their comments before the campaign is definitely launched. Briefly, the plan includes recognition for the owners of purebred sires of the main classes of live stock, namely, cattle, horses, swine, sheep, goats and poultry. The recognition will take the form of a printed emblem bearing the breeder's name and which he may display. We feel that this plan will considerably hasten live-stock improvement in the United States and discourage the use of inferior sires. 'Inferior sires' include inferior pure breds as well as scrubs. In a few months the campaign is expected to take definite form."

Other principal policies of the Bureau of Animal Industry relating to swine are the following:

Improvement in quality and uniformity through the use of good, pure-bred breeding stock, especially sires.

Encouragement of swine shows and exhibits, swine judging, pig-club work, community breeding, and similar activities.

Proper supervision of feeder and stocker hogs redistributed from market centers for additional feeding.

Effective supervision of the manufacture and distribution in interstate commerce of anti-hog cholera serum and virus to insure the purity and potency of those products.

Immunization of valuable swine, especially breeding stock, against hog cholera. Immunization of market hogs at an age depending on local conditions; also the immunization of swine introduced into a herd where all the animals have not been vaccinated.

Suppression of tuberculosis in hogs by eradicating that disease from cattle which the hogs follow, and also from dairy cows whose milk is fed to hogs as skim milk, whey, or in other form.

Control of internal and external parasites on hogs through use of sanitary precautions, suitable disinfectants and general care.

Sanitary housing, and careful studies of feeding for the purpose of making gains conducive to producing pork at a low net cost.

Improved methods of slaughtering hogs and curing pork for home use.

[illegible] for practical breeding.

Farrowing of fall pigs in Northern States not later than October 1.

Raising two litters of pigs a year from matured sows in Southern States and also in Northern States under favorable conditions of care and housing.

Continuous feeding and breeding experiments accompanied by prompt announcement and publication of noteworthy results.

Compilation of statistics and meat-inspection data governing number, weight, dressed percentage, and other useful information regarding pork production and consumption.

COST DISTRIBUTION IN PORK PRODUCTION.

Weather conditions, which are so great a factor in the production of pork in the Middle West, do not trouble the California swine raiser who has natural shade or a brush ramada or two for the hogs in summer. Even in the Imperial Valley, where the hogs sometimes encounter 120 degrees in the summer, seem to thrive if they have shade and a wallow.

This factor eliminated, the pork producer can more or less accurately gauge the cost of a pound of pork. Tests conducted at Davis and El Centro virtually agree as to the distribution of costs, which are as follows: Feed costs, 83 per cent.; labor 10, per cent; vaccination 3 per cent; interest on investment, 2 per cent.; equipment, 1 per cent.; miscellaneous, 1 per cent. Labor was charged at 30 cents an hour; grain at $2.60 per hundred; tankage, $100 per ton, oil meal at $60 per ton and semi-solid buttermilk, $80 per ton.

CORNSTALK BORER.

The second generation of the larger cornstalk borer of the South Atlantic States passes the winter only in the corn roots. The injury is worst where corn follows corn, so rotation of crops will help to destroy the pest.

COWS DEMAND BALANCED FEED; DON'T SKIMP.

The cow requires not only materials for maintenance, but bossy must also have protein, fat and carbohydrates from which to make milk. Milk contains water, fat, protein, sugar and ash, and these are all made from the constituents of the food given the cow. If the farmer does not provide sufficient protein, fat and carbohydrates in the food given her the cow supplies this deficiency for a time by drawing on her own body, and the milk gradually begins to shrink in quantity or quality, or both. The stingy feeder cheats himself as well as the cow.

HOPE TO INCREASE OUTPUT OF PORK.

Increasing the output of pork, rather than increase in the mere number of hogs, will be the chief object of the newly organized Fresno District Duroc-Jersey Swine Breeders' Association, according to the newly elected officers. These are: J. Walter Schmitz of Madera, president; H. E. Spires of Caruthers, vice-president; H. H. Prereton, Sanger, secretary-treasurer, and these with C. G. McClune of Fresno and Charles Hubbard of Riverdale will make up the board of directors.

To hold sales at which only the highest grade of purebred stock will be offered; to prevent illegitimate operations or misrepresentations of stock and to combine for the solution of the various problems of the industry, are given as among the chief objects of the association.

Potato acreage is estimated as about the same as last year in Arizona, being about 5000 acres. Condition July 1 was about 91 per cent. with crop forecast of 555,000 bushels.

MANY MORE ENTRIES FOR TRACTOR SHOW.

On August 9, five weeks in advance of the opening of the Fourth Annual Southern California Tractor Demonstration, thirty-five large tractor dealers and manufacturers had made formal application for space in the big Hollywood field, where the farm power exposition is to be held. In addition to these, it was stated that space in the mammoth accessories tent had almost all been taken, and that three large implement firms had arranged to erect large tents for the most comprehensive display of farm tools ever held in this section of the country.

President H. L. Marsh of the Tractor Dealers' Association stated that all indications pointed to a show that would excel in every way the huge demonstration held last fall. A feature will be made of operation of farm machinery with the tractor. What the farm motor can do in helping the chore-boy and farmer's wife, and in doing quickly and efficiently the hundred-and-one jobs about the farm, will be shown. In point of educational interest it promises to surpass any agricultural show ever held in Southern California.

Dynamometer tests were made recently at the field, an International tractor pulling [illegible] in the field at [illegible] avenues is about the same as that at La Brea avenue and Wilshire boulevard last year; that is, the pull was about 1100 pounds for each twelve-inch plow set ten inches deep. In some parts of the field the pull was but 1000 pounds, and in others 1200 pounds.

The New 16-Valve
Twin City Tractor
Pays Big Dividends

For the first time in the history of the tractor industry, the 4-cylinder, 16-valve engine (valve in head type) is now applied to a tractor. THE TWIN CITY 12-20 with its 16-valve motor actually develops 25% more than its rated horse power.

This new 12-20 is a light-weight tractor that will out-pull, out-last and out-dividend other tractors of equal rating.

Not built down to a price, but built up to a fixed ideal—to do the work assigned to it better than it has ever been done before.

The highest grade tractor will unfailingly prove the least expensive and pay the biggest dividends.

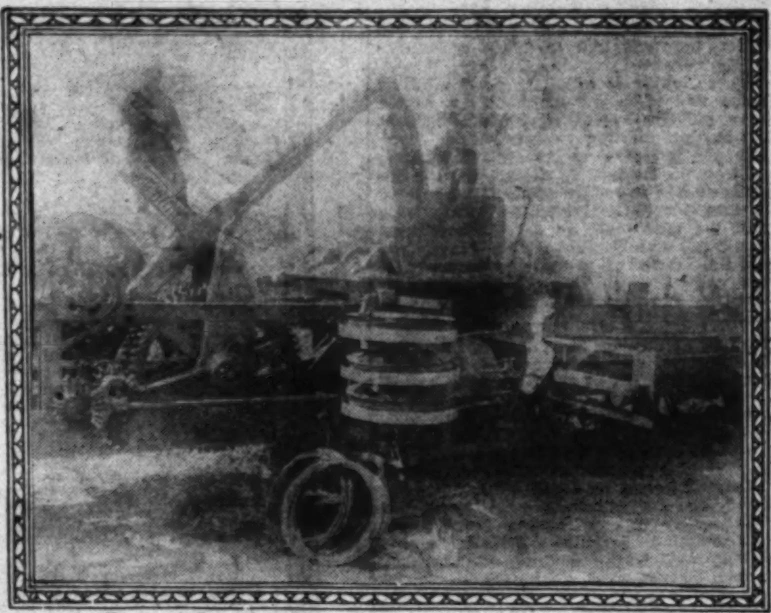
SIZE OF PULLEYS IN TRACTOR BELT WORK.

When the tractor is put to cutting silage, baling hay, grinding feed, pumping, running a saw or any other belt operation, care should be taken to get the right size pulley for the particular job. Much depends on the accuracy with which the computation of the size of the pulley is made.

In belt operations, the tractor should be run at its rated speed, and no faster. If it is desired to find the size of a pulley for a certain belt operation, multiply the diameter of the tractor pulley in inches by the normal speed of the tractor pulley, and divide by the speed at which the machine should run.

By the belt speed is meant the speed of a belt in feet per minute.



Fingers of steel poke in the baling wire and tie the bales.

TRACTOR ROW NOTES.

W. L. Cleveland has returned from an extensive trip in the East and Middle West. He viewed the National tractor demonstration at Wichita, Kan., reporting the show for The Times Farm and Tractor Section. Mr. Cleveland stated that the farmers of the Middle West are more enthusiastic than ever over tractors and their work.

Manager Hansen of the E. P. Bosbyshell Company during a recent trip East arranged with the Bain Wagon Company of Kenosha, Wis., to handle their line of hay presses for all of California south of San Luis Obispo.

It is stated by President H. L. March of the Traction Engine and Implement Dealers' Association of Southern California that the representation of accessory men at the coming tractor demonstration will be large, and that many new wrinkles in tractor accessories will be shown.

W. W. Rainey, Avery Company, on his return from a trip to the Imperial Valley last week, stated that, even in August, the hotels of El Centro were full to overflowing, and farmers were preparing to put several thousand acres of new land into cultivation. He said there may be about ten times the usual acreage of lettuce in the valley this fall, this lettuce to be followed by two crops in the same year, barley and then milo.

WEAK VALVE SPRINGS.

A weak or broken valve spring may cause irregular firing or lack of power in a tractor engine. When covers are removed, a broken spring may be easily detected, but the weak spring must be located by putting more tension on the springs, one at a time, while the motor is running. Place a screw driver or similar object between the coils of the spring and push the spring towards the retainer end. If the engine picks up, the spring should be replaced with a new one. Be sure, however, that the valve works freely and is not badly worn before changing the spring.

SELF-TIEING BALER SAVES WORK ON FARM.

Six years ago, while Roy M. Mowry of Los Angeles was busily engaged in baling a hay crop, he became convinced that there were too many men working on his hay baler, and that the work of at least two men could be dispensed with if he could arrange an automatic device for tieing the bale wire. He set to work. The product of six years of thought and experiment, a self-tieing hay baler, is now being operated on a San Fernando Valley ranch, and Mr. Mowry and associates have formed the Mowry Machinery Manufacturing Company for the purpose of building a factory near Los Angeles and putting out the new labor-saving machines in quantity. The company is now located temporarily at 2718 Central avenue, Los Angeles.

Mr. Mowry claims that his new hay baler will eliminate the work of one man to poke in the wire and another to tie the bale. The feeder just pulls a lever and lets it go again, and the poking and tying is done pronto. The new attachment, Mr. Mowry says, increases the capacity of the baler, and makes a better bale.

CODLIN MOTH ACTIVE IN WALNUT GROVES.

D. B. Mackie, field deputy of the State Horticultural Commission, finds the codlin moth more firmly established in the walnut groves than they were last season, and is co-operating with H. J. Quail of Riverside, entomologist of the California College of Agriculture and Carlyle Thorpe, president of the California Walnut Growers' Association, in control measures.

The increased activity of the moth is shown in the dropping of wormy nuts, and in larvae found in field boxes, sacks and other material. All of the association packing-houses will be equipped with the electric mangles for destroying codlin moth larvae in stacks before the end of July and the work of control in orchards is progressing satisfactorily.

One queer feature of the outbreak is that the pest found in walnut groves does not attack apple trees, as shown in the case of areas on the Cudahy ranch, where walnut and apple orchards are contiguous to each other. The walnut trees are badly infested, but the apples are unharmed. It is suggested that the moth has found a more agreeable food in the walnuts and has altogether abandoned the apple diet, at least in so far as Southern California is concerned.

Spraying in the orchard with lead arsenate and kaolin has been found effective by Prof. Quail.

"MORE WHEAT" CAMPAIGN.

The Sperry Flour Company, through its agricultural department, is launching a big campaign to farther increase the production of wheat in California. The campaign will be similar in character to that carried on by the ocmpany last year and will be in charge of George R. McLeod. Weekly bulletins reviewing the grain situation and discussing various phases of wheat culture will be sent out to large numbers of farmers, a great many growers will be interviewed and questions by growers will be answered. A bulletin issued on August 15 discusses the world's markets, showing the probable future values of coarse grains with especial reference to wheat and barley. Another, to come out August 22, will [illegible] of California soils for wheat. A bulletin to come out [illegible] will discuss Early Baart and [illegible] wheats, while a September 12 bulletin will go into the preparation of the soil for wheat, discussing the value of summer fallow, early planting, elimination of weeds and other problems of the wheat grower. The September 12 bulletin will cover the treatment of seed wheat for smut and the selection of seed.

AFTER ARIZONA PESTS.

During the month of June 13,250 quarts of poisoned grain were distributed over 42,141 acres of Arizona ranges and ranches by the Biological Survey, Agricultural Extension Service and live-stock forces engaged co-operatively in the big State drive against noxious rodent pests.

SOME UNDESIRABLE PLANT IMMIGRANTS.

BY GEORGE L. MOXLEY.

Not all the immigrants that come into a new country are of human-kind, nor are they all animals. Plants move into new territory as well as animals, although they do not have the power of locomotion. They come by ship, in the ballast; by railroad train, in hay or grain; clinging by hooks or bristles to the coats of animals and men; or, developing wings or parachutes, they float on the breeze. Some of these immigrant plants seem able to overcome and crowd out those that have hitherto occupied the land and take possession. Probably the reason, or one of the reasons, for this is that their natural enemies have been left behind and, in the new environment, they have free opportunity for development. Many introduced plants of Southern California have been here so long that we accept them almost as natives, but others have come comparatively recently and it is of some of these latter that I write.

The so-called Russian thistle, Salsola tragus L., is one of the immigrant weeds that seems to be spreading in some localities, the San Fernando Valley, for instance, and should be carefully exterminated. It is of the "tumble weed" conformation which gives it an excellent chance to scatter its seed far and wide. The young plant is tender and succulent in appearance and would hardly be suspected of becoming such a hard and thorny bush as results from its further growth. There is, however, less danger of its becoming a real menace in this section than might be if there were more grain and less fruit and cultivated crops grown.

Of the mustard family there are two weeds of rather recent introduction. One, Brassica adpressa Moench, flowers throughout the year and has already become quite a nuisance. It was first noted at Los Angeles by Dr. A. Davidson in 1909, arresting his attention by being still in flower in late autumn in unirrigated ground. It has spread throughout the valley and to other localities, so that it is now quite a common plant. It may be distinguished from the common mustard, Brassica nigra (L.) Koch, in several ways. Its habit of growth is low and rounded-bushy, freely branching from the base. The principal leaves are basal, deeply lobed and covered with a short pubescence which gives them a soft and downy appearance. The flowers are somewhat lighter in shade than the hillside mustard and the seed pods are quite closely appressed to the stem.

The other mustard, Sisymbrium altissimum L., is stiffly erect from the base, freely branching above, the branches standing out rigidly from the stem. The leaves are deeply incised into linear lobes and in the upper leaves the lobes are extremely narrow and threadlike, giving the entire plant a rather skeletonlike appearance. The flowers are almost white and the petals quite narrow. The pods are long and slender. Once known, the plant need never be mistaken for any other. This plant was first noted locally in Hollywood, in 1910, and is now pretty well distributed.

The prickly lettuce, Lactuca scariola L., is a weed that has spread with great rapidity. There are two forms to be noted, differing chiefly in their leaves. The typical form has deeply sinuate-pinnatifid leaves, while the variety integrata Gren. & Gord. has leaves which are usually nearly entire in outline with a toothed margin. Both forms are usually stiffly erect at first, later branching above the frequently branching from near the base. The leaves often stand vertically, thus presenting both surfaces to the light, and, by a turn in the midrib, point in the general direction of north and south, thus earning for the plant the name of Compass plant. The whole stem of the plant, as well as the midrib of the leaves, is usually covered with rather stiff, herbaceous spines. The variety apparently landed in Southern California first and was well distributed before the typical form arrived. The latter was first noticed by the writer in the summer of 1914, first in Los Angeles and later in Orange county. It has spread with such rapidity that it is now about as frequent as the variety and both are widely distributed.

Another composite that may possibly prove undesirable is the Bugloss, or bristly Ox tongue, Picris echioides L. It is an erect, branching, leafy herb, reaching a height of two to three feet. The basal and lower leaves are spatulate or oblong, rather sinuate-dentate, and harsh with bristly hairs, as is the entire plant. The yellow flower heads are subtended by rather leafy bracts. The seeds are short-beaked and have a pappus of plumos bristles. The plant has been observed by the writer in widely separated places around Los Angeles, notably Colegrove, Dominguez Junction, Florence and in 1915 I noticed a large patch covering almost a city block near York boulevard.

A thistle that may be somewhat of a weed is the "milk thistle," so called from its large white-blotched leaves, which are very characteristic. It is an annual or biennial, growing from two to six feet high and freely flowering. I first noticed one or two growing along the street as early as 1910, although it may have been introduced much earlier, and have since seen it in many places. There was, in 1915, a large patch at the corner of Long Beach and Florence avenues and I called the attention of the Horticultural Commission to it. I was assured that it was not likely to become a dangerous weed, as it is usually an annual. However, I have noticed that it is one of the thistle included in the "Thistle Act of 1890" by the government of Victoria, Australia, which act made it mandatory upon the farmers to eradicate the thistles mentioned, and the government went so far as to publish an illustrated pamphlet describing the plants to be destroyed. So it would be quite the safe plan to root out this weed wherever found.

BIG PEACH HARVEST.

MENTONE.—The harvesting of the big peach crop for this section is well under way and indications that a crop of more than a quarter million dollars in value will be handled this year. Peaches will bring $80, the best of them, and the worst will bring more than half or that. The big 200-acre orchard of the Mentone Heights orchards near here is a busy place and the packing of these peaches for the early eastern market has given employment to hundreds of people. The company will take at least 1100 tons of fruit off the 21,000 trees this year, the first year they have been in bearing to a great extent. The fruit is fine, grown in the lower foothills where the temperature is sharp enough to put a real peach bloom in the fruit. The company has over a hundred acres planted to the Hale variety of peach, which has been found to be the best in keeping qualities and in flavor. This crop is now ripening and will soon be ready for harvest. It is estimated that during the thinning period more than 2000 tons of fruit were taken off the trees or twice what was left on them. The canneries of this section are beginning to can peaches now and they will soon be working three shifts of eight hours each, day and night. A large amount of peach pulp will also be canned.

Garden pests delight in rubbish piles, dark carners, and the cool and under side of boards. Clean up and avoid the bugs and worms

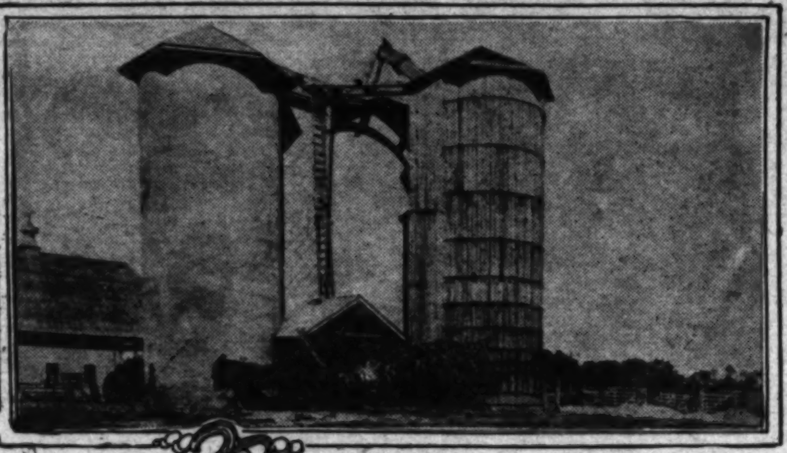
SILAGE A FORM OF INSURANCE.

The time has arrived for filling silos and for rushing additional ones if more space is needed. Materials are high. It may be a question with the individual farmer whether he can afford to build a silo this year. Many men, however, may be inclined to give too much weight to construction cost and not enough to silage value.

Statistics show that the percentage of profitable herds is almost three times as high among herds that are fed on silage as among herds that are not fed silage.

While there may be some possible question as to the economy of putting up silos under extreme high places, there can be no question about the economy of filling to capacity those that are already up.

Every man who has a silo should aim to put up enough silage to cover all emergencies, winter and summer. In Southern California the silo yields in winter the feed needed to supplement growing forage in an "off" season. In summer it may prove a saving factor in a critical feed situation, for even in the best of pasture regions droughts cut feed supplies short. When this happens the stuff in the silo may prove a life saver.



Well-constructed silos filled for winter and summer.

WINE GRAPES BOUGHT.

PORTERVILLE — Independent raisin men have been active in the San Joaquin Valley during the past few weeks, and according to statements issued by them, have contracted for the delivery of fully 60 per cent. of the normal output of wine grapes, running to several thousands of tons, which will be shipped as dried black grapes. Cut out of the muscat raisin market by the 90 per cent. control which is held by the California Associated Raisin Company, the independents have turned their attention to the wine grape vineyards and it will not be surprising if practically the entire production for the season will be handled by them.

Earlier in the season there was some discussion of handling this crop as green fruit, a possible 6000 cars, but many of the shippers considered this a heavy gamble and only a few cars of the green fruit, it is stated now, will be handled. The dried product, it is said, will command a price upwards from 8 cents per pound.

One of the needs of large cities in the West is public stockyards.

WESTERN DISTILLATE PROVES A BOOM TO USERS OF TRACTORS.

"THERE is one great reason why the tractor has come to stay on western farms," said an eminent engineer in the employ of one of the large oil companies; "that reason is western distillate." This expert elaborated on his point, reminding his interviewer of the vast oil resources of California and of the new oil fields being developed constantly and new gushers brought in every month.

"The farm power problem will always be a question of costs. With constant improvements in tractors and greater tractor production in quantity, the time is not far distant when the cost of a tractor will be less than the cost of raising a horse or mule. Then the problem will simmer down to a question of which will plow more land, a gallon of distillate or its economic equivalent in horse feed, and the chances are greatly in favor of the gallon of distillate."

Tractor manufacturers, in an effort to cheapen the cost of tractor work, have designed special carburetors and motors to use low-grade fuels. Many tractors use kerosene. Many others still require the use of gasoline. Western distillate, which is produced cheaply from California crudes, is not in general use east of the Rockies, largely because of the cost of transporting this fuel over the range. But California tractor users have at their very doors a cheap, efficient fuel. The Baume gravity of distillate is higher than that of kerosene and there is not so much difficulty in starting tractors burning distillate.

Many tractors using gasoline on Southern California farms may be converted into distillate burners with the addition of a fuel warming device, many of which are on sale. A small tank of gasoline for starting is also an excellent thing to install on the tractor if the operator desires to change from gasoline to distillate. When the motor is warmed up no difficulty usually will be experienced in starting again, if the engine is stopped for an hour or so. The wholesale cost of distillate is a little more than half that of gasoline, and tests have proven that a gallon of distillate will do as much work on the farm as a gallon of gasoline, provided that the tractor carburetor is properly adjusted and fitted to handle the cheaper fuel.

One difficulty in the burning of distillate and kerosene fuels in tractors and automobiles is the greater deposit of carbon in the cylinders and consequent preignition and pounding and interference with proper valve operation results.

Automobile engineers have proven that this tendency of low-grade fuels to coat the cylinder walls and combustion chamber with carbon is not usually the fault of the low-grade fuels alone, but it is the result of a failure to recognize the relation between kerosene and distillate and lubricating oils.

These low-grade oils have a high boiling point, and when the motor is not heated to a sufficient point to produce efficient combustion the fog produced from distillate and kerosene unites with lubricating oil to make carbon. If the gases were discharged into the outer atmosphere, instead of into a cylinder lubricated with certain oils, the gas would so expand that there would not be any carbon. The gases striking the lubricated cylinder walls condense and cut the lubricating oil, destroying its viscosity and producing carbon.

MERCED DISTRICT PLAN PROGRESSING.

MERCED.—Initial steps toward the formation of the Merced Irrigation District, to be composed of 181,120 acres of farming land in Merced county, were taken August 4 when a petition bearing more than 2000 signatures of land owners was presented to the Board of Supervisors of Merced county. When definitely formed, as it is believed it will be, the district will be the second largest in California, being exceeded in area only by Imperial Valley. The boundaries will include the richest farming lands in Merced county.

Under the plans of the water experts, the water will be stored by Dry Creek. It is also the plan to purchase the Carter-Hoffman Irrigation district, a private corporation, which supplies more than 39,000 acres of land in this section. The facilities for storing water at Dry Creek have been pronounced by various experts to be among the best, if not the best, along the Sierra foothills. State Engineer W. F. McClure and Federal Engineer Frank Adams both assisted the Merced Irrigation Committee in an advisory way throughout the preliminary investigation as to the feasibility of the proposed district and made favorable reports. City Engineer O'Shaughnessy of San Francisco looked over and made a report upon Dry Creek with a view to providing storage water for th ecity and county of San Francisco. He, too, reported favorably.

The undertaking to form the Merced district had its inception at a meeting of the directors of the Merced county farm bureau in September of 1917. At that time the director from Stevenson, A. H. Poore, requested the aid of the bureau to compel the East Side Canal and Water Company to obey an order of the Railroad Commission to clean out the sand from the head of its main canal, thereby permitting more water to flow down the ditch for use in Stevenson colony. Director at Large E. G. Adams of Livingston suggested that the people of Stevenson were pursuing the wrong course in attempting to compel a private company to improve irrigation facilities and that they should instead form an irrigation district and take over the system of the East Side Company. As a result of the discussion on that day, an irrigation committee of the farm bureau was appointed and asked to make investigations and report on recommendations for the formation of one or more districts.

The first plan considered was a district intending to serve the territories covered by the Crocker Company and the East Side corporation. At another meeting in November the committee asked that it be enlarged and following favorable action, Adams and McClure were asked to look over the situation. The first recommendation of McClure and Adams was that the idea of one district to supply both the Stevenson colony and the territory served by the Crocker Company should be abandoned and that efforts should be confined in an attempt to form a district to replace the Crocker-Huffman Company.

Throughout 1918 the Merced Irrigation district, which was formed in January of last year, continued its efforts in the direction of the original plans, one result being the bill introduced by Senator J. L. C. Irwin of Hanford providing that the vote necessary to organize irrigation districts be reduced from two-thirds to a majority. The passage of the bill spelled defeat for factions opposing the Merced Irrigation district and paved way for final action on the matter. Opponents of the district became discouraged in their efforts to block the project and closed their Merced headquarters.

Among the sidelights on the fight that was waged in Merced was the attempted formation of four small irrigation districts within the large one. These were represented to be pumping plant propositions. One was in the Plainsburg district, another in the Marin district and the two others in the Bloss section. However, the four-district plan fell through nearly as quickly as was started.

According to the final plans of the Merced district, the boundaries are as follows: Beginning at Lake Yosemite, five miles northeast of Merced, running in a general southeasterly direction to a point one mile southeast of Le Grande, where it crosses the Santa Fe Railroad, then runs in a general westerly direction about eighteen miles to a point due south of Atwater, or ten miles southwest of Merced. Here it jogs north four miles, then west six and a half miles, then northwest six miles to the east line of the famous American vineyard, or the extreme west point of the district. With the exception of one or two jogs the line then follows the Merced River upward some fifteen miles to the [illegible] [illegible], where it turns south eight or nine miles to a point two miles from Merced, thence north again and easterly to the point of beginning. Included in the district are the towns of Merced, Planada, Le Grande, Plainsburg, Atwater, Winton, Cressey and Livingston.

FIG PRICES HIGHEST KNOWN.

Prices for figs, in line with other dried fruits, continue to rule at the highest levels ever known in the history of the industry, Calimyrnas bringing the growers from 18 to 22 cents a pound. Adriatics are worth 15 and 16 cents, while Black Missions bring 11 to 14 cents a pound. Kadotas, fresh, for preserving, have been selling for 9 cents per pound on board the cars, which means a fortune for the grower lucky enough to have any considerable quantity of this variety.—[Fig and Olive Journal.

MOSAIC DISEASE CAUSES LOSSES.

A report from Modesto under date of July 16 says: "Profs. W. T. Horne and G. W. Woodworth have diagnosed the disease which is destroying about half of this year's cantaloupe crop in this county as mosaic, a plant malady common to tobacco."

CONTROL OF PESTS IN SANTA BARBARA.

Practically all the walnut acreage in Santa Barbara county has been dusted for walnut aphis, and all the acreage infested with the walnut worm has been dusted for this pest also. The results from this work are even more gratifying than was expected, the walnut aphis being practically eliminated in the groves of the county. While it is yet early to judge the results of the work on walnut worm the effect of the first dusting, at least, shows that in orchards which had an infestation of at least 50 per cent. last year, it is very difficult to find a single infested walnut. A few trees which have escaped treatment are showing up as badly as they did last year. On the walnut worm a second dusting will in all probability be required to completely control the pest, for the reason that the second brood of moths will appear late in August. It is difficult to say how numerous this brood will be inasmuch as the first brood will be very light on account of being cut down by dusting.

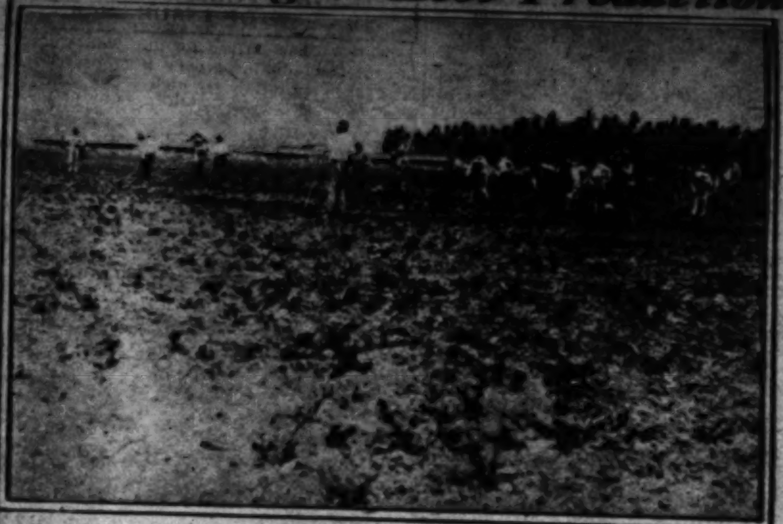
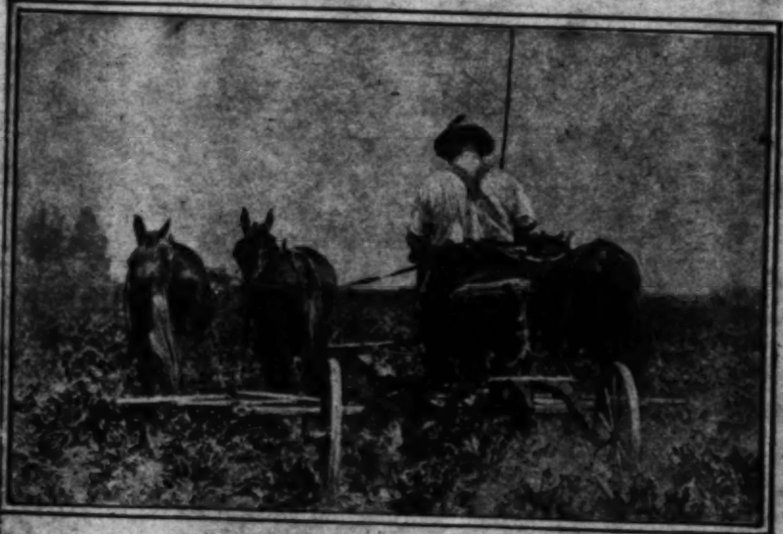
Sugar Beet Production in Southern California.

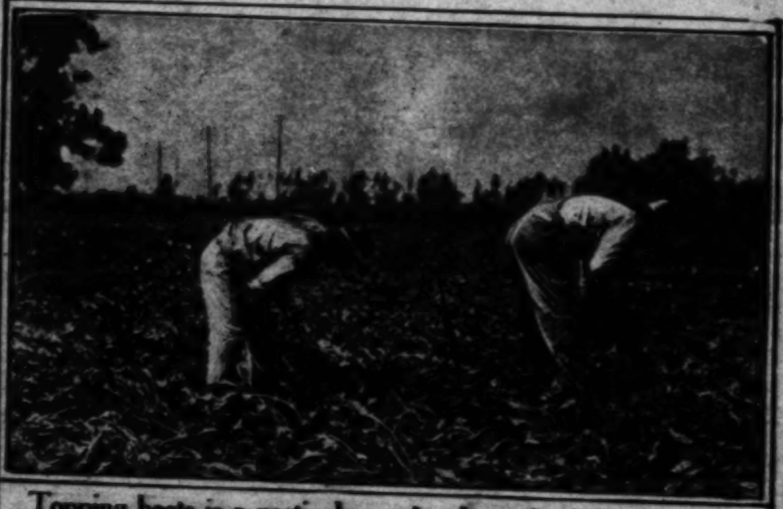


When the beets are four or five inches high they are thinned by hand labor. The Mexican and the hoe have been found the best combination for the job.

Although the sugar beet crop this year will be but 70 per cent. of normal, there are many fine stands throughout Southern California. Here is a field near Chino.



"Lifting" sugar beets. One man and four horses lift from two acres to two and a half acres a day.



Topping beets is a particular and rather a back-breaking job, but the Mexican field laborer understands it and works right along through the day. The beets must be topped at the base of the lowest leaf.

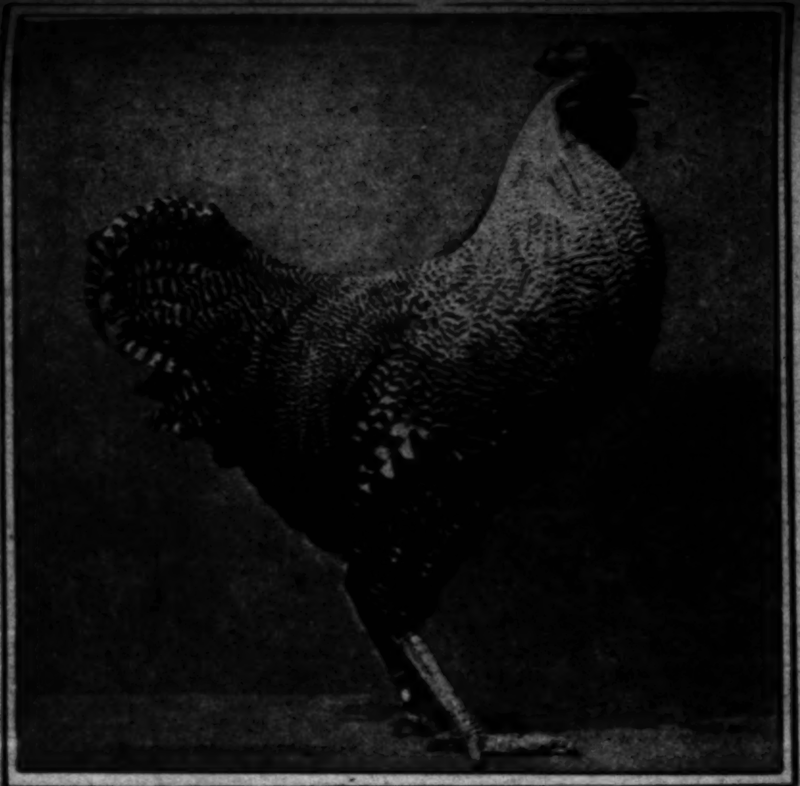
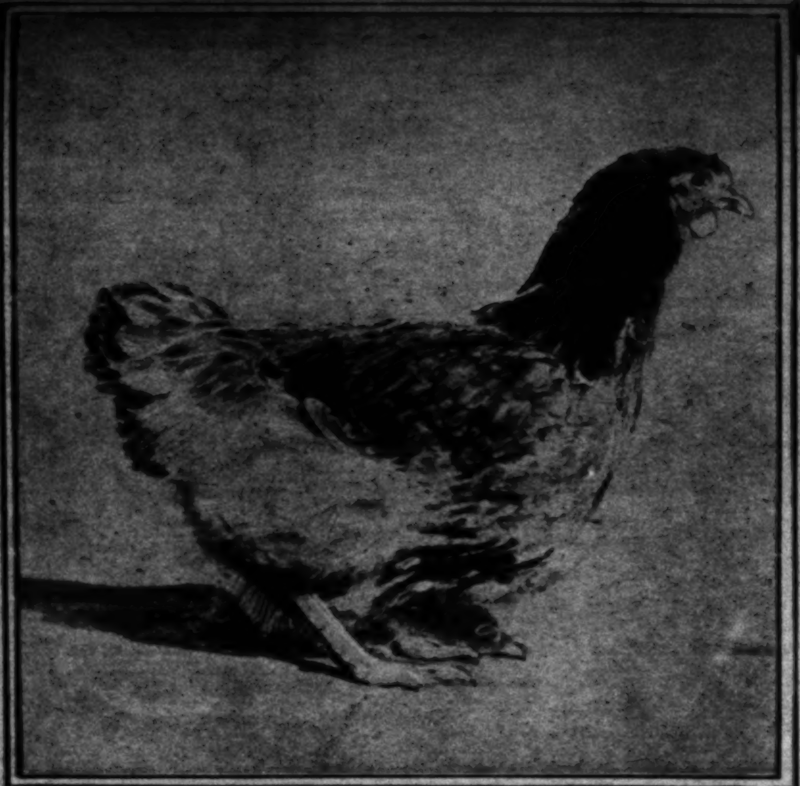
Improving Flocks by the "Gading-Up" Practice.





"GRADING UP"—a breeding practice which has been fundamental in improving dairy herds throughout the United States—is just as applicable for the betterment of poultry flocks, which respond as rapidly to the introduction of superior foreign blood, particularly by the use of standard-bred males, as do dairy cows. Many a farmer is deterred from the purchase of standard-bred fowls at the offset because, perhaps, his neighbor may tell him that it is time and money wasted to "monkey" with standard breeds when he can secure "just as good" fowls in his immediate neighborhood at half the price.

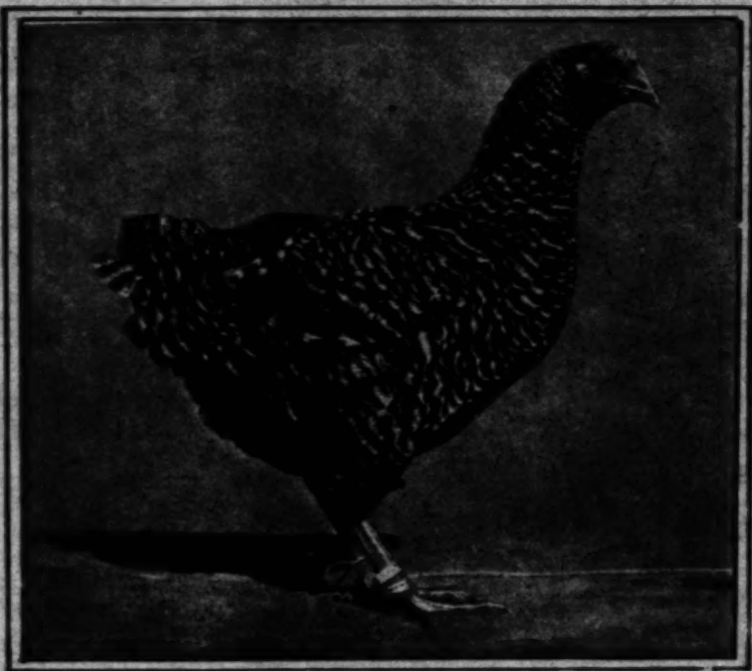
The "just as good" mongrel fowls never give the results which come from the use of well-bred stock. Sooner or later, to his sorrow, the poultry man ascertains this fact. Then he is desirous of working with standard breeds, but he hesitates because he doesn't like to sacrifice the fowls he has on hand in order to purchase quality birds.

If possible the beginner in poultry keeping should start with well-bred foundation stock, but in case he begins work with grades there still is an opportunity for him to improve his stock. By the use of carefully selected, standard-bred males, the flock owner may grade up his flock so that in three or four generations he will have pullets and hens of superior egg and meat producing qualities. Special emphasis, however, should be laid on the fact that it is preferable to purchase the standard-bred breeding stock to start with and not to attempt grading up under other conditions.

GRADING UP TESTED.

Specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture have obtained some interesting results in poultry breeding work at the government experimental farm, Beltsville, Md., where they have mated mongrel hens of unknown lineage with standard-bred males. Up to the present the particular purposes of these investigations have been to increase the size and weight as well as to improve the uniformity of type of the progeny. The study will doubtless be continued to cover egg production and the transmission and improvement of other hen characteristics during the near future.

Standard-bred White Plymouth Rock males were crossed with mongrel hens which weighed only 4.33 pounds apiece. The first generation progeny of this union at the same age had an average weight of 5.68 pounds apiece, while the grade fowls, composing the second generation, weighed an average of 5.98 pounds apiece at the same age, and those of the third generation, 6.49 pounds apiece. The gain due to increased size and meat-making qualities which resulted the first year from the crossing work amounted to 1.35 pounds per bird. Naturally the greatest increase came during the first step in the up-grading work when the standard-bred male was mated with a mongrel hen. The increase resulting from the mating of another standard-bred male of the same breed with the pullet of the above cross, was not so great, amounting to only three-tenths of a pound, while the gain of the third year's investigations totaled fifty-one hundredths of a pound. The total gain as shown by these three generations of intensive upgrading work amounted to 2.16 pounds a bird.



Superior blood means better fowls.

This promising pullet is the offspring of the mongrel hen and the pure-bred rooster shown above.

Similar experiments were carried out by the use of Barred Plymouth Rock males of standard breeding with mongrel hens. Results were almost as noteworthy. The weight of the original mongrels was 4.4 pounds apiece, while the grade progeny of the first generation weighed 5.83 pounds at the same age; those of the second generation, 6.22 pounds; and the birds of the third generation, 6.49 pounds. The gain in weight the first year from this improved breeding work amounted to 1.23 pounds, while that of the second year was fifty-nine hundredths of a pound and that of the third year twenty-seven hundredths of a pound, making a total gain during the three generations of 2.09 pounds.

From the standpoint of meat production this upgrading work should be extremely profitable to the average farmer, as the investigations show conclusively that the introduction of superior blood into the flock by the utilization of a standard bred male increases the meat-producing and size-increasing ability of the progeny. If the progeny of a grade hen, mated with a standard-bred male, will weigh one and one-half to two pounds more at market time than will the same aged offspring of a mongrel hen and a common male, it should be easy to convince every farmer that it will be more profitable for him to keep better blood in his flock.

YARD SCRATCHINGS.

Keep the poultry house and yard clean.

Feed table and kitchen waste to the hens.

Gather eggs daily; market at least twice a week.

Keep standard-bred poultry. It is more profitable.

Provide a nest for each four or five hens in the flock.

Provide roosts and dropping boards for the poultry house.

Grow green crops in the poultry yards if they are not in permanent sod.

Hens that are laying freely are seldom over-fat; it is the lazy ones that put on flesh.

Be sure that growing chicks have plenty of feed so that they will make continuous rapid growth.

Hatch early. Early hatched chicks live better, grow better, and the pullets make fall and winter layers.

Preserve eggs in the spring and summer for use during the fall and winter when eggs are scarce and high in price.

Market hens which you do not wish to carry longer as soon as they stop laying and begin to molt in the late summer or fall.

Don't let roosters run with the hens after the breeding season is over. The hens will lay just as well and the eggs will be infertile and will keep better.

Let the hens help themselves to a dry mash.

Give a heavier feed of grain in the evening.

Give the hens a light feed of grain in the morning.

Keep poultry free from lice and the house free from mites.

Feed grain in straw or other litter to make the hens scratch for it.

Build substantial, comfortable poultry houses, but make them as inexpensive as possible.

If you have had little or no experience in poultry keeping, start in a small way. Then increase as your experience and success warrant.

Cull the flock so as to eliminate the early molters and other unprofitable producers.

Feed growing chicks a dry mash to which they can help themselves.

CANTALOUPE SHIPMENT.

"This season there were 14,055 acres of cantaloupes, and up to July 18, 7800 carloads had been shipped. Last year there were 10,942 acres and 4405 cars were shipped. The largest number of cars shipped previous to this year was in 1917 when 5080 were shipped," says an Imperial grower.

"With the acreage and shipments as stated for this year, making an average of about 175 crates to the acre, there seems to be little cause for alarm.

"Estimate for next year's crop runs as high as 25,000 acres. If the acreage is anything like the estimate, it might be a benefit to have root knot or some other pest to reduce the shipments."

NEW WHEAT TESTED.

A report from Wenatchee, Wash., says that as the results of experiments at the Washington State College experimental dry land wheat farm near Waterville, a new variety of wheat may be introduced into the semi-arid sections of Central Washington.

This is known as the hard federation, a milling wheat of the highest type, developed and grown on the dry lands of the interior of Australia. During this, the dryest season for many years, this variety has made the best growth and shown the greatest hardihood of any of the twenty-seven kinds of wheat tried out.

The Waterville experiment farm consists of 215 acres, conducted by C. E. Hill for the Washington State College.

POTATO DISINFECTANT.

The results of three years' treatment of potatoes with copper sulphate solutions as a disinfectant are given by Bisby and Tolaas in "Phytopathology," No. 5, 1918. Seed potatoes infected with black scurf were used to compare the efficiency of copper sulphate, corrosive sublimate, formaldehyde and lime-sulphur. From experiments conducted at the University Farm, Minnesota, the best average yield has obtained from seed treated with copper sulphate.

Cull out weak or slow growing chicks.

Be sure chicks do not become crowded.

WHERE THEORY IS PUT INTO PRACTICE.

BY [illegible]

It is a well-known law of breeding that "like produces like," and on this theory the Charnock ranch at Hemet is conducting its breeding of Duroc hogs. This establishment with its thousand hogs presents an interesting study in constructive breeding.

There are about 1000 pure bred Durocs on the place. The selection of breeding stock is started when the pigs are only a few days old. At that time the most unpromising boar pigs are altered. During the next five months the young herds are gone over carefully, and every animal that does not show promise of being an outstanding individual is put in the fattening pen. Ten to twelve cars of hogs are shipped to market each year, and because of the uniform size and quality, the ranch receives $1 to $2 per hundred more than the market price paid for mixed carloads.

Realizing that the demand among breeders is for large size, combined with quality, only big animals are selected as breeding animals, either for the ranch herd or for sale. The main herd sire is Cherry Friend, a massive fellow, who weighed 1662 pounds when shown at the National Swine Show in Omaha, where he was second in his class.

A study of his pedigree shows that he comes rightly by his great size, for Ira Jackson bred Durocs are famous for their great size:

- Cherry Friend, 1662 pounds, bred by Ira Jackson, Tippecanoe City, O.
  - Orion's Cherry King, 1100 pounds, bred by Ira Jackson.
    - Cherry King, bred by G. E. Morton.
    - Orion Lady A, bred by Ira Jackson.
  - Friend Nellie II, bred by Ira Jackson.
    - Jack's Friend II, bred by Ira Jackson.
    - Cherry King Lady, bred by Ira Jackson.

Cherry Friend's measurements are as follows: 69 inches from ears to tail, 70 inches around heart girth, 69 inches around loin, 9½ inch bone below the hock, 13½ inch bone above the hock. He stands 40 inches high.

This boar not only inherits great size from his ancestors, but transmits it to his offspring. One of his daughters, Allie G., II, farrowed March 27, 1918, was driven on to the scales recently and tipped them at 440 pounds. She is now fourteen months old, and is not fat, nor has she been bred, so none of her weight can be credited to carrying a litter of pigs. She measures 59 inches from ears to tail, 58 inches around the heart girth, 58 inches around the loin and has 8 inch bone below the hock. Some gilt!

The Charnock ranch consists of some 400 acres, with 200 acres additional being leased. It is owned by the Mrs. Rose G. Freeman and her two daughters, Miss Helen Freeman and Mrs. T. S. Bell of Pasadena. The active management of the ranch is under the care of Charles H. Tyler, who has a force of fourteen men. T. S. Bell, an attorney, son-in-law of Mrs. Freeman attends to the business management of the ranch, making yearly trips to the Middle West to buy new blood for the Duroc herd.

PURE BRED SWINE SALE.

TULARE.—H. C. Shinn, secretary of the Poland China Swine Breeders' Association, has been chosen the chairman of the general committee in charge of the arrangements for the pure-bred stock sale which is to be held here October 21, under the auspices of the association. J. K. Macomber and A. J. Elliott, large factors in the swine industry of this section, will serve with Secretary Shinn. Animals of all classes, sows, gilts, boars and sows with litters are to be offered, but the sale will be restricted to animals of a sufficiently high grade to pass the inspection committee.

CATTLE POISONED.

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—"Prussic acid poisoning" was the verdict of State Veterinarian Hight concerning the cause of the death of eleven beef steers whose bodies were found by a Salt River Valley farmer in a field where the pasturage mainly had been Johnson grass. Dr. Hight states that second growth sorghums, such as Johnson grass, under conditions of drought and heat, frequently develop prussic acid in dangerous percentages. The cattle affected were part of a herd of forty animals.

WELDON IN ONTARIO.

George P. Weldon, for over six years Chief Deputy Horticultural Commissioner, left the State Department of Agriculture on August 1, to assume his new position with the Chaffey Union High School and Junior College at Ontario, San Bernardino county.

BY [illegible]

There is always more or less worry concerning the lupines which grow abundantly all over the West, and at all elevations, and there is always an open question as to whether they are poisonous to cattle, horses and sheep. The best of authorities say they are poisonous if eaten at certain times and under certain conditions, and a careful study of the subject has proven without doubt that the poisonous matter is contained in the ripe seeds.

If the lupine can be cut for hay either before the seed pods have fairly formed and ripened or after they have ripened and the pods have opened and dropped the dangerous seed, there will be no danger in feeding it. When the plant is young, it is eaten without bad effect and is relished by all kinds of stock.

There are several different species of lupine and all should be considered under suspicion when the seed is getting ripe. Owing to its extensive growth there is little hope of eradicating it, as it is very tenacious, and will hold its own with any plants under ordinary range conditions. It is often mistaken for a variety of loco, but the leaves offer an easy means of identification as the leaf of the lupine is compound, or a group of leaves, usually from six to eight attached to the end of the stem, while the loco is long and feathery with parts attached to the stem along each side of it.

The animal poisoned by lupines seems to be in great frenzy or excitement. Animals especially sheep will run about butting into anything they touch, as well as one another. This is followed by spasms and falling fits, similar to those in strychnine poisoning. Death comes very soon in most cases, often within an hour.

One of the principal symptoms is the increased amount and bloody appearance of the discharge from the kidneys. The only known remedy that can be called at all useful is the permanganate of potash drench. This is made by preparing equal parts of permanganate of potash and sulphate of aluminum and dissolving in water; pulverizing before placing in water will get best results. See that all is taken up in the water as the raw salts are very injurious to the lining of the mouth and throat.

For lambs use about six grains of the mixture, for sheep from ten to twenty grains, for horses thirty to forty grains, and for cattle from sixty to 100 grains. If there are a large number of animals to be drenched the mixture can be made according to this scale in large quantities, and given on the basis of a pint of water to each dose.

Stockmen have often been puzzled over the way in which animals in the same herd and subjected to the same conditions are affected by poisonous plants. With sheep this is quite noticeable. Out of a herd of sheep many will die at once, others linger along and recover, and some do not appear to be troubled at all. This in ruminants generally is due to the condition of the animal's stomach; if the stomach is full the progress of the poisonous matter is slow, and it may be all neutralized. If the stomach is empty, on the other hand, the poison enters the circulation at once, the animal is soon affected and remedial measures are seldom in time.—[F. H. Scribner.

GRASSHOPPERS WANTED.

County horticultural commissioners, inspectors and farmers are requested to send to the State Department of Agriculture specimens of grasshoppers that may be taken damaging crops in their localities.

As many different species as may be found are desired that a comprehensive record of grasshopper damage in California by counties and species may be established.

Send both adults and nymphs if possible. Furnish the following information with each lot of specimens: (1.) Date. (2.) Locality. (3.) Crop damaged. (4.) Name of collector. Collections may be continued until first frosts. Address all sendings to the State Insectary, Sacramento, Cal.

SECOND BEAN CROP.

The Kentucky Wonder and several other varieties of snap beans will, under ordinary conditions bear a second crop of beans six or seven weeks after the first crop if the vines are kept watered and cultivated. Be sure and pick off all beans when mature, whether large or small. Sometimes powdery mildew or rust attacks the vines before the second crop is off, but a surprisingly large number of beans can be picked the second time.

AUSTRALIA BARS CANKER.

The Governor-General of Australia has issued a proclamation barring from that country all citrus fruits from any State or section in which the citrus canker exists. Exception is made in the case of importations of citrus fruits and fruit stocks from California and Arizona, providing a certificate is obtained from the State authorities showing no canker exists in the State.

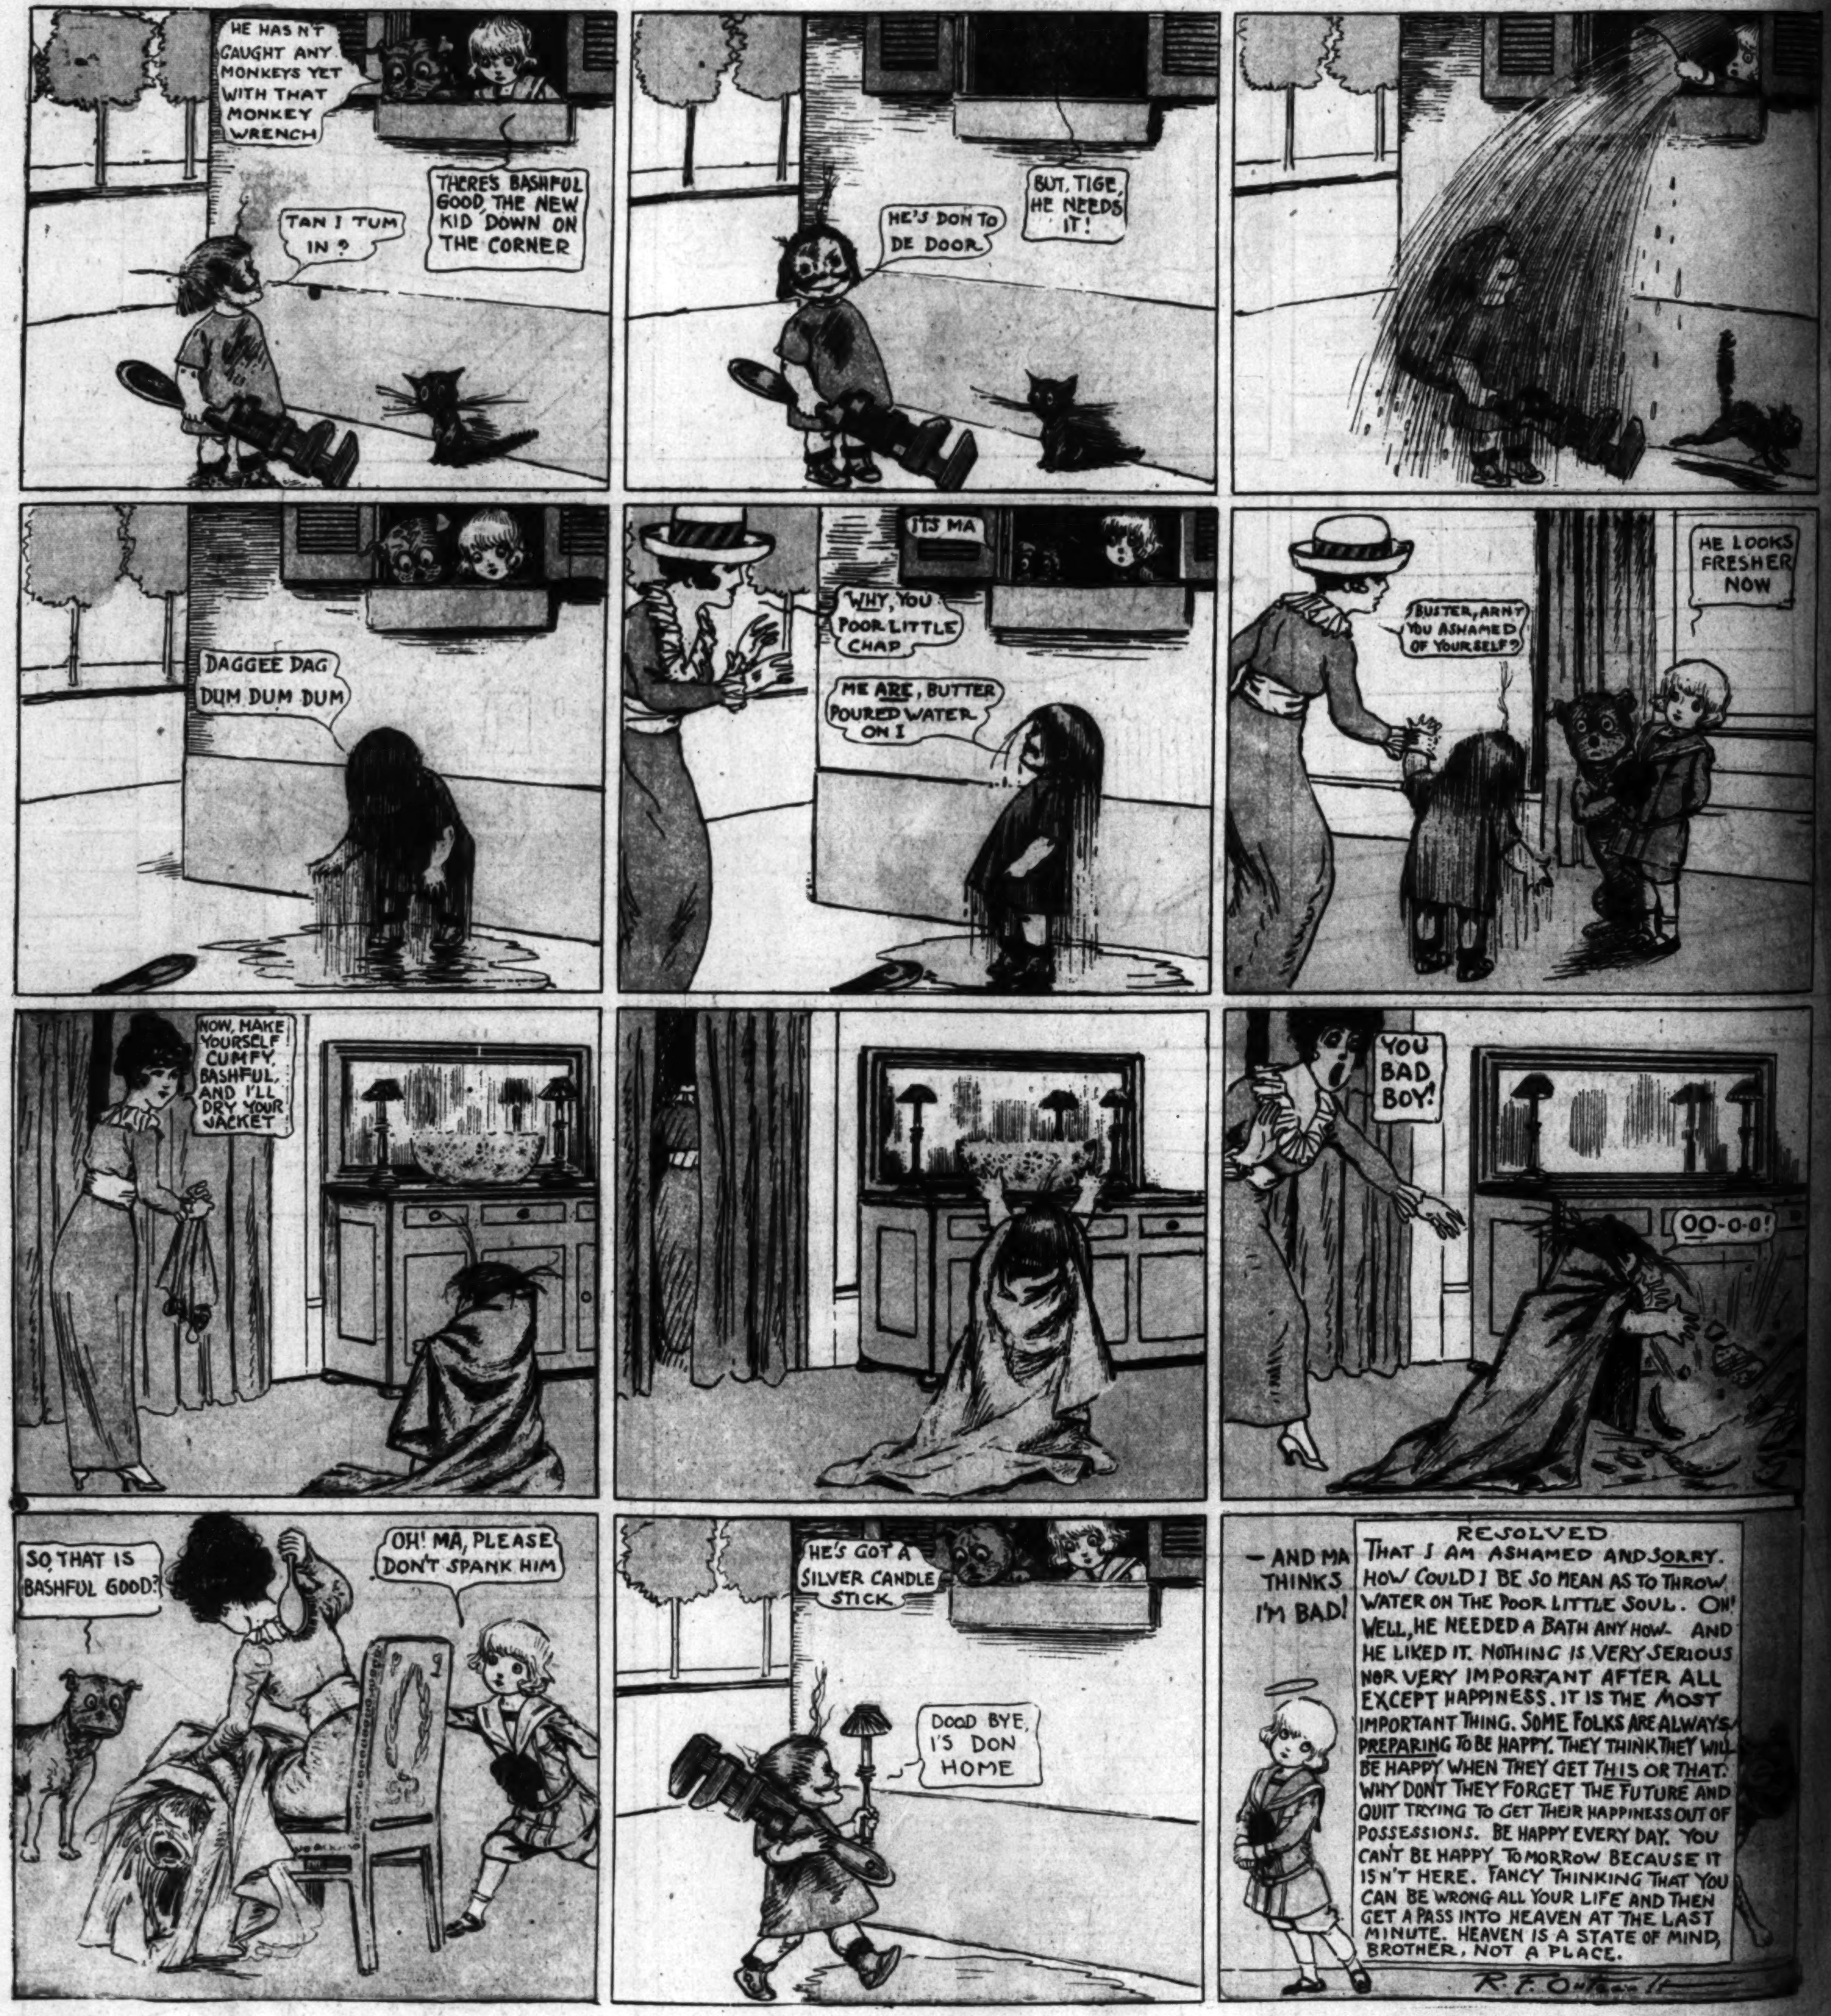
I'S NAME IS BASHFUL DOOD

Copyright, 1919, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc., Great Britain rights reserved

Dear Eddie.

Smithys ma says there is nothing in a name. This new kid, Bashful Good, is proof she is right. He is neither bashful nor good. Smithys ma had an uncle once, his name was Lott A. Dough and she says he never had a dollar (of his own). The jolliest man on our street is John Grouch, so what's the use of worrying! let's take things as they are and be happy.

Bashful Good Is Not All That His Name Implies.



HE HAS N'T CAUGHT ANY MONKEYS YET WITH THAT MONKEY WRENCH
THERE'S BASHFUL GOOD, THE NEW KID DOWN ON THE CORNER
TAN I TUM IN?
HE'S DON TO DE DOOR
BUT, TIGE, HE NEEDS IT!
DAGGEE DAG DUM DUM DUM ITS MA
WHY, YOU POOR LITTLE CHAP
ME ARE, BUTTER POURED WATER ON I
BUSTER, ARN'T YOU ASHAMED OF YOURSELF?
HE LOOKS FRESHER NOW
NOW, MAKE YOURSELF CUMFY, BASHFUL, AND I'LL DRY YOUR JACKET
YOU BAD BOY!
OO-O-O!
SO THAT IS BASHFUL GOOD?
OH! MA, PLEASE DON'T SPANK HIM
HE'S GOT A SILVER CANDLE STICK
DOOD BYE, I'S DON HOME — AND MA THINKS I'M BAD!

RESOLVED

THAT I AM ASHAMED AND SORRY. HOW COULD I BE SO MEAN AS TO THROW WATER ON THE POOR LITTLE SOUL. OH! WELL, HE NEEDED A BATH ANY HOW. AND HE LIKED IT. NOTHING IS VERY SERIOUS NOR VERY IMPORTANT AFTER ALL EXCEPT HAPPINESS. IT IS THE MOST IMPORTANT THING. SOME FOLKS ARE ALWAYS PREPARING TO BE HAPPY. THEY THINK THEY WILL BE HAPPY WHEN THEY GET THIS OR THAT. WHY DON'T THEY FORGET THE FUTURE AND QUIT TRYING TO GET THEIR HAPPINESS OUT OF POSSESSIONS. BE HAPPY EVERY DAY. YOU CAN'T BE HAPPY TOMORROW BECAUSE IT ISN'T HERE. FANCY THINKING THAT YOU CAN BE WRONG ALL YOUR LIFE AND THEN GET A PASS INTO HEAVEN AT THE LAST MINUTE. HEAVEN IS A STATE OF MIND, BROTHER, NOT A PLACE.
